RETIREMENT OF SIR C. V. KUMARASWAMI SASTRIAR, Kt.

The retirement of Sir C. V. Kumaraswami Sastriar from the High Court will leave a void which it will take some time for the bar and the public alike to reconcile themselves to. It has not often been possible for the Indian Judges of our High Courts to hold office very long. But Sir Kumaraswami Sastriar has been more fortunate in this as in many other respects. His length of tenure comes very near to Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyar's, but the similarity between the two learned Judges almost ends here, their respective lives showing more points of contrast than of resemblance.

Nature has, indeed, been very generous to Mr. Sastriar in many ways and not the least of her bounties are an attractive personality and a charming suavity. Born of a family which for at least two generations before, had occupied a prominent position and had been held in high esteem in the City of Madras, Mr. Sastriar had the advantages of circumstances no less than the advantages of nature.

After a brilliant educational career, he joined the bar in 1894 and in about a decade, he attained a leading position on the Original Side even when men like Mr. Eardley Norton were practising here. In spite of such position at the bar, Mr. Sastriar accepted office in 1905 as a puisne Judge of the Madras Court of Small Causes. Some time later, he became Judge of the City Civil Court and between 1912 and 1914 he served as a District Judge in the mofussil and enjoyed a unique popularity there. During the greater part of the time he had been a Judge of the High Court, he had been sitting on the Original Side and it is generally believed that that kind of work was more to his taste, while it is undoubtedly true that his experience at the bar there and his wide knowledge of business and businessmen in the City served him in very good stead in the trial of original causes. On the Appellate Side, he was particularly welcome as a member of a bench dealing with first appeals, where his experience and knowledge of human nature were of special value and he could easily get at the crux and generally the truth of the case. Technicalities, even when apparently serious, rarely tied his hands when he thought that in the interests of substantial justice they should be brushed aside. He never claimed a passion for law nor exhibited an anxiety like some of his predecessors to make his contribution to the development of law. But his reported judgments suffice to show what he could do in that direction when occasion required. His tendency was distinctly in favour of a liberal and equitable interpretation of the law and its application in such a manner as would advance substantial justice. In co-operation with Sir T. Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar, he tried so to mould the course of decisions under the Hindu Law as to bring it into conformity with modern ideas and circumstances, especially in respect of the rights of women, the status of illegitimate children and the disabilities of joint family status.

It cannot be denied that his part in the Rowlatt Committee caused a set-back in his popularity, but that was soon forgotten and in recent years the regret was widely shared that the Statute law made it impossible for him to become the Chief Justice. His duties at the bar or on the bench did not monopolise his time and attention. He took a keen interest in literature and perhaps a keener interest in advancing the amenities of social life among Indians, through the Cosmopolitan Club. He imbibed from his grandfather a love of Sanskrit culture and a respectful solicitude for the dying race of pandits. The Bar cannot bid him farewell without a touch of regret and we trust that he may be spared long to enjoy his well-earned rest.

OUR JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

THE PRESENT POSITION EXAMINED, AND IMPROVEMENTS SUGGESTED.

No one can seriously gainsay that the present judicial system admits of improvement in various directions. Just like other institutions the character of the system has been largely dependent on historical causes. Attempts at a conscious building up of the system have been confined to piecemeal substitution or improvement of a part here and another there. It cannot well have been otherwise having regard to the main traditions of English or British Indian Legislation. To this day the English judicial system maintains vestiges of its origin and each reform has proceeded on lines calculated to keep up a continuity with the old state of things. The British Indian Empire was slowly built up and the old institutions functioning under the Mohamedan administration were continued under the new regime. The substantive law applied and the procedure followed by the early British Indian Courts were similarly indigenous. From that period up to the present, there have been no doubt far-reaching changes in law, procedure and the constitution of Courts; but these have been accomplished by slow stages each of which left the structure then existing substantially intact.

The Nizamut and the Dewanny represented the criminal and civil sides of the Mohamedan judicial administration and the early British Indian Courts continued their nomenclature and the distribution of jurisdiction as among them. The District was evolved as a local entity comparatively early in British Indian history and has up to now maintained its integrity as the basic unit of executive and judicial administration. The Zilla Judge corresponded to the present District Judge and the judicial authorities subordinate to him fell under the description of Munsif or Sudder Ameen. The latter functionary has led up to and been superseded by the present Subordinate Judge. At the head of the judicial system was the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, the principal provincial Court of Appeal. Pari passu with the provincial system, another founded on English traditions was functioning in the Presidency Towns. The Supreme Court with Judges recruited from England and barristers practising before them was the centre of that system. The High Court superseded the Provincial Dewanny Adawlut and the metropolitan Supreme Court, but the distinction which persists to this day between the Appellate Side and the Original Side is a sharp reminder of prior history. Even the word Vakil is a survival from a bygone age and a link between old times and new, which threatens to be swept away by the operation of the Bar Councils Act, although it may take a decade or more for the class entirely to disappear.

At the outset certain fundamental facts arising out of the character of the country and its people may be set down. The province is the area to be covered by each single judicial system and as there are large variations between province and province each system has to be so devised as to suit the requirements of the particular province for which it is intended. The High Court is and must continue to be the provincial centre of the judicial organisation. It is unnecessary to refer to the controversy about the constitution of a Supreme Court of Appeal. Such a Supreme Court can by the very nature of things only do what the Privy Council is now doing and for purposes of the constitution of the Courts within the province and the distribution of jurisdiction as among them, as well as for purposes of control and administration the High Court should be the source of radiation of all judicial authority. The High Court has to serve an area of many thousands of square miles and several tens of millions of population. The country is for the most part poor and the problem of transport over hundreds of miles is a costly one for the village ryot. Suits of small value make up a dominating percentage of litigation. Owing to the conditions of agriculture and land tenure as well as the operation of the law of inheritance and partition disputes with regard to small bits of land abound. It is true that with the development of the country, commerce and industry are contributing an increasing share to the work of the Courts; but as yet the proportion of these disputes is inconsiderable. The complexity of the questions raised in suits of small value is in many instances in inverse ratio to the interests involved. Numbers of witnesses are being examined in big and small suits alike and it will take long before parties recognise the utility of agreeing on facts or narrowing down their disagreement to an interpretation or the ascertainment of the effect of documents. These and similar causes render it essential that local areas should function as distinct and separate units for the purpose of judicial business. The district which has been the main local unit up to now has always to be so and it is with reference to the district as a local area that the details of the judicial system have to be devised and carried out.

So far, the main principles regulating the present system would appear to coincide with those of any ideal system and the point of departure should be sought, if at all, within the district. Within the district, however, the systems in vogue in various provinces are widely different and cannot well be otherwise. It will suffice for the limited purposes of this present article to investigate the question with reference to Madras. In that Presidency we have three categories of Courts within the district—the lowest, that of the District Munsif, the next higher, the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and the District Court at the top. The Subordinate Court is not a necessary feature of the system and there are districts in which it is not found. The theory would seem to be that there are two grades of original jurisdiction, the lower limited in point of pecuniary jurisdiction and the higher the District Court which is unlimited in point of jurisdiction. The Subordinate Court would appear to have been originally conceived as a relieving agency to take over the legitimate work of the District Court in areas where the latter cannot bear the burden. The name itself would imply that the Subordinate Court was not meant to have any independent existence and that it was meant only to be an assistant to the superior Court. If this was the theory which underlay the constitution of these Courts, the present times have very far outgrown that conception. By far the vast bulk of the higher grade original suits are heard and determined by the Subordinate Courts and in many places the original jurisdiction of District Courts is no more than a bare name. The history of legislation bearing on the constitution of Courts would show that the District Judge has alone been held competent to decide matters of original jurisdiction other than suits. Special jurisdictions like these relating to Land Acquisition, Probate and Administration, Guardianship of Minors, Protection of Lunatics and even Succession Certificates have been the province of the District Court. The recent tendency has been for a devolution of some of these matters to Subordinate Courts, e.g., Land Acquisition, Guardianship, Succession Certificates, but the idea that all the residuary original jurisdiction should be deemed to reside in the District Court is still an article of faith. When new statutes are enacted creating new remedies, the tendency is to vest the jurisdiction in the District Court. (Cf. The Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act.)

The District Munsif's Court is the one in which the bulk of the litigants of the country are interested. These Courts are widely spread over the country and bring justice as near the litigants' door as can be reasonably expected. They are bound to be a permanent feature of the system and the distinction between them and the higher Courts in point of pecuniary jurisdiction has to be maintained. It may be a debatable point whether the time has not come for raising the jurisdiction of the District Munsif from Rs. 3,000 to a higher figure, say, Rs. 5,000, but that there should be two grades of Courts cannot be gainsaid. The suits of small values make up the preponderating majority and cannot be embarrassed or held up for the convenience of the big suitor interested in the cause that takes weeks or months for hearing. It is neither necessary nor possible to secure for the determination of small matters the ripe experience essential for a correct determination of heavy and intricate disputes. Thus, save by way of increasing the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif and thereby affording relief to higher Courts, the nature and quality of his jurisdiction has to be maintained.

But so far as regards the distinction between the District Court and the Subordinate Court as Courts of Original Jurisdiction the time has come to abolish the same. The maintenance of the distinction has neither logic nor practical convenience to recommend it. The quality of the work of Subordinate Judges is abundantly testified to in the pages of recent Privy Council judgments many of which have reversed the High Courts and restored the decisions of the Trial Courts. It cannot surely be contended that there is anything in special jurisdiction like Land Acquisition, Probate, Divorce, Lunacy, and Guardianship which is more difficult than complicated and intricate suits involving title. In fact, the recent experience has shown that these jurisdictions can safely be conferred on Subordinate Courts. If the policy of devolution of these special powers from the District to the Subordinate Courts be pursued there must surely come a time when two sets of Courts will function with jurisdiction of the same nature, quality and limits—one set being superior and the other subordinate. Can there be anything in the nature of things to recommend this? Obviously not. It is clear we are moving towards a unification of the Sub-Court with the District Court and in so far as their original jurisdiction is concerned sooner or later the ideal must be realised.

So far as appeals are concerned the present position requires drastic readjustment. The question of appellate jurisdiction is intimately bound up with the mode of recruitment and promotion of the judiciary. The present system is to recruit District Munsifs from the bar or from clerical staff and to promote them in due course as Subordinate Judges. The system is sound in principle and has been found to work well in practice and one should think twice before suggesting a change. So far as the District Courts are concerned the cadre is made up of (1) Indian Civil Servants promoted from the ranks of Joint Magistrates, (2) Senior Subordinate Judges promoted to the post, and (3) direct recruits from the Bar. There is some difference of opinion as to the best mode of recruitment to the District Judgeships—but it is not the purpose of this article to attempt a solution for such questions. The facts are referred to merely as leading up to a discussion of the main question as to the constitution of Appellate Courts. That the High Court is the main appellate tribunal for the province is taken for granted. It is equally obvious that the High Court should be guarded from being flooded with trivial matters. It being premised that the district should continue as the local unit of judicial business, a strong appellate authority has to be constituted within the district. So far as the present position is concerned it is exceedingly unsatisfactory. Mr. A is a Senior District Munsif and records a judgment on the eve of his promotion as a Sub-Judge. The appeal is filed and after a pendency of 2 or 3 years is heard by Mr. B who, though a junior to Mr. A, happens to have been just appointed as Sub-Judge. Whether the appeal succeeds or fails, there is no satisfaction to the defeated party and after all it is difficult to say that the Appellate Court is entitled to greater confidence than the Court of first instance. It is the same thing with probably some additional picquancy when a newly appointed District Judge is asked to reverse the judgment of a Senior Subordinate Judge. Or take another aspect. In respect of suits of less than Rs. 5,000 in value there is a first appeal to the District Court and a second appeal to the High Court. In respect of suits of over Rs. 10,000 there is a first appeal to the High Court and a second appeal to the Privy Council, but in the intermediate class of suits (the suits between Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 10,000) in value there is only a first appeal allowed to the High Court and no second appeal. Is there any reason to give an exceptional treatment to the last category of suits? The circumstance that the first appeal lies to a Bench of the High Court, whereas in the first set of cases the first appeal lies only to a single Judge in the district is not a sufficient or a satisfying explanation for the differential treatment. The idea about the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of Appellate Courts is not uniformly maintained. Take the case of a suit for accounts. It is common to put a notional valuation on such suits and plaintiff's valuation is final for purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fees. If, however, as a result of taking accounts a much larger sum which is well over the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Court is found due to either party, the appellate forum does not change for that reason to a superior tribunal. Again under the present system very serious questions come up for consideration in the exercise of Insolvency Jurisdiction. The scheme of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to vest the main appellate jurisdiction in the District Court and to allow second appeals to the High Court only in a few cases. Heavy insolvencies fall to be administered by the moffusil Courts and the Sub-Courts bear the brunt of the burden. In all such cases, whatever be the value of the particular question determined, the appeal has to be preferred only to the District Court. There are cases where the validity of alienations to the tune of lakhs of rupees comes up for determination by the Sub-Court as the Court of first instance and by the District Court as a Court of first and final appeal. Take again matters relating to Succession Certificates as to which the jurisdiction has devolved largely to the Sub-Courts and even to District Munsifs' Courts. Here again the Court of first and final appeal is the District Court which may transfer the appeal to the Sub-Court where the order appealed against was made by a District Munsif. Then with reference to the mode of ascertainment of pecuniary jurisdiction itself the present state of things leaves very much to be desired.

Take the case of suits for possession of land. Where the land happens to be of ryotwari tenure, the rule is to adopt ten times the Government assessment as the value. It is not the purpose of the present article to suggest that there should be any revision of this rule for Court-fees purposes. Already the clientele are groaning under the weight of the heavy rates adopted in 1922 and the prospect of reduction is receding farther and farther away in spite of any amount of discussion in the Legislative Council. But the adoption of the same mode of valuation for purposes of the determination of the forum leads to anomalies. A District Munsif can try a suit for possession of an estate whose annual revenue is Rs. 300, and the market value of the estate may very nearly and modestly be put at Rs. 25,000. Rs. 25,000 is a great fortune to most middle class families. It is hard to understand the rationale of a system under which a Court which can easily make or mar families cannot try a suit on a promissory note for more than Rs. 3,000. The likelihood of an erroneous decision is much greater in the former case than in the latter. The same observations apply with greater force to the state of things which would enable a Subordinate Judge to dispose finally of questions of fact on first appeal in heavy and intricate land disputes decided by a District Munsif, but would prevent a District Judge from hearing an appeal involving a money claim of more than Rs. 5,000. It is true that even in the ideal system of gradation of Courts and delimitation of pecuniary jurisdiction a perfect approximation of all kinds of disputes to the standard value of the jurisdiction cannot be ensured; but to concede that is a very different thing from being satisfied with a state of affairs which admits of this enormous variation between theory and practice.

The High Court Original Side is a survival from ancient history and its existence at the present day takes away the homogeneity of the judicial system as a whole. It cannot be seriously maintained that the Original Side litigation presents any peculiar complexity which cannot be effectively dealt with by the type of the moffusil judiciary. The theory that the Presidency town has a vested right to have the highest tribunal functioning as a Court of first instance had its integrity broken into when the City Civil Court was established. Once the City Civil Courts are a settled fact, it is only a question of drawing the line between the jurisdiction of the City Civil Court and the Original Side of the High Court. The present line of distinction which fixes the limit of the City Civil Court's jurisdiction at

Rs. 2,500 is certainly arbitrary. The City Civil Judge has the same status as District Judges and that Court can certainly be trusted to decide disputes of a greater value. Indeed there is no good reason to fix any limits to its jurisdiction. At least two Judges of the High Court are constantly sitting on the Original Side and the strength of the City Court can be trebled or quadrupled by the saving effected by the withdrawal of original work from the High Court. Indeed there is absolutely no good reason for any special treatment being meted to the Presidency town. The suggestion that District Munsifs and Subordinate Judges may function in the Presidency Town as well as in the moffusil has really nothing violent about it and need not outrage anybody's susceptibilities. The transition can be effected by a gradual devolution of the High Court's original jurisdiction to the City Civil Court and adding to its strength so as to make it cope with the greater volume of work. On the devolution becoming complete it would be only an alteration of nomenclature to bring the system into accordance with the moffusil. In any event the period of the transition would be a period of trial and would disclose things seriously wrong if there should be any.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

ANZIANI, In re HERBERT v. CHRISTOPHERSON, (1930)
1 Ch. 407: 99 L.J. Ch. 215.

Conflict of laws—Assignment of movable—Lex situs or lex domicilii—Document partly testamentary and partly not—If can be treated as a conveyance inter vivos.

A deed executed in Italy, in exercise of the powers of appointment conferred on the executant by marriage settlements executed in England in accordance with English Law, purported to operate both as a conveyance inter vivos and as her last will and testament. Such a deed is valid and can take effect as a conveyance inter vivos though as a will it does not for some reasons. The document purported to assign a movable situate in England but the assignment was invalid and void in Italian Law but valid according to the English Law.

Held, the validity of the assignment must be determined by the law of the country in which it had been executed and in which the assignor was domiciled and not by the law of the country where the chose in action of the movable is situate.

Rule 153 of Dicey's Conflict of Laws is not accurate and Rule 152 would be more accurate if instead of the word 'assignment' the word 'transfer' had been used, as it really refers to the transfer of goods, effected generally by delivery, sometimes in market overt.

Republica de Guatemala v. Nunez, (1927) 1 K.B. 669 followed.

[N.B.: Rule 152.—An assignment of a movable which can be touched (goods) giving a good title thereto according to the law of the country where the movable is situate at the time of the assignment (lex situs), wherever such assignment is made, is valid.

Rule 153.—An assignment of a movable which cannot be touched, i.e., of a debt, giving a good title thereto according to the lex situs of the debt (in so far as by analogy a situs can be attributed to a debt) is valid. Provided that (1) the liabilities of the debtor are to be determined by the law governing the contract between him and the creditor; (2) the right to recover the debt is, as regards all matters of procedure, governed by the lex fori.]

In re MILLS: MILLS v. LAWRENCE, (1930) 1 Ch. 440.

Will—Power to appoint any qualified member of a class—Trust in favour of donee in default of appointment—Release of power by trustee—Validity of—Law of Property Act, 1925.

By his will, a testator directed the income of his estate to be accumulated in a certain manner for a period of 21 years from his death and declared that the trust fund and accumulations of income be held in trust for the benefit of all or any one or more exclusively of a specified class of persons who in the opinion of his brother evidenced an ability to maintain the family fortune, as the testator's brother should by any deed appoint, and in default of appointment to the brother absolutely. By a deed of appointment of 1928 the brother settled in favour of some children, but by a later deed revoked the appointment and released the trust fund from the power to the intent that the power should be absolutely extinguished.

Held, that it is a power coupled with a duty. It was clear that the testator intended or contemplated that the power should be retained and be exercisable at least down to the expiry of the primary trust for accumulation. The brother is not, therefore, free to divest himself of the power or to do anything which will preclude him from exercising it.

BOOSEY & CO. v. GOODSON GRAMOPHONE RECORD CO., (1930) 1 Ch. 448.

Copyright—Gramophone records—Adhesive labels purchased from the owner of the copyright—Labels incapable of adhering to the records—Maker intimating the same to the owner and selling to purchasers without them—If infringes copyright—Copyright Act, 1911 and Copyright Royalty System (Mechanical Musical Instruments) Regulations, 1912, Reg. 4.

The defendants made some gramophone records in celluloid and asked the plaintiffs, owners of the copyright, to supply them with adhesive labels to be affixed to the records. The royalties due to the owner were made payable under the Act by means of adhesive labels purchased from the owner, the cost of the labels being the cost of the copyright. The makers could not under the Act sell the records without the adhesive labels unless the labels are not available or the owner refuses or neglects to supply them within three days after demand duly made. As the labels supplied would not fix, the makers demanded labels as would adhere to the celluloid and as the owners did not supply them, they proceeded to sell records without it.

Held, by Eve, J., that the Regulation contemplates that the owner should supply the adhesive labels and if the maker has paid in the prescribed manner in respect of the records sold by him, it cannot be that the copyright owner can withhold from him the means of evidencing those payments as prescribed by the Act. The Court of Appeal, reversing Eve, J., held:—That the maker of a record can do so upon certain conditions (i) that he has to give a notice of his intention to make a contrivance, and (ii) that he has to pay in the prescribed manner the requisite royalties. "Adhesive labels" in the Regulation means what is known ordinarily as 'adhesive labels'. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature that an owner of copyright should be bound to supply paper labels guaranteed to adhere to the surface of any kind of material of which a manufacturer might choose to make his records. The duty is on the manufacturer to devise some means by which an ordinary adhesive label can be affixed.

In re WALKER: WALKER v. WALKER, (1930) 1 Ch. 469.

Will—Construction—‘Shall die in my lifetime’—If takes in persons dead before the date of the will.

By his will, dated 27th September, 1920, a testator directed that the residue after paying out certain legacies, etc., should be invested and the income therefrom paid to his wife during her life and after her to be held in trust for all his children in equal shares “provided nevertheless in case any child of mine shall die in my lifetime leaving issue living at my death such issue shall stand in place of such deceased child” One of his sons had died on the 5th September, 1920, leaving a child and the question was if that child can take under the will in place of the father.

Held, that in the absence of anything in the context to suggest that ‘shall’ in the proviso included children who ‘shall or shall have already’ died, the primary meaning of ‘shall’ indicating futurity must be given and the defendant, a child by a predeceased son cannot take.

BARNES v. CADOGAN DEVELOPMENTS, LIMITED, (1930) 1 Ch. 479.

Vendor and purchaser—Purchaser of property—Particulars of sale describing property—Innocent but immaterial misrepresentation—If contract can be repudiated by purchaser—Vendor’s claim for specific performance.

At an auction sale in 1929 the purchaser bought a property described as having four frontages. Condition 4 to the particulars of sale provided that “Each lot is believed and shall be taken as correctly described and any incorrect statement, error or omission found in the particulars, sale plan or these conditions shall not annul the sale or entitle any purchaser to be discharged from his purchase, nor shall the vendors or any purchaser claim or be allowed any compensation in respect thereof.” It was found that by a closing order of 1906 obtained by the Borough Council, one of the streets was ordered to be closed, but in reality that was not closed. The purchaser claimed damages as for breach of the contract inasmuch as the vendors cannot convey a property with frontage in four streets as agreed. The vendor counter-claimed for specific performance.

Held, that the position was that the property agreed to be sold is sold, only it has not got some of the attributes and advantages described and that will not entitle the purchaser to repudiate the contract and claim damages for breach. The purchaser's remedies then are: (1) to ask the Court to refuse specific performance if the misrepresentation is innocent. He cannot then recover damages; (2) to avoid the contract and claim damages if the representation is fraudulent. Specific performance also decreed as the description was held to be correct in spite of the closing order. 'Street' does not necessarily mean 'a public highway'.

PRICE v. HILDITCH, (1930) 1 Ch. 500.

Easement—Right to light—Building erected—Construction not rushed through—Mandatory injunction, if can be granted—Right to light, if limited by purposes for which the room is used.

Plaintiff, the owner of a freehold house built in 1907, had enjoyed adequate light to the windows of his house on the northern side. The defendant was the neighbour to the north and the two premises were separated by a wall 3 feet 9 inches high standing on the defendant's property. When the plaintiff was away, the defendant raised up the wall to 23 feet height and thereby caused diminution of light to the plaintiff's house. The work was not rushed through but was done gradually, though the plaintiff was not apprised of it.

Held, that the mandatory injunction could not be granted as the result of granting it would be to impose a large amount of trouble and expense on the defendant, whereas the damage that the plaintiff has suffered can be pecuniarily compensated by a small payment. But injunction would not have been refused if the Court felt that the defendant had rushed up the building in order to evade the interlocutory injunction of the Court. The room was long used as the scullery and it was in evidence that there was sufficient light for such use even now.

Yet held that the plaintiff's right cannot be limited by the use to which the room has been put in the past. What has to be considered is not so much the quantum of light taken away as the quantum of light left. The measure of the light is "what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind, and that the question for what purpose he has thought fit to use that light, or the mode in which he finds it convenient to arrange the internal structure of his tenement, does not affect the question."

COTTON v. HEYL, (1930) 1 Ch. 510.

Contempt of Court—Debt—Undertaking by debtor to pay a sum out of the first moneys received on sale of particular things—Failure to fix any time within which the payment is to be made—The first moneys misappropriated to his own use—Debtor if can be committed for contempt—Proper relief.

By an undertaking to the Court, the defendant undertook to pay 1,000*l.* at once and 4,000*l.* out of the first moneys he should receive in a particular event, namely, of sale by him of the foreign rights in a patent. The patents were sold and about 10,000*l.* realised, but the debtor did not pay the 4,000*l.* as agreed, but retained it with him in breach of the undertaking.

Held, a bare undertaking to pay money cannot be enforced by committal or issue of attachment, but the case fell under Exception 3 to section 4 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and, therefore, can be so enforced. The undertaking being one to pay a specified sum out of the moneys to be received in respect of a future sale, it constituted an equitable assignment of that sum and binding in equity on the defendant and any dealing in disregard of that assignment would be a breach of his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff. But as the undertaking to pay is indefinite as to time, there can be no default until a definite time for payment is fixed. The Court ordered that the defendant should pay the sum of 4,000*l.* within four days after service upon him of the order.

In re ROADLEY: IVESON v. WAKEFIELD, (1930) 1 Ch. 524.

Will—Bequest for maintenance of patients in one or both of two hospitals—If charitable.

By his will, a testator bequeathed a sum of 3,000*l.* to invest the same and apply the income thereof for the benefit and maintenance of patients at one or both of two named hospitals. The hospitals as their rules showed were intended for the maintenance of poor patients. The trust being a trust of income in perpetuity, the question arose if it was a charitable bequest.

Held, that it is a good bequest as it is a trust for the relief of the impotent, aged and poor people within the meaning of the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth (43*rd* Eliz., c. 4.)

ANKIN v. LONDON AND NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY CO., (1930) 1 K.B. 527.

Practice—Production and discovery of documents—Statutory reports made to Minister of Transport—Minister stating that the disclosure will be against public interest—Communications at the request of solicitor—If privileged.

In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the alleged negligence of the defendants, the plaintiff obtained an order for discovery of certain documents. The defendants objected to the production of some on the ground that they were "confidential communications at the instance and request and for the use of the defendants' solicitor between the officials of the defendant company and between those officials and third parties after this action was threatened or anticipated for the . . . use of the said solicitor to enable him to defend the action and to advise the defendants." Of some on the ground that they were copies of a statutory report made to the Minister of Transport in compliance with the Regulation of Railways Act, 1871. The defendant wrote to the Minister who also replied stating that in the public interest, he would decline to permit inspection of those reports. The plaintiffs filed a reply affidavit contradicting the defendants' statement that they were all communications with the solicitor and for his use.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that it is the practice of the English Courts to accept the statement of one of His Majesty's Ministers that production of a particular document would be against the public interest, even though the Court may doubt whether any harm would be done by producing it and if it is contrary to the public interest to produce an original document, it must be equally contrary to public interest to produce a copy of the same. The Minister is not bound to give any reasons for his conclusion.

Woolley v. North London Railway Co., (1869) L.R. 4 C.P. 602 distinguished.

It is irregular that a deponent stating grounds on which he claims privilege is to be met by an opposing affidavit either contradicting him or cross-examining him with a view of showing that what he has stated is untrue. The documents having been prepared to be laid before the Company's solicitor for the purpose of obtaining his advice and at his request were also privileged.

REX v. GENERAL MEDICAL COUNCIL, (1930) 1 K.B. 562.

Medical Practitioner—Registered—Application to remove name from register by practitioner—Complaint subsequently by a third person accusing him of infamous conduct—Council if can enquire into it and erase his name penally.

A medical practitioner registered under the Medical Act, 1858, applied to the Registrar to remove his name from the register. By a Standing Order of the Council, voluntary applications for removal must be accompanied by a statutory declaration by the applicant-practitioner to the effect that he was not aware of any proceedings which might result in establishing cause for the erasure of his name without his consent. After his application but before the Council decided to remove his name, a third party preferred two charges against him and the Council found him guilty of those charges and removed his name penally. The practitioner moved for a writ of mandamus directing the Council to delete from the register of the said Council all records of the said practitioner having been removed penally, the main contention being that once his application for removal was received, he ceased to be a medical practitioner and the Council had no jurisdiction over him.

Held, there is no right at Common Law apart from the Act and until the regulations have been complied with, there is no provision in the Act, entitling a registered medical practitioner to have his name removed from the register. It does not follow that because a practitioner has a right to have his name on the register, therefore he has a right to take it off in all events. The Council was, therefore, well within its powers in declining to act on his voluntary application and removing him as for infamous conduct. "Infamous" there only means serious misconduct judged according to the rules governing the profession.

BROUGHTON v. THE LONDON AND NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY CO.; (1930) 1 K.B. 578.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925—Partial incapacity—Employer offering employment otherwise suitable—Workman refusing it as unsuitable to his family—If employment unsuitable.

A workman employed by the Railway Company as a foreman ganger met with an accident in the course of the employment as a result of which he lost his left eye. He was before that earning £3-1-11. The employers offered him a job as goods porter or as a weighbridge man at Bradford and on his rejecting them, they offered him a job as hoist attendant at Sheffield on a salary of £2-7-10. The workman refused both the offers on the ground that it would be difficult for him to get accommodation there, and further that the place would not suit his wife's health. The employment was otherwise suitable. The Company offered him half the difference between his earnings before the accident and the amount offered by them after the accident as per S. 9, Sub-S. (3) of the Act, but the workman contended that the employment was not 'suitable' within the meaning of that section.

Held, that in considering what is 'suitable employment', the Act excludes the consideration of the state of the workman's family and the lack of accommodation for his family. That does not affect the man's capacity to work. 'Suitable' only means suitable to the workman as such and has no reference to other persons.

GALE v. DENMAN PICTURE HOUSES, LIMITED, (1930) 1 K.B. 588.

Discovery—If defendant can be ordered to disclose before delivery of the statement of claim.

In view of a reorganisation of the Board of Directors of a Picture Corporation and its subsidiary and allied companies, of which the defendant Company was one, some of the shares of the plaintiff in the defendant company were exchanged with the result that the plaintiff ceased to have the requisite qualifying shares for the directorship in the defendant Company and was, therefore, asked to tender his resignation of the directorship. In an action for wrongful dismissal, the plaintiff after issuing his writ, but before he delivered his statement of claim, applied on the summons for discovery of the minutes relating to the exchange of shares.

Held, that there is jurisdiction in the Court to order discovery at any stage of an action, but the Court will not order it before the delivery of the statement of claim, save under the most exceptional circumstances. The plaintiff issuing a writ must be taken to know what his case is and he cannot be allowed to issue a 'fishing bill' to find out whether he has a case or not.

NACHIMSON v. NACHIMSON, (1930) 1 P. 85.

Marriage—Law governing marriage contracted in a foreign country—Dissolution of contract by mutual consent or at the will of one party—Suit for judicial separation—If English Courts can recognise the marriage.

The petitioner and the respondent, both domiciled Russians at the time, entered into the Union relied on as marriage in the proceedings. The Union was registered in the register of civil marriages at Russia and a record of it was also produced. According to that law, the registration is conclusive evidence of marriage. Marriage under the Russian law may be terminated by the death of one of the spouses and during their lifetime by their mutual consent or by the unilateral desire of either of them. Only in that case registration of the dissolution or a decree of Court was necessary, the Registrar or the Court having no option, but to record it accordingly.

Held, the nature of the union has to be ascertained by reference to the law under which it is formed, and not by the intention of the parties. Courts of the country where the question arises resort to the law of the country where the contract was made, not ex comitate, but ex debito justitiae. But the rule extends no further than to the ascertainment of the validity of the contract and unless it is a "marriage" within the definition of that word in English law, the English Court will not recognise it. Marriage in English Law means a voluntary union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others, which is by them indissoluble except by death and any union which permits dissolution at will of the parties though recognised as marriage in the country where it is contracted, will not be recognised by the English Courts.

Lord Penzance's definition in Hyde v. Hyde, (1866) L.R. 1 P. & M. 130 applied.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

On the 18th July at 4-15 P.M., all the thirteen Judges and a large number of practitioners assembled in the 2nd Court where references were made to the retirement of Sir C. V. Kumaraswami Sastriar.

The Advocate-General on behalf of the Bar said:—

May it please your Lordship, Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri,—

To part with one whom you love and respect, one with whom you have been thrown together for a long time in your daily work, is not an easy task and it is not every one that can command the strength and eloquence to give adequate expression to one's feelings of affection and regard at a farewell function; and I for one feel that I am not quite equal to the task. But the bar rightly feel that they would be failing in their duty if they did not bid you farewell in an appropriate manner and I as their spokesman and accredited representative would therefore crave your indulgence and leave to say a few words.

After a brilliant and distinguished University career with an innate liking for the profession of law as one belonging to a reputed family of lawyers who have rendered signal services to British-Indian judicial administration, you joined the bar in this High Court. With your great talents and industry, your power of lucid exposition and persuasive eloquence, your skill in cross-examination, your sweet and winning manners, you soon made a mark in the profession and became the acknowledged leader on the Original Side of this High Court. In April 1905 at a considerable pecuniary sacrifice, with a genuine love for judicial work you accepted the post of Judge of the Court of Small Causes. It is unnecessary for me to recount the history of your service in the provincial and the city judicial spheres, suffice it to say that it was one of almost unrivalled excellence and great distinction. It is a source of pride and great gratification to me that I had the pleasure and privilege of appearing before you both as a City Civil Judge and District and Sessions Judge and I well remember the kindness and encouragement which you extended to me as to other younger members of the profession. In the districts in which you served as District and Sessions Judge, your unfailing courtesy and kindness to the Bar, your deep learning, your instinctive desire to do justice and your sound judgment of men and things are still nourished as a tradition and you are rightly held up as a model for your successors to emulate and follow your example.

In the year 1914, your appointment as a Judge of this High Court was hailed with joy by the profession and great expectations were naturally entertained of your career on the Bench of this Court when you were called to that high office which to the delight of all have been more than amply fulfilled. As a Judge you were equally at home in every side of the varied work of this Court, whether on the Original Side, in the Civil Appellate Court, in the Criminal Sessions, in Criminal Appeals or in Full Bench References and in the administration of every department of law, in a Hindu Law case or in a commercial cause; and you exhibited the same perspicacity in dealing with a case involving an abstract or abstruse point of law as in a case involving a complicated question of fact. By your keen knowledge of human nature as a result of your long judicial experience, your sterling common sense and your broad outlook which was not contaminated or disturbed by technicalities you were able to get through a bewildering maze of details and seize upon the central and vital points of a case. A counsel arguing a case before you, when he was pressed by some questions from the Bench sometimes felt as if you were present or taken into confidence at some of the important incidents on the unravelling of which depended the decision in the particular case. These qualities were brought out in the boldest relief in the Tanjore Palace Appeals, the hearing of which is still fresh in my mind. An experienced advocate always found that there were no surprises in your Court.

Your judgments were characterised by an intensely human note which made people realise that law is not so inelastic as it is depicted to be, that there is still room for the application of equitable principles and that justice tempered by mercy is a wholesome ideal even in an age ridden by precedents, rigid forms of procedure and statute law. In your long career on the Bench you have illustrated that it is possible to combine in oneself the supreme and pre-eminent quality of judicial patience which makes every litigant feel that his case has been fairly tried and the advocate that he has been accorded a full hearing with a quickness of apprehension and speedy despatch of judicial business. While indecision in coming to conclusions or in appreciating arguments was never a failing or weakness of yours, you were gifted with that quality characteristic of all great Judges of being open to conviction until the last moment. You might at the opening of a case be tempted to start with a satirical remark or a superficial cynicism; but an advocate might be quite sure of convincing you if his case was right and his cause was just. You have exemplified that serenity of temper and dignity are not incompatible with gentle and good humour in a Judge.

While one may be pardoned for saying that you showed a distrust of black-letter learning, the pages of the law reports bear eloquent testimony to your thorough mastery of legal principles, your deep erudition and your profound knowledge of case-law, though you never cared to display more learning than was necessary for the disposal of cases tried by you. In your modesty, both in private conversation and in public, you were accustomed to say that you did not propose to leave imperishable monuments for the benefit of posterity and that you were only concerned with the workaday business as a Judge; but I may assure you that you were greatly mistaken in your estimate of yourself and whether consciously or unconsciously you have left behind you a work which is sure to be appreciated by successive generations of judges and lawyers. Very seldom has a contribution ever been made to posterity by one who consciously aimed at it.

In the field of Hindu Law, while you naturally and if I may say so rightly felt that a Judge ought not to take upon himself the function of a legislator and while your moorings were conservative you were not unalive to the changing currents of social thought and outlook in the Hindu community. In the language of Sir Frederick Pollock there was a harmonious blending of judicial valour and judicial caution in your composition as a Judge.

We at the Bar can realise what a trying thing it is for one to occupy judicial office for a long number of years and to maintain an uniformly good temper and kindness. But to your credit it has to be said that down to the last day you have maintained a wonderful equanimity and sweet temper. The junior as well as the senior members of the Bar throughout felt that here was a kindly and sweet-tempered Judge before whom he could put his case with a sense of freedom and without undue restraint. To the Bar you were particularly accommodating and you appreciated their difficulties with a sympathetic imagination without in any way impairing or affecting the high quality and measure of judicial work or the interests of public justice. You seldom distrusted a statement at the Bar unless there were definite materials to show that the practitioner was unfair to the Court and abused the trust reposed in him. I do not on this occasion propose to refer to those qualities of head and heart which outside Court have endeared you to all those who came in contact with you and which made people care for you and rally to you as a personality. In the long and distinguished roll of Judges that adorned this Court, you will always occupy an honourable and prominent place and if I may apply the test suggested by our learned Chief Justice on the occasion of our welcome to him the verdict of the Bar on the eve of your retirement is that you have been a great, good and successful Judge. I can assure you that you are carrying away with you the good feelings and the affectionate regards of the entire bar.

We would miss you very much within these walls and we very much wish that you could stay on with us for some time longer. But we do not grudge you the well-deserved rest after strenuous and arduous public service of 25 years. On behalf of the Bar I wish you farewell and in the fervent hope and prayer that you may be spared for many a long year to come to give the benefit of your sage counsel and advice to the younger generation of judges and lawyers. Is it too much for me to hope that in the India that is to be when we are all aspiring that she will become an equal partner in the Commonwealth of Nations called the British Empire, your services will be utilised in the councils and in the higher judicial tribunals of India and of the Empire? (Applause.) Once more, My Lord, Good-bye.

The Chief Justice, associating himself with the sentiments expressed by Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyar, said:—Mr. Advocate-General and gentlemen, On behalf of myself and my colleagues on the Bench, I desire to associate myself most sincerely with all that you have said in the course of your reference to the retirement of our learned brother. In the expressions of deep regret we are all here united at his retirement. Speaking for myself, I may say that it has been my privilege—and I count it indeed a privilege—to have been associated with our learned brother for five years as a puisne judge. Then and indeed for many years before, he was a tower of strength to us and as a Judge he was one who always showed towards his brother judges a never failing courteous. During the short time that I have been Chief Justice I have had at my disposal, and had availed myself of it very frequently, the very sound advice that he has given me based upon his own very ripe experience. He has always given me the very greatest assistance in the very many matters on administrative detail with which Judges of this High Court have to deal. I venture to say that he can with justice look back upon his long judicial career with every feeling of pride and satisfaction.

When a newly appointed Judge takes his seat on the Bench, one would, I think, be indeed a very rash person who would venture to say with any certainty that his career is bound to be successful. Possibly there is only one prediction which can with any certainty be made about a Judge when he first starts his career as Judge; and that is that litigants measuring his ability by their success or want of it before him, when they are successful will hold the opinion that he has at least justified his appointment. As I have said once before—and I was quoted by you, Mr. Advocate-General—on taking my seat as Chief Justice, it is far safer to wait until a Judge comes to the end of his career and then take the verdict of the Bench and the Bar. That verdict is, I know, that our learned brother has been one of the most distinguished Judges whom we had ever to work with on the Bench. I should like to add to that a rider and it is this: that he has earned the very great esteem of his brother Judges. We join with you, Mr. Advocate-General, in bidding farewell to our learned brother.

His Lordship Sir C. V. Kumaraswami Sastriar then made his reply. He said:

“I thank you most sincerely for the honour you have done me by meeting here to bid me farewell and for the very kind and generous terms in which you have expressed your appreciation of my work in the High Court. It is always a hard thing to bid farewell to one's life's work, to colleagues from whom one has received nothing but kindness, and to the members of the Bar whose able and willing help has rendered work in Court not only easy, but pleasant. The emotion at parting renders it difficult for me to find words to express adequately my thanks.

It is a little over 36 years ago (to be precise it was on 1st April, 1894) that I was enrolled as Vakil of the High Court, a young man flushed with the self-esteem that usually follows a successful university career and full of confidence and hope. My enrolment was moved by Sir Subramnia Aiyar, then at the height of his unrivalled powers as an advocate and soon to be elevated to the bench on which he shed so much lustre. I can never forget the very kind words with which Sir Arthur Collins, the Chief Justice, welcomed me to the bar. A similar kindness was extended to my son, by My Lord, the Chief Justice, when he was recently enrolled for which I am deeply grateful.

I have not forgotten that I owe a large part of my success in life to the favourable conditions under which I entered life. My grandfather was the Chief Interpreter in the Supreme Court and was the first Indian Judge of the Small Cause Court, at a time when it was the highest judicial office open to an Indian. He was well known and his impending retirement under the age rules prevented his being appointed as the first Indian Judge of the High Court and Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyar, who was then his junior, was appointed. My father was a leading vakil on the Original Side and I had the advantage of a thorough training under him. When I entered the bar, I joined him and found a well established office and standing clients. Financially I was well off and had not the weary years of waiting. I am sure that if many of the juniors had my advantages they would have been equally successful. This has kept me from either vanity or arrogance. It has been my good fortune to have received nothing but kindness and consideration from everybody throughout my career. It is a source of satisfaction to me that I have made many friends and few enemies and in laying down office I have no harshness to regret, and no hasty words which I would gladly recall. I have always tried to do my duty without causing any unnecessary pain or hardship. My efforts have been repaid beyond all measure by everybody.

It has been my lot to have seen considerable changes. None of the Judges who were on the Bench when I was enrolled are now alive and none of those who were my colleagues when I joined the Bench are now my colleagues. Not only has there been a change in the personnel but also in the conduct of work. When I joined the Bar, Judges were more summary. A Judge cannot in these days without getting a paragraph of himself in the newspapers headed 'a breeze in court' avail himself of several of the ways by which the former generation of Judges put an end to arguments which were either untenable or prolix. I remember how cutting were the remarks of Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyar when untenable arguments were advanced or cases not in point cited; how Mr. Bhashyam Aiyangar's long-drawn 'Yes, Yes' put an end to much legal eloquence or how Dr. Subramania Aiyar's flourish of his long quill pen and the obvious look of pain on his face cut short arguments and how a mere look from Mr. Davis was sufficient to induce legal silence. Adjournments were rarely asked for on the ground that a practitioner was away from Madras or that a client had not chosen to reply to a communication to remit moneys. A practitioner generally waited in court when there was a chance of his case being taken up or at least left a clerk to hurry him up if a case was nearing its end. Judges had not to send for practitioners and wait. A string of cases were not quoted on the slightest provocation in the admission courts. A second appeal had no chance of success, unless the Vakil opened by stating concisely the facts found and the law applicable to those facts. We had only about twenty volumes of the Law Reports. The M.L.J. was in its infancy and was creating a mild sensation by criticising judgments. There were only four High Courts and reports of Chief Courts were not quoted.

In one thing I have found little or no change, in the earnest endeavour of the Judges to do their duty in fear of God, and without fear of man, in the friendly relations that subsisted between the Judges and in the earnest endeavours of the members of the Bar to advocate their clients' cause without fear and to render all help in their power to the Judges in arriving at a correct decision. I am sure that as year go by this high standard will be maintained and that the High Court will for ever be the temple of justice and the best guardian of the rights and liberties of the people of this Presidency.

Gentlemen, as I told you, it is always difficult to wish you all good-bye. The period when we have to part is inevitable. The very inevitability of it prevents us from realising its effect until it actually takes place. I have always looked upon my life as one which is singularly even in its tenor and singularly unruffled. Probably, I have been spoilt by the kindness which I have received. But I retire with the satisfaction that I have always tried to do my duty and in doing so I have always had more than ample reward in the good opinion I had from the Chief Justice and my colleagues and the members of the Bar.

The future is in the lap of the Gods. You wish me a happy and peaceful retirement. I myself feel that the time has come when strenuous work can be put by and when I can devote my attention more to those pursuits and studies which since my school days had a fascination for me. In Sanskrit literature, both as regards art and religion, there is always a field which I can fall back upon and where I can find peace and consolation. In the society of my friends in hearing of the success of several juniors, whose careers are just begun, and who, I am sure, will make their mark in the heaping of honours upon the seniors now before me and in the pleasure of their company outside the Court. I hope to spend the few remaining years peacefully and in joy. The future is in the lap of the Gods and I hope I shall have peace until it should please Almighty God to call me to his lotus feet."

The gathering then dispersed and Sir C. V. Kumaraswami Sastriar was loudly cheered when he left the Court premises.

Lord Hewart's National Lecture.—There will, we imagine, be few who will not agree that the Fifth National Lecture, broadcast on Monday evening by the Lord Chief Justice, with the title Law, Ethics and Legislation, was of much wider appeal than any of the four lectures which have preceded it, valuable and interesting as these have been. In the course of rather less than an hour, the layman was told clearly and succinctly the meaning of law, the difference between written and unwritten law, the function of the Judiciary with regard to each, and its relation to Parliament. The necessity for, and the effect of, subordinate legislation, was touched upon, and the difference between public and Private International Law briefly explained. The importance of a realisation by every citizen of the real nature of law was admirably put—

Nothing could be more misleading than to assume, as some persons appear to assume, that law is the same thing as litigation. The body of rules and principles which constitute the law, whether civil or criminal, is not habitually violated by the citizens of a civilised State. On the contrary, it is habitually observed. The civil action or the criminal prosecution is not the rule but the exception.....The knowledge that there is a right of recourse to a Court of Law tends in practice to help people to act in such a way that recourse to a Court of Law is in fact comparatively rare.

And, turning to the ethical side of his subject, Lord Hewart pointed out that there was a vast area of moral duty to which law had nothing to say, whilst a good deal of law had its root in considerations not of morality, but of mere convenience; and it followed that as, for its successful working, law must be supported by the moral sense of the great majority, it must not be in advance of the moral standard of the community. The lecture appears in full in the current issue of The Listener, and we hope it will be widely studied.—L.J., 1930, p. 209.

Solicitors and Privilege.—The decision of the House of Lords in Minter v. Priest (Times, March 21) ends a hard-fought and closely-argued lawsuit. Two persons, Mr. Taylor and Mr. Simpson, went to a solicitor, Mr. Priest, to discuss whether he would advance a sum of money for the purchase of property from another person (the plaintiff). The idea was in their minds that, if he would do so, he should act as solicitor for them, or one of them, in and about the purchase. In the course of the interview which followed, the solicitor made observations which were defamatory about the vendor, and which formed the subject of the action. These observations were repeated to the plaintiff, who sued the solicitor for slander. The defendant pleaded privilege for the whole interview, but the jury, on questions left to them by Mr. Justice Horridge, found that at the time when the words complained of were uttered, the relation of solicitor did not exist between the defendant and his visitors, and that the defendant did not reasonably believe that either of the clients wished to retain him. Accordingly, the Judge did not tell the jury that they should exclude from their minds the evidence given by Mr. Taylor, which he tendered upon subpoena, with reluctance, and upon leave given to treat him as a hostile witness. The plaintiff recovered a substantial sum in damages; but upon appeal, the Court of Appeal (1929, 1 K.B. 655; 98 L.J.K.B. 661) set aside the judgment in his favour. That Court was moved chiefly by two old cases which had not been mentioned to the Judge below. Jones v. Pugh (1 Phillips 96), and Carpmael v. Powis (ib. 687) decided that it is an ordinary part of a solicitor's duty to lay out money for his clients and treat for sale or purchase of estates for them; and that conversations had in the discharge of such duty are privileged. Taking the view that Taylor and Simpson had gone to the defendant in his professional capacity and for business within a solicitor's proper sphere, they held the claim of privilege good.—L.J., 1930, p. 210.

Dissecting an Interview.—The House of Lords took a different view. "The relation of solicitor and client being once established," said Lord Buckmaster, "it is not a necessary conclusion that whatever conversation ensued was protected from disclosure." To secure that privilege, the conversation must be such as within a wide and generous ambit of interpretation is fairly referable to the relation." Once a solicitor says something which is outside that ambit, the fact he is a solicitor, and is speaking to a client, gives him no protection. It does not, we think, follow from this, though it appears so at first sight, that you may or must "dissect an interview" into two parts. The jury took the view that whether the defendant was a solicitor or not, yet at the time the words were uttered he was not speaking as a solicitor to his visitors as clients, and they could regard those words as forming an entire conversation. Upon this finding—to use Lord Buckmaster's graphic phrase—"the cloak of privilege was stripped off the entire conversation," and the solicitor was liable just as he would have been if the words had been spoken on any other occasion. The result is that even if clients go to a solicitor on business which it is admittedly proper for him to pursue, privilege will not attach to anything and everything which he may say in the course of the interview. It is clearly in the public interest that professional privilege should be respected; indeed, the rules of privilege are founded upon strong considerations of that kind. But this privilege, though it must be extended with a generous hand, does not protect against defamatory utterances which are, as the jury found, spoken when the relation of client and solicitor does not exist at all.—L.J., 1930, p. 210.

• • Copyright in Melodies.—An interesting point on the law of copyright came before Mr. Justice Clauson in Metzler & Co. (1920) Ltd. v. J. Curwen & Sons, Ltd. (Times, March 28). The late Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor composed the music for a song, the words of which were Herrick's "Fall on me like a Silent Dew." This song formed part, a little later, of the incidental music to Sir Herbert Tree's production of Othello in April, 1912. The more important parts of this incidental music were made by the composer into a suite called the "Othello Suite" and the melody of "Fall on me like a Silent Dew" formed part of this suite. In August, 1912, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor assigned to the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title the copyright "of and in the following work of which I am the composer: 'Othello Suite' for piano forte solo and full orchestra." A month later Mr. Coleridge-Taylor died, and in November, 1912, his executrix assigned to the defendants the copyright in the song, under the bona fide impression, as was freely admitted, that she was entitled so to do. The plaintiffs alleged that the copyright in the music of the song had passed to them by the assignment of the "Othello Suite" and claimed an injunction and consequent relief. The defence was that the melody of the song was the composer's "raw material," and that, although the plaintiffs had the copyright in one arrangement of it, that did not prevent the composer from treating it in a different way and dealing with it separately. This contention was rejected by the learned Judge who held, as seems to be plainly right, that, the melodies of the Suite and of the song being for all practical purposes identical, and the harmonies varying only so far as would be expected between a piano forte piece, an orchestral piece, and a song with piano forte accompaniment, the composer's whole rights passed under the first assignment, which was that to the plaintiffs. His executrix therefore had nothing to assign, and the defence failed.—L.J., 1930, p. 226.

A Premier by Election.—During the last eight years the Legislature of the Irish Free State has made several changes in the Constitution to which it owes its existence—so many, indeed, that, as a letter which we published last week showed, they sometimes escape even the vigilant eyes of our contributors. A highly interesting provision, however, remains, namely, Article 53, which provides that the President of the Ministry shall be elected by the Lower House. He is "appointed on the nomination" of that house; and when appointed, selects his Vice-President and colleagues. The Vice-President carries on the President's duties if that officer should die, resign, or be incapable, till a new President has been "elected." Three words are thus used in close collocation, but the result is plain: that the Premier owes his position to the choice of the members of the Lower House. The arrangement is unusual, and if precedents for it may be found abroad, we are not aware of any within the Empire. It removes all power of selection from the hands of the Sovereign, be he Emperor, King, or President of a Republic, and breaks away from the ancient tradition of England, which prescribes that the Sovereign shall ask a retiring Premier for whom he should send as a successor. Some critics may think that such a provision must lead to a certain amount of intrigue, to the introduction of personal considerations, to the demanding of promises from intending candidates, to the subterranean proceedings and labyrinthine negotiations which are generally described in the comprehensive term "lobbying." A Premier appointed by the Sovereign, entrusted with the Seals, or whatever be the appropriate emblem, chooses his colleagues and faces the House of Commons. In a very rare case, such as that of the younger Pitt, he may hold on though defeated in the Commons; but the precedent of 1784 is unlikely to be followed. The House does not choose; but it approves or disapproves the Sovereign's choice.—L.J., 1930, p. 227.

A Potent Legacy.—The judicial office is hedged about with unwritten prohibitions. It is not seemly for a Judge to show any keen interest in politics; he may utter hard sayings of the Legislature as a workman may, without offence, say bitter things concerning the men, who were unskilful in manufacturing the tools of his trade. He may assail politics in general, but must not single out for his caustic comment any part in particular. Again, he may not be mixed up in the control of commercial enterprises. It is not done. For Judges, like Justice itself, must not only be impartial, but must plainly appear to be so. And if Mr. Justice A. were interested in Company B. it would be unthinkable that he should sit in judgment in the case of Company B. v. Company C., or in any case where the interests of Company B. were affected by the result of the action.

As here, so in Australia; and the Chief Justice of the Commonwealth, finding himself the happy beneficiary of large commercial interests under the will of a friend, felt constrained to make the choice between retaining his judicial office are accepting what was coming to him under the will. Report says that he has made his election and chosen the better part. He will accept the onerous duties involved in the last will and testament of his deceased friend, and sacrifice the high judicial post.—L.J., 1930, p. 235.

The Best Advocates.—"Our judges," wrote Lord Birkenhead on one occasion, "are almost all able, and they are all incorruptible. The best of our advocates are eloquent, courageous, and high-principled." Let it be the constant aim of each and every one of us who are advocates to be included in the best. But there have been, in the past, not only judges who are "not apt," but advocates who have won and lost cases without eloquent advocacy and without the aid of high principle.

I remember one, an enormous if not a great man, who in a case without merit secured a highly advantageous settlement by appearing in the corridor on the morning when his case was down for hearing, with his clerk in close attendance laden with a heavy burden of Law Reports, selected at random from the shelves in his Chambers. The effect upon the youth who was briefed for the defendant was according to design. Here was a case in which he was certain he could win on elementary principles without recourse to law report or text-book; and behold, some twenty volumes covering three centuries of legal lore. Result, a settlement. Judgment for the plaintiff on the terms endorsed on counsel's briefs. And the inference is that in times gone by not all advocates found it always necessary to be eloquent and high principled.—L.J., 1930, p. 235.

Stand Down!—The big man would at times refresh us with stories of his exploits as a cross-examiner; his tales always had an ending happy for the cross-examiner, the complete confusion of the witness and the hero's order to "Stand down, sir!" Not only the witness, but his counsel and the Judge himself appear to have been overwhelmed in the ruins.

But have you observed in the many tomes of legal anecdotes how often the cross-examining counsel is represented as ending the witness by the command to stand down. "Stand down," he roared. And that is the end of it. But surely, save in those rare cases where, when counsel is engaged for each side, one is allowed to cross-examine his own witness, the cross-examiner cannot roar his learned friend out of the right to re-examine? From a dramatic point of view it is, perhaps, a pity; but there it is. There is one tale among many of the "stand down" variety in which counsel for the defendant in a criminal case obtains an admission from a witness for the prosecution that he knew when he employed the prisoner that the prisoner was a thief. "Do I understand that you employ dishonest people to work for you, even after their rascalities are known?" "Aye, indeed, how else could I get the help of a lawyer?" "Stand down," shouted the man of law." So the story goes.—L.J., 1930, p. 235.

Swift, J., on Speech.—During the hearing of a recent "running down" case, Mr. Justice Swift had occasion to make some good-natured comment on the length to which a simple case might endure owing to what a brother judge once described as the unconscious art of the skilled advocate. The badly injured plaintiff was asked how far away the lorry was when he first saw it and the time which elapsed from the first view to the final crash. Four seconds was the plaintiff's estimate of the time. "Far longer," the Judge observed, "than it has taken to tell it."

Later, on the question of special damage, the plaintiff told how, in his business, if one did four hours' work in three hours, he received four hours' pay. At which revelation of the rationalization of industry, the Judge was understood to express a hope that some such basis of remuneration might be applied with advantage to the Bar.

But despite the complaints, to which A. P. Herbert has recently added his grouch by reason of the subpoena which (unnecessarily) recalled him from a holiday on the High Seas, things are infinitely better than they were. Cases which formerly would have kept the Courts going for days are being settled out of Court. Cases which would have endured for weeks are brought to an untimely end in a day or two when the weak point becomes known, and the Judge does not conceal the fact that he is aware of it. He does not now, as in the courteous olden time once happened, here a two-days' speech, and at the end of the case observe that the Act on which the pleadings were founded had been repealed.—L.J., 1930, p. 235.

Bateson, J., on Wills and Settlements.—On Wednesday, Bateson, J., gave an illustration of how this speeding up has infected the Probate Division. He told the litigants in a contested will case, father and son, that he thought they were very foolish to throw their money away, and plainly asked counsel to come to a sensible arrangement. And they did; and thereby killed what in other days would have been regarded as the goose that laid the golden eggs.

Contrast this with the old story, not altogether apocryphal, of the young solicitor who, soon after joining his father's business, brought an old case to a sudden end, and boasted of his prowess to his parent. Sadly he was told that by his rash action he had killed a cause which had enabled the father to marry, to educate the impulsive son and provide portions for two daughters; a cause which, by the exercise of common prudence, might have provided not only for the son and his wife, but for the children and grandchildren of the marriage.—L.J., 1930, p. 235.

Income Tax Appeals.—The discussion last week in the House of Lords on the practice with regard to appeals to that House in Income Tax cases, which was initiated by Lord Dunedin, was not very encouraging, although the Government promised, as they could not very well help doing, to consider the matter. Lord Dunedin's suggestion was that where the Crown lost in the Court of Appeal, they should not be entitled to go to the House of Lords except with the leave of the Court of Appeal, and that where leave was given, the Court should be empowered to impose such conditions as to costs as it thought fit. Lord Hailham, in a speech which, as Lord Dunedin later observed, seemed to indicate a "thorough distrust" of the Court of Appeal, appeared to suggest that the Judges of the Court of Appeal are in the habit of allowing their judgment to be swayed—"have allowed themselves to be a little misled," to use his exact words—by feelings of sympathy for the taxpayer; and he thought that the remedy for any hardship lay in "tightening the administrative machinery and insisting on a more rigid examination of cases by the Law Officers." We are fully in agreement with Lord Dunedin that public opinion demands a change of practice, and we are quite sure that it will not be content with anything so intangible as is suggested by Lord Hailham. It may be that it is undesirable to give the Court of Appeal power to refuse altogether leave to appeal to the House of Lords in Income Tax cases, but there can be no reasonable objection to that Court being empowered to impose terms as to costs in cases in which the Crown desires to appeal from a judgment in favour of the taxpayer.—L.J., 1930, p. 241.

Breach of Promise Actions.—Sir Edward Parry has been discussing in the Morning Post (March 31) whether “breach of promise” should be retained. The action has always been a bit of a puzzle. Contracts for marriage were once the affair of the Ecclesiastical Courts, and when their jurisdiction ceased, and the Common Law Courts took it over, the question arose, should the man be able to sue as well as the woman. Against the man’s right it was argued that marriage was no advancement to him, but it was to the woman, and the promise made to him lacked consideration. But the law was settled in favour of the equality of the sexes, and so the man had his action: Harrison v. Cage and Wife (1699, Carth. 467). Then there was the question of damages, and as is well known, it was held that these were not merely the ordinary damages in breach of contract, but might be exemplary damages, and regard might be had to injured feelings, affections and wounded pride, as well as to loss of the marriage: Smith v. Woodfine (1857, 1 C.B.N.S. 600; Finlay v. Chirney, 1888, 20 Q.B.D. 494). The judgment of Bowen and Fry, L.JJ., in the latter case, delivered by Bowen, L.J., contains a detailed history of the action. Sir Edward writes to interest readers rather than to give a definite opinion, but he makes a suggestion which would remove all doubt as to the fact of the engagement. Let each party be bound to wear a Government ring with a registered number. The rings would be sold by the Treasury at varying prices, and would assist the Budgets of the future. We should then have registration of marriage contracts as well as of estate contracts, and this would leave only the question of damages. For that a sympathetic jury will always be required.—L.J., 1930, p. 243.

Leader and Junior.—Du Parcq, owing to the exigencies of legal practice, was obliged on Monday, while his “Bolivia Concessions” Case was still current in Court IV, to appear for Podmore in the Court of Criminal Appeal; and two good things resulted from the well-known impossibility, oft-lamented by clients, of appearing in two places at one and the same time. Gallop, his junior in the case of Sohr v. Bolivia Concessions, Ltd., had the opportune responsibility, unusual for a junior, of cross-examining the principal witnesses for the defence; and was able to discharge that duty in the absence of his leader without loss or injury to the victorious client. Thus juniors of standing sometimes get their chance.

Meanwhile, du Parcq, although he failed to secure from Avory, J., and his two brothers an adverse opinion of the summing up of the Lord Chief Justice in the Podmore trial, achieved a rare distinction. For Avory, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed that while the contentions put forward on the prisoner's behalf were not different in kind from those which was usually and vainly put forward in such appeals in that place, they were advanced with unusual persuasiveness. A high compliment from the lips of Mr. Justice Avory. Moral: Leave the other case to your junior.—L.J., 1930, p. 253.

One for a Hit to Twelve for a Miss.—The new Mexican penal code is said to present some startling anomalies as to maxima sentences. One, which is specially attracting notice, is the provision that anyone attempting to shoot another and failing, is liable to three years' imprisonment, while any person who shoots and hits, inflicting only minor injuries, is liable to only three months. But is this as mad as it seems? In a country where the use of firearms is common, the wild marksman is a public danger; he may hit anybody. He is worse than a murderously minded pistoller—he is a street nuisance. The marksman who hits has a definite and limited object. He may be wicked, but he is at least likely not to maim those who have not offended him. Perhaps, too, good marksmanship is honourable in Mexico. They want men who can shoot straight in a land where a revolution is the recognised method of changing the government. Therefore shut up the bad shot and gently censure the good! But the criticism of the Mexican penal code is reported from New York, and we seem to remember reading recently in an American publication the very same criticism of the penal codes of some of the United States, that they too punish a hit with a bullet more lightly than a miss. Perhaps the whole thing is only one more exhibition of modern methods in journalism.—S.J., 1930, p. 192.

Enticing a Wife by Contract.—A case is said to be pending in Paris in which a rich American is suing the management of a French theatre on the ground that they engaged his wife to act there without his permission. One defence alleged is ignorance of the lady's status, but whether that defence were open or not, no such action could be maintained in the English courts in the twentieth century. The issue whether an action of enticement would lie in such circumstances, however, appears more open. A wife's duty is to live with her husband, whose right it is—one of the very few left to him—to choose the place of the matrimonial home. Let it then be supposed that he has to live in Northumberland, where his work is, and that someone offers her a handsome salary to act in London, or even pose as a film star in Cornwall. Obviously such a contract would conflict with her wifely duties, and would form a very strong enticement to her to neglect or abandon them. Possibly the defence of ignorance of the fact that the lady was a married woman might succeed, but it would be a difficult one to maintain, requiring proof that she had deceived both her husband and her employers in the matter. If the latter contracted with her knowing that she was a married woman, they might plead that they were entitled to assume that she was free to enter into the arrangement with them either on the assumption that her husband did not object, or that he would change his home so that she could fulfil her contract while living with him. Breach of the contract then might give rise to an action against her, but would the husband be liable for inducing her to break it? The point does not appear to have arisen, but it is submitted that he would not be, for his claim on her company would be paramount. A third case might be supposed, in which the husband warned the employers before the contract that he objected. It is arguable that, on the analogy of bequests on condition that a wife lives apart from her husband (see, for example, Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, (1871) L.R. 12 Eq. 604), such a contract, in derogation of marriage duties, would be void, and that therefore there would be no defence to an action for enticement. In the converse case, it is hardly conceivable that an action by a wife would lie, for the matrimonial home, and therefore her duty within it, follows the husband. Sometimes well-known actresses have married on the bargain with their husbands that their careers were to continue, but, whatever effect such an ante-nuptial pact might have, it could hardly deprive a husband of his ordinary marital rights.—S.J., 1930, p. 192.

Precedence of President of Probate Division.—A small slip in the interesting article on the House of Lords as an appellate tribunal, which appears in the new volume of the "Encyclopædia of the Laws of Scotland," as to the position of the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, may make it of interest to recall the stages by which this high judicial office has gradually been increased in dignity. In the article above referred to it is stated that "by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1881, the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice for the time being is also declared to be a Lord of Appeal." This is an error. By S. 4 of that Act the President for the time being was made an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal, which is not the same thing as being made a Lord of Appeal. The section did, however, increase his dignity, but it also provided that he was not to be entitled in the Court of Appeal to precedence "over any existing judge to which he would not have been entitled as a Judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature if this Act had not passed." So the position continued for many years, the President, when sitting in the Court of Appeal, taking precedence among the Lords Justices according to the date of his appointment. But by the Administration of Justice Act, 1920, it is provided that he shall have rank and precedence next after the Master of the Rolls, and that provision is reproduced in S. 16; Sub-S. (2), of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925. The President at the present time, Lord Macnaghten, is, however, entitled to sit in the House of Lords in its judicial capacity, not by the mere fact that he is the President of the Division of which he is the head, but by reason of the fact that he is a peer of Parliament who is holding "high judicial office." The present Lord Chief Justice and the Master of the Rolls, also being peers, are in the same way qualified to take part in the judicial work of the House of Lords.—S.J., 1930, p. 207.

Siamese Twins.—"Siamese Twins," says Murray's English Dictionary, were "two male natives of Siam, Chang and Eng (1814-1874), who were united by a tubular band in the region of the waist." There must have been before, and there have been since their appearance, a number of cases in which erring nature has produced similar phenomena, and the adjective "Siamese" is invariably applied. It is not difficult to appreciate the innumerable difficulties under which such twins must of necessity labour, and it is equally easy to realise that their unfortunate condition cannot entail any advantages, unless it be, perhaps, that such as are so minded can earn a livelihood with a minimum of effort by submitting themselves for exhibition purposes. Even in that direction, however, there may be much healthy competition, and, with reference to the original Siamese twins The Times of the 26th November, 1829, refers to a statement in the Paris papers to the effect that the Sardinian girl with two heads had died on the preceding day and the Siamese twins would therefore have a clear field in that capital. In America, however, according to Siamese twins there, there does exist an additional advantage. The twins claim to have been permitted to travel on the United States railways with one ticket. An application by the same twins to travel to Europe on one ticket, however, has been met with a refusal by the steamship company on the ground that travel at sea includes meals, whereas railway travel does not. An obvious and understandable objection. Two individual and independent personalities united corporeally in such manner that the will of one cannot be effected without the consent of the other presents the possibility of difficult legal problems, the importance of the solution of which is only minimised by the rarity of the cases. The terms of a contract desired to be entered into by one twin, for instance, may be as inseverable as the twins themselves, but that legal redress for a breach would not equally affect both. The cases, however, as observed, are rare, and where they do exist mother nature appears by way of compensation to have modelled their mentalities so that they are generally ad idem in matters that materially affect them both.—S.J., 1930, p. 209.

BOOK REVIEWS.

TRIAL OF OSCAR SLATER. Edited by W. Roughead. Notable British Trials, Series. 3rd Edition, 1929. Published by Messrs. Butterworth & Co. Price Rs. 6-8-0.

The story of the trial of Oscar Slater given in the Introduction to this volume excites so much our curiosity that we feel the urge within us to finish the book at a stretch. Nowhere in the history of trials could have been a graver mistake as to the identity of persons than in this case. Lack of materials and omission to include proper evidence which could have disproved the charge against an innocent man, happened to combine in the hands of the Lord Advocate of Scotland who carried on a successful prosecution against the wrong individual and got him a conviction to a long imprisonment. But for the indefatigable energies of public-spirited men like Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the truth about the murderer could not have been so ably unravelled after nearly two decades, though one would still like to know who the real culprit is. It is impossible to expect of the saviours of Oscar Slater the clue to finding out the murderer of Miss Gilchrist, after the lapse of so many years that had almost obliterated all the available traces of evidence in the case. The evidence for the prosecution printed in the following pages only suggests to the careful reader, how much of lacunæ has been covered by the undaunted eloquence of the counsel. The sitting of the Court of Appeal in judgment over a trial that was concluded twenty years back, is a fine instance to prove that in the highest Courts of the land, justice shall be done at all costs and even if the Heavens fall down.

We feel thankful to the editor of this volume for having brought out the publication so soon after the deliberations of the Appeal Court were over in 1928.

LETTERS TO A YOUNG BARRISTER, by F. J. Wrottesley.
Published by Sweet & Maxwell, Limited, London.

These letters of advice to the novice in the legal profession bear the stamp of much experience and self-discipline on the part of the writer himself. Everyone who happens to go through these instructive pages cannot fail to appreciate the exhaustive hints on advocacy. The methods of examination and cross-examination of witnesses form the major portion of this volume and are at once interesting and inspiring. We feel an inordinate pleasure in reading this book as the author has not spared any pains to make it attractive.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE, by Dr. Nand Lal, B.A., LL.B. (Cantab), LL.D. In two volumes. Price Rs. 30 per set.

This is a most exhaustive commentary on the Indian Penal Code in two volumes by Dr. Nand Lal who is well known as the author of the standard treatise on the Civil Procedure Code. That no point or decision of any importance has been omitted in the treatment of the subject will be evident from the fact that the volumes have run to nearly three thousand pages and the author has also utilised the learning and research in all the treatises that appeared before it. The treatment of the subject is the one adopted by the learned author in his commentaries on the Civil Procedure Code. In a work of this character, it is needless to say that all the amendments to date have been noticed in their places and the case-law whether in the authorised or private legal journals has been brought thoroughly up to date. To any one who may complain of the bulk of the work, we would, agreeing with the author, say that it is impossible for a treatise "to be complete as well as thorough and at the same time brief and handy." The first volume deals with sections 1 to 298 of the Indian Penal Code and the second volume with the later sections. It is a noteworthy feature of this work that there is a general index at the end of each volume, an innovation which the author thinks from his experience will be found more useful. We have no doubt, that on account of its exhaustiveness and thoroughness, the work will take its place among the foremost treatises on the subject.

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT, by E. Vinayaka Row, B.A., B.L. and S. Appu Row, B.A., B.L., Advocates, High Court, Madras. Published by the Law Publishing Company, Mylapore. Price Rs. 9.

It is with great pleasure that we acknowledge the receipt of the commentaries on the Transfer of Property Act by Messrs. E. Vinayaka Row and S. Appu Row, members of the Madras Bar. The recent amending Acts to the Transfer of Property Act have called forth a number of commentaries of the original Act as amended and the learned authors have done well in bringing out this handy volume, setting out the original and new sections in parallel columns and clearly explaining the changes in the commentaries. The learned authors have not indulged in unnecessary citation of cases and have mainly aimed at lucidity in the statement of the principles of law. To the student, learned commentaries overburdened with case-law will far from being helpful, be embarrassing and the present work with its clear statement of the law will be particularly valuable. While the authors have given reference to the decisions under the original sections they have no option but to quote largely from the report of the Select Committee in the notes to the amended sections, although it may have no value in the interpretation of the sections. We hope that the work will be received with the popularity which it richly deserves.

THE INDIAN CONTRACT AND THE SALE OF GOODS ACTS, by T. R. Venkatesa Aiyar, B.A., B.L., Advocate, High Court, Madras. Printed at the Kesari Printing Works, Madras. Price Rs. 8-8.

This is a handy commentary on the Indian Contract Act and the Sale of Goods Act which was recently passed by the Indian legislature and which has taken the place of the chapter on the sale of goods as it originally stood in the Indian Contract Act. As the sections of the Indian Sale of Goods Act have been largely reproduced from its English prototype, the learned author has largely given references to the decisions under the English Act. To those in the mofussil to whom the English reports are not easily available the commentaries which set out the points of decision of the English cases will be found particularly useful. We have great pleasure in recommending this publication for a clear understanding of the provisions of the Indian Contract Act and the Indian Sale of Goods Act.

A HANDBOOK OF INDIAN TRADE UNION LAW, by T. A. Anantha Aiyar, B.A., B.L., Advocate, High Court, Madras. Price Rs. 4.

This attempt to explain briefly and comment carefully with comparisons of the important sections of the Indian Trade Union Act with the English Law on the subject, cannot fail to deserve our appreciation. Coming as the book does at a time when the Trade Union Law is in its stage of inception in this country, we are sure the publication will serve, as the author himself hopes, as a handbook. The inclusion of the regulations of the Local Governments of the various provinces in India and the forms and rules regarding Trade Unions, in the appendices, is a healthy indication that the book will receive wide recognition.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (ACT V OF 1908), by K. N. Katju and S. C. Das. Printed at the Allahabad Law Journal Press. Series No. 1, 2nd Edition, 1930. Price Rs. 6.

We extend our thanks to the authors of this book for having brought out in quick succession a second edition of their useful work. The addition of some of the latest Acts as the Bar Councils Act and the U.P. Village Panchayat Act in the Addendum S to this edition as well as the scrupulous attention bestowed in including the modifications to some of the sections and orders of the Civil Procedure Code with the rules framed by the various High Courts and the case-law up-to-date under the relevant sections, cannot but add to its usefulness. Even the recent changes introduced by the High Court of Allahabad in Order 7 and in Rule 2 of Order 8 have found a place here.

We are hopeful that the utility of this volume will be easily recognised.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, by E. H. Monnier. Published by the Calcutta Weekly Notes Office, Calcutta. Price Rs. 25.

We have great pleasure in welcoming this monumental work of E. H. Monnier. It is a pity that Mr. Monnier did not live to see the publication of his work, as he passed away when about two-thirds of the work had been printed. The more recent decisions have been incorporated by Mr. Phanibhusan Chakravarti, Advocate and member of the Editorial Staff of the Calcutta Weekly Notes, who prepared the addenda.

Mr. Monnier was a leader of the Criminal Bar of the Calcutta High Court and was well known for his erudition in this branch of the law. In the book under review, the history of all the important sections have been given and the recent legislative amendments have been carefully noted and given prominence. In arranging the case-law under each section indicating with clearness and precision, the conflicts and divergencies of judicial opinion, the learned author has spared no pains. We have no hesitation in recommending this work to the members of the legal profession.

OUR JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

Having referred to certain anomalous features of the present system the lines on which a reform may proceed may be indicated. This aspect may be dealt with under three heads:—

(1) CONSTITUTION OF ONE TYPE OF COURT WITH UNLIMITED JURISDICTION IN POINT OF VALUE OR SUBJECT-MATTER, (2) CONSTITUTION OF A NEW MODEL OF APPELLATE COURTS, AND (3) THE ABOLITION OF THE ORIGINAL SIDE OF THE HIGH COURT.

I.

The idea of a gradation of Courts with limitations on their jurisdiction as to subject-matter or value was unknown to English Law before the constitution of the County Courts. The latter which having been brought into existence in 1840 have come down to modern times do not, however, correspond to the Courts in India subordinate to the High Court. Now as ever before it is the King's Bench Division or the Chancery Division or the Probate, etc., Division of the High Court that functions as the main jurisdiction of first instance, and the County Court has seisin only of relatively small disputes which it would inconvenience the suitor to take all the way to London. They correspond more or less to our Courts of Small Causes. As already mentioned Indian conditions render it impossible for the High Court to take up the Original Side of the provincial litigation and make it imperative that the district organisation must be complete and self-sufficient so far as regards the jurisdiction of first instance. Within the district there has to be a net-work of smaller Courts to deal with the smaller litigation, but heavier litigation need not be divided between two sets of Courts. Under the new Civil Courts Act, there may be more than one Judge for the same Court and this principle can be carried out further than it has been. One Superior Court of Original Jurisdiction manned by as many Judges as may be required for adequately meeting the volume of business would appear to be sufficient for a whole district. The time has come for the devolution of further power to the District Munsif and not much hardship will be caused in asking the big suitor to come to the District centre in these days of extended railway communication and cheap motor transport. Or the Circuit system may be introduced and the Judge may be asked to proceed from place to place and try causes locally so as to enable witnesses to avoid journeys. The administrative control will be with the senior Judge, who will always sit at headquarters, so as to be always available for emergent work. It is also desirable that summary matters like applications under the Guardian and Lunacy Acts, the Local Boards Act and the Religious Endowments Act are dealt with by the senior Judges. The other Judges will dispose of suits, land acquisition cases, probate matters, matrimonial matters and in short all matters involving trial or inquiry.

In the matter of the delimitation of pecuniary jurisdiction for the Court of the District Munsif some differentiation should be made between money claims and other disputes or if that distinction should be deemed untenable something should be done to see that the real value of the suit is taken into consideration for the ascertainment of the forum and not merely a rule of thumb value. Valuation for purposes of Court-fees should be entirely differentiated from valuation for jurisdiction. The latter must correspond to the actual stakes of the litigation, that is, what it would cost to the party to fail should his case be true. If such a differentiation be fully carried out one can confidently recommend the raising of the District Munsif's jurisdiction to Rs. 5,000. Having regard to the fall of the rupee, the limit of Rs. 5,000 is much the same in point of real values as the limit of Rs. 2,500 fixed in 1873. If anything, the purchasing power of Rs. 5,000 now is less than the purchasing power of Rs. 2,500 in 1873. The cadre of District Munsifs will certainly have to be strengthened to meet the additional work but the relief to the Superior Court will afford more than ample compensation.

II.

On the Appellate Side the District organisation requires a complete readjustment. The Civil Justice Committee suggested the idea of District Benches for hearing appeals, but they did not go far enough and the recommendations of the Committee made in this behalf do not appear to have received any serious consideration. The practice of single Judges hearing and disposing of appeals is a peculiar feature of the Indian judicial system and has been current long enough if not too long. Without disparagement to the high character and the great ability of our mofussal Appellate Judges, the system is essentially indefensible. The Court of first instance pronounces judgment after an elaborate trial during the course of which in the majority of cases the testimony of a number of witnesses is actually heard. It is obvious that the trial may afford side-lights on points to which evidence is directed, and these side-lights which are not available to the Appellate Court may have an essential bearing on the final result of the appreciation of the evidence. There is seldom a case, where some probabilities or circumstances are not forthcoming on both sides and the question in each case is which set of probabilities or circumstances should be given a determining weight and which set explained away. Without wounding susceptibilities one may be pardoned for stating that in a substantial proportion of cases in our Courts conflicting evidence is brought forward on both sides on points in which one set or other must necessarily be false. The sanctity of the oath or the witness box is a sorrowful irony at present. No two minds think exactly alike and the same circumstance appeals to different minds with different degrees of force. These considerations make it difficult for us to feel that the appreciation of a case by one mind is necessarily to be preferred to the appreciation by another for the mere accident of its situation. No doubt the Appellate Judge is supposed to have greater experience, but even this hypothesis does not hold in many cases as attempted to be shown earlier, and in any event the extent of the difference in experience between Original and Appellate Judges in the mofussal is not very great and cannot possibly suffice as a foundation for the present edifice. The County Courts in England dispose of comparatively trivial business, but appeals against their judgments are heard by two or three Judges of the King's Bench Division. Only in cases of quasi-judicial work like that of the Master or Referee the appeal is heard by single Judge. In all matters determined judicially by a Judge the practice of a single Appellate Judge is unknown in England. Appellate work is difficult and delicate firstly, because rights of parties which it might have taken hours, days or weeks for the first Court to try and determine have to be settled in as many minutes, hours or days and secondly, because the only guide to a correct determination is the cold record as against the living voice and action of the parties and witnesses concerned in the drama of the trial. Our judicial officers no doubt are as high-souled and conscientious as any body of Judges elsewhere, but there is a difference between conscious prepossession or unconscious prepossession or impulse and no human being however high can altogether avoid the latter. It is obvious that the effect of an infirmity in temper or judgment is far more damaging to the cause of justice in the short and sharp investigation which an appeal can receive than in the elaborate hearing received by an original suit. All these criticisms may also be levelled against a Bench, but their force necessarily weakens. Two persons cannot be subject to the same infirmity operating in the same manner and generally each member of the Bench exerts a steadying influence on the other. If they are not able to see eye to eye on all the points but nevertheless reach the same conclusion, the confidence in the correctness of the conclusion is the greater because it has emerged out of two independent lines of investigation. If both of them agree as to the reasons and on the conclusion there is the satisfaction that the agreement is due to the correctness of their views. When the Bench disagree on the conclusion there is the solution suggested by section 98, Civil Procedure Code, based on the principle that where as much can be stated for upsetting as for confirming the decision, it should be left as it is.

The Civil Justice Committee have suggested the constitution of benches as a means of reducing second appeals. With great respect the question of District Benches for hearing appeals is entirely independent of the question of controlling the file of the High Court or reducing second appeals. Whether second appeals should be permitted on litigation of small value has to be discussed on its own merits. The idea of the Civil Justice Committee is that a strong Court of first appeal may well be made a Court of final appeal and their proposal is to constitute benches as Courts of final appeal for suits of the value of less than Rs. 1,000. Apparently according to them the existence of second appeals is a sufficient measure of protection against erroneous decisions by single Appellate Judges in all cases above Rs. 1,000 in value. But this line of reasoning ignores the fact that first Appellate Courts finally decide questions of fact and the High Court is powerless to set right an erroneous finding of fact. Again in various interlocutory matters only one appeal is allowed and some of these matters either finally dispose of rights of parties or are otherwise of grave importance and it is obviously desirable that a strong Court of Appeal disposes of such matters. After all in the majority of cases findings of fact conclude the ultimate issue of the litigation. Apart from these on first principles a Court of Appeal should have an inherent claim to a status which compels its recognition as a reliable means of testing the proceedings of the first Court. It would thus appear that the expediency of the constitution of Benches has to be considered by itself and apart from the question of the reduction of second appeals.

The District Appellate Jurisdiction is now limited to Rs. 5,000 and one result is that litigation of the value of above Rs. 5,000 and below Rs. 10,000 has to be content with a first appeal to the High Court. On the constitution of the Benches the appellate jurisdiction may be safely raised to Rs. 10,000 and this step will have the effect of giving the system greater uniformity. Claims under Rs. 10,000 will be dealt with by the High Court on second appeal and claims over Rs. 10,000 will have the benefit of a second appeal to the Privy Council. Raising downward limit of first appeals to Rs. 10,000 will materially reduce the file of the High Court but second appeals over judgments rendered by District Benches would have to be disposed of by Benches of the High Court and not by single Judges. After all it is a difficult question to decide which system involve greater work, whether the former practice of Benches deciding second appeals finally or the present one of single Judges deciding them and their decisions coming up before a Bench by Letters Patent Appeal even with the limitations introduced by the amended Letters Patent. It is only in few cases relatively that an arguable point of law arises and when one does arise it is desirable to have it decided by a Bench. The admission of a second appeal carries with it a recognition that there is a point of law which admits of argument.

One other suggestion may be permitted to be made here. The settled practice of the Privy Council is to leave concurrent findings of fact undisturbed and to investigate points of fact where the Indian Courts have differed. This provision in the Civil Procedure Code as to second appeals should be amended so as to permit of a second appeal on facts where the Appellate Court has reversed the first Court. This will, no doubt, throw some greater strain on the High Court but there is the advantage that second appeals from concurring judgments will diminish and those only will be admitted which clearly involve a doubtful point of law on the findings. An alteration of the present practice in the direction indicated would give greater force to the recommendation of the Committee to abolish second appeals in suits of under Rs. 1,000 in value and even otherwise some inferior limit has to be fixed for second appeals. The present Civil Procedure Code cuts off the right of second appeals from suits of a small cause nature of less than Rs. 500 in value. Some kind of differentiation between money suits and title suits has to be made and the limits for each category fixed separately. The Provincial Sub-Court is now trying many claims up to Rs. 1,000 as small causes and the second appeal limit for money claims may well be fixed at Rs. 1,000. The Rs. 1,000 limit is by itself a fair limit even in respect of other kinds of litigation, but the difficulty consists in making sure of the real value of the suit. The whole question of the valuation of suits for purposes of jurisdiction has to be fully considered and placed on a logical and practical basis. A judicial system such as ours which depends on values pre-supposes a perfect set of rules determining values and cannot be satisfactorily organised without them. It is a question of finding formulas such as would suit all types of litigation and a comprehensive and elaborate examination of the whole question is necessary.

Granted that District Benches should be constituted to hear first appeals below the value of Rs. 10,000, the details of the scheme may be worked out easily. Two Judges are of the rank of the present District Judge and another of the rank of the present Subordinate Judge, or two Senior Subordinate Judges will answer quite well. The Bench may be located at the District Headquarters without any serious hardship to clients because there is no question of attendance of witnesses. Under modern conditions there are plenty of transport facilities between District Headquarters and up-country stations and the public have become accustomed to undertake trips to and from headquarters for business purposes. The Appellate Court does not require any separate process or copyist establishment. The record of the whole district will be in the custody of the Principal Civil Court and the Principal Civil Judge will retain administrative control of all the Courts save the Appellate Court which will be subordinate only to the High Court. A scheme such as has been sketched above does not appear to present many targets for attack, apart from financial considerations. A layman cannot be expected to deal with the latter, but if a scheme of reform is good in itself the financial problems connected with its introduction must and will be solved in time.

III.

The only thing that remains to consider is the question of the Original Side of the High Court. The present writer has no hesitation in believing that the ordinary function of an Indian High Court lies in appeal, Reference and Revision. There may occur special situations requiring an original trial being held by the High Court but the extraordinary original jurisdiction which the High Court has at present will suffice to meet such emergencies. The exceptional powers possessed by the High Court by way of issuing writs of Habeas Corpus, Certiorari or Mandamus or of dealing with points of law arising on cases stated by authorities statutorily empowered in this behalf like the Income-tax Commissioner should also be available as incidental to a Superior Court of Record. But apart from these cases it is difficult to see why the small area covered by the Presidency-town cannot be parcelled out into four or five Munsifis for suits of Rs. 3,000 and under in value and into two or three judicial districts for all other litigations. The District Appellate Bench should be constituted for the area of the Presidency-town also. There do not appear to be any insuperable barriers in the way of bringing the Original Side into conformity with the condition of things in the mofussal. It may be said that commercial causes dominate in the Original Side and require a special kind of experience. There are at least half a dozen inland towns in India whose commercial importance is growing every day and if the district judiciary are good enough for commercial causes arising in such towns it is difficult to see how they will not do for the commercial litigation of the Presidency-town. Even on the criminal side a state of the law that requires a learned Judge of the highest Court to sit and try a pick-pocket stealing a fountain pen in the Moore Market leaves much to be desired. With the advent of the District Benches mofussal administration is bound to command increasing confidence and the enlightened citizens of Madras are not likely to oppose a measure of reform. The High Court will be relieved of a substantial proportion of its volume of work and can devote greater time to appellate business. It will combine the features of the English Court of Appeal and those of the House of Lords. It would be a Court of second and ultimate appeal in respect of causes under Rs. 10,000 and a Court of first and intermediate appeal in respect of causes over Rs. 10,000 and in respect of the latter the ultimate appeal will lie to the Privy Council.

A word has to be said in respect of Insolvency Jurisdiction and Small Cause Jurisdiction. The present system of assigning these jurisdictions to Sub-Courts whose legitimate work is taken to lie in the disposal of original suits precludes the possibility of these matters receiving their due attention. Insolvency work is becoming increasingly important and raises questions of gravity and intricacy. As for small causes the two circumstances first, that they are summarily tried and secondly, that the decision is not subject to appeal make it the more essential that they should be tried with care. The limit of jurisdiction has now been extended in many instances to Rs. 1,000 and it often happens that the subject-matter of a Small Cause suit represents the whole fortune of the suitor. It is desirable that Courts of exclusive Small Cause Jurisdiction, and Courts of exclusive insolvency jurisdiction are constituted for suitable areas. The Court of Appeal may hear appeals from the decisions of the Insolvency Court also, and a further appeal to the High Court may be limited to cases where the Appellate Court grants leave to appeal.

It is not the object of this article to present an exhaustive and detailed discussion of the points touched. Certain new points have been indicated so as to provoke discussion. Judicial reform is a matter of serious moment and while it should not be undertaken lightly or rashly it should not be indefinitely put off. The time has come for a thorough overhaul and a consideration of the questions raised cannot be dismissed as premature. This article would have more than justified itself if it draws the attention of thoughtful leaders of the profession and the authorities to the points raised and set them thinking with a view to the evolution of a better system.

V. RAGHAVACHARI,
Advocate, Madras.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

MANCHESTER CORPORATION v. FARNWORTH, (1930) A.C. 171 (H.L.).

Corporation—Nuisance—Generating station for electricity—Fumes emitted therefrom—Negligence—If statute exempts the Corporation from liability to damage.

By the Manchester Corporation Act, 1914, the Corporation was empowered to erect a generating station on certain lands in a rural district a considerable distance from the city and to construct electric lines from the generator to the city. The generating station was erected and work begun. The plaintiff, a contiguous farmer, brought the action for abatement of nuisance caused by the sulphurous fumes emitted from the chimneys of the generating station. The plaintiff contended that the 1914 Act was a 'special Act, within the meaning of S. 1 of the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899, which by S. 81 of the Schedule made the undertakers liable for any nuisance that may be caused and that further the defendants cannot rely on the authority of Parliament to cause damage.

Held, by Viscount Sumner and Lord Blanesburgh, that the Manchester Corporation Act, 1914, was not a special Act within the meaning of S. 1 of the Act of 1899 as the 1914 Act does not authorise the supply of electricity 'within any area' but only the erection of a generating station to supply electricity along with other existing stations.

Per Viscount Dunsedin DISSENTING.—"To suppose a generating station which was not also a station of supply would be an absurdity. There is a special provision as to where the current gathered is to be sent, to where the electric wires are to go and within which city the supply is to be made and, therefore, the 1914 Act is a special Act as it 'authorises' the supply of electricity for any public or private purposes within any area."

On the second point, held, that "when Parliament has authorised a certain thing to be made or done in a certain place, there can be no action for nuisance caused by the making or doing of that thing, if the nuisance is the inevitable result of the making or doing so authorised. The onus of proving that the result is inevitable is on those who wish to escape liability for nuisance, but the criterion of inevitability is not what is theoretically possible, but what is possible according to the state of scientific knowledge at the time . . . and practical feasibility in view of situation and of expense". But as the Corporation was indifferent in planning the station and took no skilled advice as to the effect it would have on the neighbourhood, they were liable for the nuisance.

HERBERT CLAYTON AND JACK WALLER, LTD. v. OLIVER, (1930) A.C. 209 (H.L.).

Damages—Contract—Agreement to engage an actor to play a leading part in a comedy—Engagement offered but of a minor part—Refusal to play the part—Actor, if entitled to damages—Measure of damages—Loss of publicity if can be considered.

A certain theatrical producer agreed to engage the respondent an actor for 6 weeks certain to play one of the three leading parts in a musical play intended to be produced. The actor in turn was prohibited from acting elsewhere during the period of the engagement. The actor was offered a minor part which he declined and sued the producer for damages for breach of contract.

Held, that if the contract is a mere engagement of the respondent's services, then the wages lost may be the true measure of damage and the circumstances associated with the termination of the contract cannot be used to increase that sum. But where the contract is to provide a part for the respondent 'to play one of the three leading comedy parts', it is more than a mere contract to render service. An opportunity for such service is contemplated and agreed to be furnished. 'Both parties knew that as flowing from the contract the plaintiff would be billed and advertised as appearing at the Hippodrome, and in the theatrical profession this is a valuable right' and the jury was competent to consider this circumstance in assessing the damages.

Marbe v. George Edwardes (Daly's Theatre), Ltd., (1928) 1 K.B. 269, was rightly decided.

Fechter v. Montgomery, (1863) 33 Beav. 22, followed.

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. MILLER, (1930) A.C. 222 (H.L.).

Income-tax—Right of residence by will of a house—If property assessable to income-tax—Measure of—Duty of trustees to recoup the occupier, if alters liability.

By his trust, disposition and settlement, a husband directed trustees to hold and retain his lands and estates in Manderston and out of the income of his estate generally to make certain payments and in particular all public, parochial and local burdens and to allow his wife, the respondent, to occupy and possess during her lifetime his mansion-house with the effects therein free of rent or taxes. The widow so occupied the house and the question was if she was liable to be assessed to super-tax on a sum representing the annual value of the house and effects. The trustees were empowered to enter the house for purposes of repair or making additions to the furniture and such other purposes. The Lord President held that the trustees were the real occupants and had the right to occupy and use them for every possible purpose and that the widow's was only a privilege of personal residence therein.

Held, that the widow's interest under the will was a right to occupy, which the trustees would be compelled by the Court to recognise. A right to enter is not a right to occupy. The widow is the person to be taxed and the measure of the tax is the annual value of the house and it cannot avail her to say that she does not receive any money in respect thereof.

The fact that under the will, the trustees are to recoup her out of their general fund makes no difference. The liability to the Crown is really her liability.

M'Dougal (or Inland Revenue) v. Sutherland, (1894) 3 Tax Cas. 261 and Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Wemyss, (1924) 8 Tax Cas. 551, disapproved.

Corke (or Inland Revenue) v. Fry, (1895) 3 Tax Cas. 335, right in the result, but wrong so far as it made the power to let, the rigid exclusive test of liability.

BOUZOUROU v. THE OTTOMAN BANK, (1930) A.C. 271 (J.C.).

Master and Servant—Dismissal from service—Transfer of servant from one place to another—Refusal by servant to go—No personal risk involved by going there, though inconvenient—If good ground to refuse.

The appellant was employed by the respondent bank as he was one of the successful candidates at a competitive examination held by the Bank. The Bank had branches in several places. The appellant was transferred from the branch at S to the branch at M, a town in the Asiatic provinces of Turkey but he refused to go on two grounds: (i) that M was not within the contractual ambit of his employment, and (ii) that the order was unreasonable and justified his refusal as he did not know Turkish and the Turkish civil authorities were hostile to him. The Bank thereupon dismissed him from service.

Held, that from the nature of the service it is difficult to assume that the Bank would willingly agree that their employees should not be bound to serve outside the place where the contract was made except with their consent, and such a condition of the contract would require to be clearly established. In the absence of a suggestion that the transfer to M involved any personal danger to the servant by violence or disease, the order cannot be held to be unlawful and the disobedience of such a lawful order justified the dismissal from service.

Turner v. Mason, 14 M. & W. 112, approved.

THE OTTOMAN BANK v. CHAKARIAN, (1930) A.C. 277 (J.C.).

Master and Servant—Servant requesting a transfer on ground of danger to life—Request not granted—Servant fleeing away—Dismissal of servant—If legal—Damages—Measure of.

The respondent was in the permanent employment of the Bank. He was temporarily sent to Constantinople branch to serve there but as his life was in danger in Constantinople from the Turkish authorities, he requested to be transferred outside Turkey and on refusal fled from Constantinople. He was thereupon dismissed from service. The Bank also contended that the respondent had incurred a permanent disability which disabled him from performing his part of the contract.

Held, that the risk of personal danger which caused the respondent's flight was real and justified from the point of his personal safety and that he was not therefore bound to obey the Bank's order to stay at Constantinople. The contentions of the Bank must be tested as at the time of dismissal and as the disability was not then a permanent one, and as there was no suggestion of impossibility of compliance with the respondent's request to move him to a safer place, the contract did not become impossible of performance by the time of dismissal and the breach was therefore all on the side of the Bank.

LORD STRICKLAND v. GIUSEPPE GRIMA, (1930) A.C. 285.

Appeal—Judgment of a tribunal for determining election disputes—High Court of Malta constituted Tribunal by Letters Patent—If an appeal lies to Privy Council.

By Letters Patent of His Majesty for Malta it was ordained that "all questions which may arise as to the right of any person to be or to remain a member of the Senate or the Legislative Assembly shall be referred to and decided by the Court of Appeal in Malta". The election of two of the appellants to be members of the Senate of Malta as representatives there of the Trade Union Council of the island was declared null and void by the Court of Appeal and an appeal was preferred against it to the Privy Council, who originally gave special leave to appeal.

Held, that no appeal lay. His Majesty had advisedly designed his Court of Appeal in Malta to be a Special Tribunal to finally determine all these questions. Decisions on such matters are not decisions of mere ordinary civil rights. The jurisdiction is special and "of a character that ought as soon as possible to become conclusive, in order that the constitution of the Assembly may be distinctly and speedily known". Also "it concerns what, according to British ideas, are normally the rights and privileges of the Assembly itself, always jealously maintained and guarded in complete independence of the Crown so far as they properly exist."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF THE POOR LAW UNION OF TYNEMOUTH, (1930) 1 Ch. 616.

Poor Law—Unemployment due to general coal strike—Guardians of the Poor—Relief to miners by way of loans from the Guardians—Repayment by instalments—Guardians' resolution to release all the debtors as a body—If ultra vires—Reasonable exercise of discretion—What is.

By way of relief to the miners who were out of employment by reason of the general coal strike in 1926, the defendants, a Board of Guardians of the Poor, advanced loans to the families of the miners and other workmen on the condition that the loans should be repaid by the head of each borrowing household in weekly instalments by deductions from the weekly wages, the payments to commence from five weeks after they resumed work. Several had repaid the loans, some were not required to pay because of their low wages and the others were regularly paying their instalments. The Local Government Act, 1929, became law and under it the Board would cease to function from March 31, 1930, and the right to recover the loans advanced to persons resident within Tynemouth County would vest in the relators. In July, 1929, the defendant Board passed a general resolution excusing and cancelling the balance of loans outstanding as from 15th July, 1929.

In an action by the relators for a declaration that such a resolution was ultra vires, held, that the Legislature only empowered the Guardians to treat as a loan the relief which may be given outright in accordance with the regulations and that does not clothe them with all the attributes and rights of the lender under the ordinary contract of loan between individuals. They stand in a fiduciary position to those whose monies are used by them and though they may have power to do such acts as can fairly be regarded as incidental to or consequential upon the statutory power of relieving by way of a loan, they cannot assert a right to release the whole outstanding debt and to make each debtor a present of the amount still due from him without any regard to his individual capacity to re-pay.

Even if it be assumed they have such a general discretion to release the debtors, it must be exercised reasonably. The discretion does not mean that they can do what they like because they are minded to do so but must be such as they ought to do after using their reason and ascertaining the proper course to be followed. It cannot be a proper exercise of discretion to consider solely the interest of the debtors without any enquiry into the ability of all or any of the debtors to repay.

PYTRAM, LIMITED v. MODELS (LEICESTER), LIMITED, (1930) 1 Ch. 639.

Copyright—Wolf cub's head—Design capable of registration under the Act, but not registered—Whether copyright exists—Works of sculpture.

The plaintiff company carrying on business as modellers and sculptors prepared and supplied to a Boy Scouts Association papier-mache models of a wolf cub's head. The defendants copied out the same model and supplied to their customers a number of replicas of the plaintiff's model. In an action for infringement of the copyright of the plaintiffs in their original model, viz., the wolf cub's head,

Held, the copyright was infringed by the defendants, the plaintiff's model having been deliberately copied. But as the model in the case comes within the definition of 'design' in the Patents and Designs Act, 1919, it is capable of being registered under the Act and not having been so registered, there can be no copyright in it. The model was not the defendants' and they made no inquiries as to whose the model was and specifically abstained from making any inquiry and as such it cannot be pleaded that they had no reasonable cause to suspect that the copyright subsisted in the work.

Will—Contingent specific legacy—Accretions to legacy before happening of contingency—If accrues to legatees.

A testator bequeathed to his son and grandson one-third and two-thirds of his ordinary £35 shares in a company, but the legacies were to take effect on the death of his wife. After the testator's death and during the wife's lifetime, the company resolved (i) to capitalise a part of its reserve fund and consolidate the original £35 share with a new £15 share, thereby making the new share one of £50, and (ii) to issue some £10 preferred ordinary shares.

Held, the legacies were contingent but there is no difference between the rule which applies to capital accretions to a vested legacy and capital accretions to a contingent legacy. There being no gift of capital accretions to any one else, the legatee became entitled to the shares as improved.

Will—Testamentary power of appointment—Executor to use his discretion in the selection of the object—Executor to take in default of or until appointment—Release of power by the executor—If valid—Power appendant or appurtenant.

A testator by his will, directed the accumulation of the income of his residuary estate in a particular manner for 21 years from his death and in the events that happened, the trust fund and the accumulations from its income should be held in trust by his brother and another for the benefit of all or any one of a specified class of persons, the brother to appoint by deed the beneficiary. Meanwhile and unless and until the power of appointment was exercised, the brother was to be the beneficiary absolutely. In 1928, the brother exercised the power in favour of some person retaining by the same deed of appointment a power to revoke the appointment. By a later deed he revoked the appointment and released the trust fund from the power to the intent that the power should be absolutely extinguished.

Held, (reversing the decision of Eve, J.), that the power of appointment was not in the nature of a trust or one coupled with a duty of the nature of a trust but only appendant or appurtenant. There was a trust in favour of the brother in default of and until he made an appointment and having regard to the definite terms of the trust, no trust can be spelled out for the benefit of the members of the class nor is there any fetter placed on the donee of the power to prevent him from releasing the power.

FLEXMAN v. CORBETT, (1930) 1 Ch. 672.

Specific performance—Contract to buy a leasehold—Unusual and onerous covenants—If disentitles one to specific performance.

By an agreement, the defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiff the residue of a leasehold house for £800. The agreement was in the form of a letter signed by the defendant agreeing to abide by the terms of the original lease and stating that the defendant understood "that the ground floor and basement is let to a tenant who is holding over as a yearly tenant and who is paying £60 per annum and that vacant possession will be given to me on completion of the house." The original lease contained various covenants by the lessee to do outside painting, to deliver up, to keep in repair, to insure, not to allow building without lessor's consent, not to carry on offensive trades, and to produce assignments; and it also contained a proviso for re-entry upon non-performance of the covenants. The tenant holding over was represented to be a desirable man, but it later was found that he was unsatisfactory and was in arrears of rent. The original lease was not produced or shown to the defendant. The purchaser repudiated the contract.

In an action for return of the deposit and rescission of the contract, Held, what are onerous terms is a question of fact in each case. The terms of the original lease were unusual and onerous. It is not usual to find covenants like that except in cases where large estates were leased out. A purchaser of a lease is not bound to complete the contract if the lease is subject to onerous covenants or to an onerous provision of an unusual character unless, before the agreement was made, he had a fair opportunity of ascertaining for himself the terms of such covenant or subsequently there was a waiver of such objection.

The defendant cannot be deemed to have waived the right to plead the onerousness of the covenants from the mere delay in replying to the reminders of the plaintiff's solicitors.

GHOUGH'S GARAGES, LIMITED v. PUGSLEY, (1930) 1 K.B. 615; 143 L.T. 38.

Landlord and Tenant—Company, a tenant—Statutory right to new lease—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, S. 5—County Court Rules requiring a form of notice—If intra vires—Receiver by debenture-holders—If can take action on behalf of the company after its liquidation.

Under S. 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, a tenant of a holding to which the Act applied could apply for renewal of his lease in certain circumstances. A company was the lessee of certain premises, the lease expiring by June, 1930. The company issued debentures in 1925 by which it charged all its property to secure the money due to the debenture-holders. It also provided that at any time after the moneys became payable under it, the holders might appoint a receiver with power to take "possession of, collect and get in the property charged by the debenture and for that purpose to take any proceedings in the name of the company. . . ." In 1929 a receiver was appointed by the debenture-holders and he filed an action in the name of the company for a new lease of the holding. Later the company was ordered to be wound up by the High Court and the questions were (i) if after the winding up order, the receiver could continue the action, and (ii) if the notice to grant a lease not having been in a 'prescribed form' as required by the County Court rules was good.

Held, the right to take proceedings is just as much a security for the debt as any other rights given by the debenture. It is 'property' and to deprive the debenture-holders of the right to realise a valuable right of the company, because the company has gone into liquidation, is to nullify one of the valuable rights given to the receiver under the debenture.

S. 5 only requires that the tenant should allege and prove that he has sent to the landlord a notice requiring a new lease and the County Court rule requiring it to be in a prescribed manner does not thereby merely regulate the procedure of the County Court but adds a condition to S. 5 and is ultra vires.

BLAY v. POLLARD AND MORRIS, (1930) 1 K.B. 628.

Contract—Oral agreement—Written agreement adding a term to it—One of the parties signing with practically no consideration of its terms—Fraud, not pleaded—Non est factum plea—Contract, if can be rectified.

Two young men A and B, who were carrying on a garage as partners agreed on 4-3-1929 orally to dissolve the partnership as from that date, B agreeing to take over all liabilities incurred after that date. A informed his father, a solicitor about it and he drafted a written agreement embodying the oral terms and added a further term that B was liable to indemnify A in respect of all arrears of rent. B read it and signed but as it was couched in technical language did not understand its implications fully. In an action by A to be indemnified as per that term, B pleaded (i) non est factum, and (ii) mistake on his part. Fraud was not alleged on A's part nor was rectification of the contract pleaded.

Held, B having executed the document knowing it to be an agreement dealing with the rights of the two partners on dissolution of the partnership, he cannot be heard to plead non est factum merely because he would have objected to one of its terms if he had understood it. At the most one term differs from B's intention but there is no misunderstanding as to the nature of the document itself. Where one party reduces to written terms a bargain that has been made, and inserts in it a stipulation which he knows the other party did not intend to promise, he may not be entitled to take advantage of that mistake of the other party. But that rule will not apply where there is no evidence that A knew the other party's mistake. Further, where the insertion is not made by A, the party to the contract but by the solicitor, there must be a finding that A connived at it.

• Statute—Construction—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, S. 60—Remuneration of fisherman—Share of proceeds of the catches of fish—Absence of an express provision in the Shipping Act excluding Civil Court's jurisdiction—If the jurisdiction can be impliedly negatived.

In many cases the fisherman's agreement provides for remuneration by a share in the fishing catch but as a boat may come with a very poor catch in one trip or with a large catch in another, it was agreed that whenever the catch fell short of 3l., the owners should advance such amount as may be necessary to make up 3l. Such sums were advanced and in an action for recovery of those moneys, the defendant pleaded that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction, as the question related to wages within the meaning of S. 387 of the Merchant Shipping Act and that the claim must have been preferred before a Superintendent of the Board of Trade thereunder.

Held, that there is a strong presumption that the jurisdiction which a Court had before the passing of an Act is not excluded by the Act without clear words of exclusion in the Act. This is really a claim for money lent by the plaintiffs to the defendant and not wages and therefore the section did not apply. But even if the section did apply, there was nothing to prevent proceedings started in the County Court from being perfectly valid. The question as to what would happen if the Superintendent was inquiring into the dispute and at the same time an action to determine it was proceeding in the Court left open.

BARRATT v. RICHARDSON AND CRESSWELL, (1930) 1 K.B. 686.

Limitation—Landlord and tenant—Right to re-enter when rent "in arrear for 21 days"—Failure to pay rent for over 12 years—If suit for possession barred.

Under an indenture of lease for 99 years, the defendant got into possession of certain premises and it was provided in the lease deed that rent should be payable on the usual quarter days and if and when any part of the rent should be in arrear for 21 days, whether it should have been legally demanded or not, it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter on the premises. Rent was in arrear from 1914 and in 1924 the lessee assigned the lease to the defendant. In an action by the lessor instituted in 1928 for possession,

Held, the right of re-entry arose afresh each time any part of the rent fell in arrear for 21 days. The breach of covenant is a separate breach on each such occasion and a new right of re-entry occurs each time. The right to rent at each stipulated period continues as long as the relation of landlord and tenant exists, though arrears beyond a certain period may cease to be recoverable. It would be curious to hold that the right to rent should continue but the right of re-entry should cease.

Doe d. Mannion v. Bingham, 3 Ir. L. Rep. 456, not followed.

The defendant deposited the arrears of rent for six years and claimed relief under S. 212 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, under which the Court can relieve against forfeiture "when all the rent and arrears together with the costs" are paid.

Held, S. 212 does not speak of arrears due from the defendant personally but all arrears due from the covenantor under the lease. The arrears referred to in S. 212 is the arrears of rent that could be recovered in a personal action against the covenantor (assignor).

REX v. SCOFFIN, (1930) 1 K.B. 741.

Criminal Law—Commitment to Assizes for sentence—Accused below 21 years of age at date of commitment but above 21 at date of sentence—If can be sentenced to detention in Borstal institution.

An accused was summarily tried and convicted by the Petty Sessions of larceny but as he was then below 21 years, he was sent to the Assizes for sentence under S. 10, Criminal Justice Administration Act, which provided that "if it appears to the Court that the offender is of such age as aforesaid", i.e., not less than 16 nor more than 21 years of age, it may order him to be detained in a Borstal institution. By the date of the sentence by the Court of Assizes, the offender passed his 21.

Held that the age referred to is the age at the date of sentence by the Assizes as under the Act the Petty Sessions could not send an offender to Borstal. The word used is "is" and not "was".

FOWLER v. COMMERCIAL TIMBER COMPANY, LTD., (1930)
2 K.B. 1.

Contract—Company—Employment as managing director for five years—Voluntary liquidation—Plaintiff voting for liquidation—Employment stopped—Company if liable for damages.

A company agreed to employ the plaintiff as managing director for a period of 5 years and a quarter at a fixed salary but within the period, the company went into voluntary liquidation, the plaintiff himself having voted for liquidation. The liquidators in winding up terminated his services. The question was if the plaintiff having consented to the liquidation could complain of repudiation of the agreement and claim damages. There was nothing in the contract as to what should happen to the agreement on liquidation and the winding up resolution would have been passed whether the plaintiff assented to it or not.

Held, a term in a contract is only implied if it is such an obvious term that if the parties had thought of it they must have agreed to it. As a director he was bound to have the interest of the company before him and if in its interests he votes for its liquidation, it cannot be implied that he intended to give up his claim to damages, if as a result of the liquidation, the company puts an end to the employment of the managing director.

Solicitor—Divorce suits by and against husband—Costs of wife—Stray acts of misconduct of wife—Solicitors ignorant of same—Liability of husband to wife's solicitors for costs.

The plaintiffs, solicitors, acted for the wife in proceedings by and against the husband for divorce, the husband's petition alleging acts of adultery by his wife before the plaintiffs began to act on her behalf. In a common law action by the solicitors for their costs,

Held, that the common law allows a wife who is living apart and who has been refused maintenance, to pledge the husband's credit for "necessaries" and in the term "necessaries" is included the power of the wife to instruct a solicitor to defend her from proceedings taken against her by her husband, to appear for her in proceedings taken against her husband by her, etc. This right is founded on the theory of her being an agent of the husband and just as an agent who has been guilty of an act in breach of the contract of agency—e.g., taking a bribe from the other party—forfeits his right to make any claim upon the principal, so also a wife who is unchaste determines her right to pledge the husband's credit. This exception to the general right of the wife to pledge the husband's credit applies even when there has been an isolated act of adultery (committed prior to her pledging the credit) and the solicitor did not know of it. There is no difference for this purpose whether the wife was defending herself or attacking the husband.

NOTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

The Lord Chancellor's Programme.—There was once a famous novelist and he wrote a book called Great Expectations. Perhaps the title will not inaptly serve for the Lord Chancellor's speech at the dinner given to the Judges at the Mansion House on Friday of last week. But there is a difference. In Charles Dickens's book the expectations were not realised, though, as with all good novels, the story had a very pretty ending. Lord Sankey's expectations are no doubt going to be realised, and the only question is, when? On County Court Judges an ever-increasing burden of new work and responsibility is thrown—the third reading of the Housing Bill has been made the occasion for an amendment which adds to the tale—and they are to get an increase of salary. But not yet, the time is not propitious. The Crown Proceedings Bill is going to be taken up some day. But not yet. The liability in contract is plain sailing, but tort is a different matter. So the Government Departments have blocked the Bill. That at least is our reading of Lord Sankey's statement that opinion is divided as to the inclusion of torts. The New Despotism Committee has been appointed and it is going to report. That date, of course, the Lord Chancellor cannot control. Nor need there be any surprise that he is cautious as to making any promises about the reform of procedure, though we gather that he proposes to refer the matter to a mixed committee of business men and lawyers. We hope we are not unduly critical. The powers of even a Lord Chancellor to carry out his good intentions are severely conditioned by circumstances. But all that is possible in realising Great Expectations we doubt not Lord Sankey will do.—L.J., 1930, p. 17.

The Needless Costs of Litigation.—The Scottish appeal just referred to was solely concerned with question of procedure, and is a striking example of the legal difficulties which seem to have become inseparable from workmen's compensation cases. When the scheme was first introduced it was to be so simple that the lawyer would not be wanted, but the result has been very different, and workmen's compensation law has been painfully built up, at the expense of litigants. The matter, in its more general aspect, is the subject of an interesting article in the current Fortnightly Review—"Plain Tales from the Law Courts," by "Benthamite." The writer regards the decline in litigation as being due to its excessive cost, not so much in the cost of the actual decision as in the cost of incidental or interlocutory arguments and decisions which are useful for perfecting the procedure, but with which the litigants themselves have no concern. Of course, substantial questions of law are also decided in this way, and when the result is reached, then, as "Benthamite" observes, the parties "get what they sought and, if the decisions in their cases become recognised precedents, perhaps they should be grateful for their fame." But the point of his criticism is that the litigants' money is "spent profusely in obtaining a decision on some point of judicial procedure which is utterly meaningless to them and which they never wanted." For lawyers the examples which are given in the article are not required. Every practitioner is familiar with the waste of money over futile questions of procedure. For mere waste of money, the litigation under the Rent Restrictions Acts stands pre-eminent. And Benthamite, ending where we started, adds "A study of the evolution of our law of Workmen's Compensation would be very interesting in this connection."—L.J., 1930, p. 18.

A Reformer's Remedies.—Benthamite's stories of the ineptitude of legal procedure, however entertaining, would be useless if he had not remedies to suggest. At present, he says, where interesting or new points of law or procedure are involved, our system does not bother much about the question whether the stakes at issue are worth the cost of litigation. "A dispute about a few pounds may end up in the House of Lords with a bill of costs of several thousand pounds. So long as the final decision is sound in law, our Courts are content, even if the loser has to pay an amount for legal expenses that is out of all proportion to the amount of the stakes." And the remedies are aimed at the simplification both of substantive law and of procedure. As to substantive law he would have more codification and more scientific drafting of statutes. That is the task of the Legislature, and there is the preliminary question how to get the Legislature to do its work properly. And gaps and uncertainties in the law he would refer to a legal tribunal which would solve them without throwing the expense on litigants. The suggestion is interesting, but probably impracticable. As to procedure, he would restore Lord Selbourne's policy in the Judicature Act of 1873, and allow only one appeal. That, of course, would reduce expense and give litigants a quicker result, though we should miss the judgments in the House of Lords on which our case law is mainly founded. And Benthamite would simplify legal proceedings by stopping the preliminary skirmishings. This last is the best of his suggestions, and would go far to reduce the costs of administering justice. This, he says, and probably with truth, is far more costly than in any country save the United States.—L.J., 1930, p. 19.

The Minister and the Judge.—It is a notable fact that when the Divisional Court recently considered the question as to whether a certain order of the Minister of Health was ultra vires and invalid, the Lord Chief Justice held that the order in question was intra vires and valid: and he gave a reasoned and admirable judgment. Swift, J., alone of a Bench of three Judges, held that it was essential to the validity of the Order that it should be preceded by fulfilment of the steps or stages prescribed in the Act under which it purported to have been made. Swift, J., delivered a forceful judgment and uttered strong words of and concerning the new despotism.

And now the Court of Appeal, consisting of Scrutton, Greer, and Slesser, L.JJ., have unanimously preferred the conclusions of Swift, J., to those of the majority in the Divisional Court. But there is still the House of Lords.

The author of the "New Despotism" is no lover of bureaucratic legislation and the powers which in many matters place a Minister above the law, and his judgment in this case reveals that his judgments are in no wise affected by his dislike of the result to which they lead.—L.J., 1930, p. 269.

The Shortage of Judges in France.—The French Chamber is engaged in the discussion of a bill for judicial re-organisation, which will probably involve the re-establishment of many of the local tribunals abolished a few years ago.

Several proposals have been made for dealing with the shortage of suitable candidates for the posts of Magistrates and Judges, who in France are not appointed from among members of the Bar but from a separate hierarchy. The shortage is no doubt largely due to the smallness of salaries, which had not been changed between 1883 and the date of the war, and although slightly increased in 1919, remain on a level which puts that of a Judge of the first class at the equivalent of only 225*l.* a year, and that of a Judge of Appeal at only 385*l.*

These salaries are now to be increased, although the Government refused to pledge itself to multiply 1914 salaries by five and thus put them on a level with the depreciation of the franc. The Chamber obeyed by defeating the proposal.

Two suggestions were made for increasing the available personnel of Judges, but both were rejected by the Chamber. One was to adopt a system of one Judge in each Court instead of three as at present. The other was to allow women to become Magistrates and Judges.

Those in favour of the latter suggestion pointed out that women are judges in America, and that in France, although they do not have the suffrage, they have been allowed to be called to the Bar for thirty years. They can also be Professors of Law, and can thus train magistrates.

Moreover, the anomalous position exists that in certain circumstances the presiding judge may call upon the senior advocate present to fill a temporary vacancy on the Bench, but may not do so if she is a woman.—The Observer.—L.J., 1930, p. 274.

The Cost of Litigation.—Considerable public attention has been given lately to the Report of the Parliamentary and Commercial Law Committee of the London Chamber of Commerce on the Expense of Litigation, which has been adopted by the Council of that body and has been sent to the Lord Chancellor, the Bar Council, and the Law Society. Having regard to the source from which it comes, the Report deserves and will, no doubt, receive the careful consideration of all the interests concerned. We cannot attempt to deal with it adequately in this column, and we propose to consider it more at length in the course of the next week or two; but it states very clearly the problem to be faced, and makes a number of practical suggestions for dealing with the position. There is no doubt but that public opinion will demand some measure of reform in the near future which will make High Court litigation less expensive to the litigant; and it is by no means impossible that this Report may result in a move in that direction being made. The matter is one of much difficulty, and proposed changes will require to be very carefully considered; but the Report in question suggests a number of methods by which the cost of litigation could be sensibly reduced without impairing the efficiency of our judicial system, and any unobjectionable changes of procedure which would have that result would be very welcome.—L.J., 1930, p. 292.

A Soviet Marriage.—The Court of Appeal (Times, 16th inst.) has reversed the decision last December of Hill, J., in Nachimson v. Nachimson (46 T.L.R. 166), that the Divorce Court has no jurisdiction in respect of a Russian marriage under Soviet law, since such a marriage is not a marriage at all. He relied on the definition of marriage by Lord Penzance in Hyde v. Hyde (L.R. 1 P. & D. 130) as "the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others." The State, indeed, may dissolve the marriage, put an end to the status, and discharge the parties from the obligations of the contract; but under Soviet law either party can dissolve the marriage at will, and in Mr. Justice Hill's view, this was inconsistent with the voluntary life-long union which is the essence of marriage. But the Court of Appeal regard the mode of termination of the marriage as irrelevant to the question of its original validity. If in its inception it was valid by the law of the country where it was made, that is enough, and the marriage is treated as valid here, provided at least the local law does not permit polygamy. How it may be terminated is a different matter, and does not affect the existence of the marriage until it is terminated. Hence the Court of Appeal were unanimous in holding that the marriage, being when it was made a valid Russian marriage, must be recognised as valid here. Prima facie there is much to be said for Mr. Justice Hill's view that if a polygamous marriage is excluded, a marriage dissoluble at the will of either party must also be excluded. Each is opposed to the idea of Christian marriage. But the polygamous marriage is bad at the start. The Soviet marriage is good to begin with, and may, in fact, not be terminated except by death. Analogies may be found in other branches of the law. A revocable voluntary settlement, for instance, is an effective disposition of the property until revoked, and the Revenue authorities require the usual stamp to be paid on it.—L.J., 1930, p. 346.

Discretion in Divorce.—In commenting recently (ante, p. 345) on the judgment of Lord Merrivale in Apted v. Apted (Times, 20th May), we referred to the use by Jeune, P., in Constandini v. Constandini (1903, P. 246, 259) of the maxim that a wrongdoer ought not to profit by his own wrong as a reason for refusing divorce where the petitioner had contributed to the misconduct of the respondent. We questioned whether a matter of divorce ought to be determined by maxims drawn from other branches of the law. Sir Ellis Hume-Williams, K.C., makes the same point when in a letter to The Times of the 23rd May he deprecates the use of the rule, founded, he says, on the Ecclesiastical Law, that a man must come to the Court with clean hands: usually regarded as a rule of Equity, but Equity may have adopted it in early days from an ecclesiastical source. However, Sir Ellis's contention is that the conduct of the parties is not the only consideration in divorce, and the good of the community has to be considered as well as the future of the individuals. Where marriage has been such a complete failure that each party has started a fresh establishment and has been living for years in probably open adultery, is it, he asks, really in the interests of the community to refuse for that reason to dissolve a tie which each has abandoned? Recognising the difficulty that Judges feel in exercising the discretion under section 178 of the Judicature Act, 1925—and we doubt whether, for practical purposes, the difficulty has been reduced by the judgment in Apted v. Apted—he would revise the section, and he thinks an Act should be passed providing that no petitioner should forfeit his or her right to a divorce on the ground of his or her own adultery unless a Judge should otherwise order. That, no doubt, would facilitate the task of Judges, and tend to uniformity of decision. But the difficulty of passing such an Act would probably be very great. It has not hitherto been found possible even to get Parliament to consider the Majority Report of the late Lord Gorell's Commission.—L.J., 1930, p. 382.

Constructive Contempt in Chancery Proceedings.—Applications for the committal to prison, on the ground of contempt of Court, of persons alleged to have made or published statements likely to affect the course of justice are naturally almost always made in cases which are for trial by a jury, and it is but rarely that such applications are necessary in Chancery proceedings. But a motion came before Mr. Justice Maugham last week in H. W. Dillon & Sons, Ltd. v. The William Thomas Shipping Co., Ltd. (Times, May 31), by which it was asked that Sir Robert Thomas and the editor of certain Liverpool newspapers should be committed for an alleged contempt. The action was a debenture-holder's action, and a receiver had been appointed by the Court on the ground of jeopardy. Sir Robert Thomas, who was stated to be governing director of a company which managed the business of the defendant company, gave an interview, in the course of which he made certain reflections on the conduct of the plaintiffs in applying for the appointment of a receiver. The only point taken by the respondents was that statements of such a nature could not possibly prejudice the mind of the Chancery Judge before whom the proceedings in the debenture-holders' action might come. This was, of course, true, but it did not, as Mr. Justice Maugham held, prevent what had been done being punishable as a contempt of Court; since if such conduct were permitted, the actions of the parties attacked might be influenced, and other parties might be deterred from approaching the Court; and these considerations applied with particular force to representative actions. The respondents, who apologised for their contempt, were ordered to pay the costs. Although such cases as this are not common, they are not unprecedented. The matter is discussed in Sir John Fox's Contempt of Court, p. 115; in Cann v. Cann, (1754) 2 Ves. San. 520, a woman was committed for publishing, at the defendant's instance, an advertisement relating to an answer put in by the defendant, and in Little v. Thompson, (1839) 2 Beav. 129, Lord Langdale, M.R., ordered the editor of a newspaper to pay the costs of a motion in respect of reflections on the plaintiff and his witnesses published before decree.—L.J., 1930, p. 382.

Lord Mansfield and Circumstantial Evidence.—Judges have not at all times extolled the value of circumstantial evidence. For example, there was the case where Lord Mansfield, as Chief Justice, presided over the trial of a Catholic priest who was charged, under an Act of William III, with the crime, then current, of saying Mass. If proved, the offence was punishable with imprisonment for life. Determined to secure an acquittal, his Lordship explained to the jury that they must not infer either that the prisoner was a priest because he appeared to be saying Mass or that he was really saying Mass because he appeared to be a priest. The jury took the hint and returned a speedy verdict of "not guilty."

Lord Campbell criticised Lord Mansfield for that performance, and likened it to that of a certain Judge of long ago who disapproved strongly of the game laws. It was proved before him that the defendant, being in a field with two dogs and armed with a gun, had fired at a covey of partridges and that two of the said covey had fallen immediately after the discharge of the shot aforesaid. The Judge directed the jury that, in the absence of definite and direct evidence as to the cause of death, it was their duty to assume that the birds had died of fright.—L.J., 1930, p. 392.

The India Report.—The complications of the existing Central and Provincial Governments in India reflect the complications of the political and social conditions on which they are based. India under the rule of a Governor-General and his Council, responsible only to the Secretary of State, and of Provincial Governors responsible only to the Governor-General, was a comparatively simple matter. But when growing native desires called for satisfaction by the participation of Indians, whether Hindus or Moslems, in the Government and in the election of representative bodies, a problem was set which it is still for the future to solve. Towards that solution the Report of the Simon Commission is likely to make a notable contribution. The Government of India Act, 1919, with a Preamble declaring that it was the declared policy of Parliament to provide for the increasing association of Indians in every branch of Indian administration, was a definite advance in this direction, but, as regards the Provinces, it introduced the curious system of Dyarchy, under which the functions of Government were divided; some—education, agriculture, public health and public works—being transferred to the Governor acting with Ministers who are responsible to elected Councils; and others—such as police, justice and revenue—being reserved to the Governor acting with a Council, the members of which are appointed by the Crown and must not exceed four in number. The only definite finding in the part of the Report at present issued is that Dyarchy has not been successful. It has not been found possible in practice to observe this division of functions, and "the underlying and fundamental conception of the dyarchic system—complete responsibility of Ministers in a certain defined field and in that field only—has become hopelessly obscured." The Act of 1919, however, was experimental, and provided for the appointment at the end of 10 years of a Commission to inquire into its working. This appointment was somewhat accelerated, but otherwise the inquiry has been held as intended, though without the general co-operation of representative Indians which was at first anticipated.—L.J., 1930, p. 397. • •

Mr. Gladstone and the Beauty of the Law.—It would be strange if the fascinating series of extracts from the Gladstone Papers which have been appearing in The Times did not contain something of interest to lawyers, and we find it in his ready acceptance of Lord Campbell's theory as to the source of Shakespeare's legal knowledge. The Lord Chancellor had sent him a copy of his book, "Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements," the thesis of which was that the numerous legal terms and legal allusions to be found in the Plays could only have come from one who had had legal experience. "Your facts," wrote Gladstone, in acknowledging the book, "as a whole leave me in a comfortable persuasion on the case as it stands, that our greatest poet was once an attorney's clerk." But Sir Plunket Barton, in his recent "Links between Shakespeare and the Law," which appeared in The Law Journal, found nothing more than "a surprising facility in picking up scraps of legal lore and turning them to dramatic account. There is no necessity for inferring that he must have had any training or practice in the profession of the Law" (64 L.J., 159). Apparently Campbell had gone on to enlarge on the beauty of the law, and Gladstone replied: "I quite understand your doctrine that the driest forms of law have their own interest and attraction, almost their own proper beauty"; but he demurred to this attraction in the abstract, and thought that some special connection with the law was required to enable the observer to see its beauty. And just when, to the true lawyer, a rule of law attains its full beauty, Parliament has no further use for it, and so such things as Contingent Remainders, and the Rule in Shelley's Case, are now matters of legal history only.—L.J., 1930, p. 398.

Marriage and the Prince of Wales.—The Prince of Wales has long been of age when it is possible for him to marry without the consent of his Parent. No Prince of Wales, being a descendant of His Majesty King George II, says 12 Geo. 3, c. 11, is to be capable of contracting matrimony without the previous consent of the Sovereign signified under the Great Seal and declared in Council; and every marriage celebrated without that consent first had and obtained is to be null and void.

But a proviso adds that should such a descendant, being 25 years of age, persist in his resolution to marry against the wishes of the Sovereign, he may give twelve months' notice to the Privy Council and thereafter lead the lady of his choice to the altar. Such a marriage is to be good, "as if this Act had never been made," unless within the twelve months both Houses of Parliament have expressed their joint and several disapprobation of the union. So Lords and Commons must agree in their disapproval, or the marriage so contracted after such notice is valid.

It may be well to add that there is no reason to suppose that His Royal Highness has asked for permission or been refused it by any of the prescribed authorities.—L.J., 1930, p. 408.

Law and Ethics.—Much is heard in these days of the inclusion in the school curriculum of instruction in elementary law; and it is a suggestion for which there is very much to be said. It is highly desirable that the average man should know something of the general scheme of the law under which he lives and on which he is dependent for the carrying on of everyday existence, and many a heartbreak would be saved were there a more general familiarity with its basic principles. Even of more importance, however, to the cause of good citizenship than a knowledge of the content of the law is a just appreciation of its spirit and function, the ends it is designed to serve and the relations subsisting between it and administration on the one hand, and between it and morality on the other. From this point of view, as well as for its qualities of lucidity and rhetoric, the address of Lord Hewart on Law, Ethics, and Legislation, broadcast on Monday last, is of value, and it is to be hoped that the movement thus initiated will be extended in scope. Every lawyer knows that it is a failure to appreciate the gulf fixed between law and ethics that is at the root of the many gibes that are levelled at the "unfairness" of the law, and with this Lord Hewart dealt with his usual aptness of phrase when he said:

"To turn from law and legislation to ethics is to pass into a different atmosphere and a larger room," and again:

The moralist may say "Blessed are the pure in heart." But it is inconceivable that a statute should provide, for instance, that "after the passing of this Act any person who is not pure in heart shall be guilty of a misdemeanour." Nor would the matter be made any easier if the statute went on to provide that lack of purity of heart, and its symptoms, should be defined by a government department in rules and orders having the same effect as if they were contained in the Act.

After laying stress on the necessity that laws should keep pace with and not outstrip the moral standard of the community if they were to be effective, the Lord Chief Justice at the close of his speech struck a sterner and more serious note:

The conclusion, therefore, may well be that, so far as there is a relation between law and ethics, the true function of law is to remove the obstacles which injustice and oppression of any kind put in the way of free development. And it goes without saying that free development means self-control quite as much as self-assertion. Perhaps one of the most potent causes of the present discontent is the tendency to lay stress on rights rather than duties. . . . Yet the real progress of humanity probably depends far more on the conception of duty than on the conception of rights.

Divorce Facilities.—For divorce as well as local government the 1st April was a fateful date, for it is from that day that jurisdiction in divorce is extended to eight additional assize towns and fifteen district registries are added to those at which proceedings may be commenced. The new arrangements have been anxiously awaited by provincial law societies, to whom they will mean a more even distribution of the Poor Persons burden, and will be welcomed also in the public interest as carrying a step further the process of doing away with the legal disabilities of the poorer subject. Also, as one of the Judges recently acutely observed, a hearing in the neighbourhood of the parties' homes, though possibly unpopular with them on the ground of publicity, is likely to facilitate the not too easy task of that watchdog of morals, the King's Proctor.—L.T., 1930, p. 298.

Slum Clearance.—There is no thoughtful citizen, whatever the colour of his politics, who is not painfully aware of the tremendous obstacle to real social progress the over-crowded and insanitary slums of our big towns present, and there is no one who would not, personal considerations apart, welcome some device for accelerating the slow pace of reform in that direction. For this reason there is bound to be in the House a general approval of the spirit animating the Government's Housing (No. 2) Bill, as it is called, whatever criticism its detailed provisions may provoke. How may the general body of ratepayers best be encouraged by the State not only to wipe out whole areas of hopeless squalor and to provide healthy and attractive substitutory accommodation for the teeming population turned out, but also to conduct a vigorous campaign against the evils of deterioration and over-crowding wherever in their area they raise their head? The Bill, into the details of which it is not proposed to enter here, contains features designed to secure greater method, expedition, and thoroughness. In the first place, any local authorities putting up proposals for demolishing property must first satisfy themselves that the working class population displaced can be housed in existing houses or that it is possible, financially and otherwise, for the council to provide new accommodation in advance of displacement. Again, whether the scheme be one for complete clearance of a certain area, or for its "improvement" by thinning out and re-arrangement of streets and partial demolition, or merely for the destruction of isolated insanitary houses, State assistance shall no longer be based on the loss estimated to be incurred by the authority, but shall take the form of an annual grant for forty years based on the number of displaced persons for whom they have provided accommodation. Finally—and this is a provision certain to provoke conflict—it shall no longer be obligatory on the authority to purchase and destroy property, the Bill providing that owners may be compelled themselves to clear a given site of buildings within a given short period.—L.T., 1930, p. 298.

Gretna Green Again.—In the case of Sefton-Toms v. Stirling, disposed of by Mr. Justice Maugham last Saturday, the plaintiff asked for an order that the trustees of her settlement should transfer to her, as the person absolutely entitled, substantial trust funds which she had settled on her first marriage in 1926. The first marriage was an unhappy one, and in March, 1928, there was a decree nisi which was made absolute in October of that year. There were no children of the marriage. In November, 1929, the plaintiff executed an appointment of the funds to herself, but a difficulty arose owing to the fact that on September 29, 1929, she went through a form of marriage at Gretna Green. If that marriage was valid, the execution of the appointment was not, as no power existed during coverture. She had since regularly married her Gretna Green travelling companion. It was proved that the couple left London on the 28th September, arrived at Gretna Green on the 29th, and went straight to the blacksmith's shop. The certificate, which bore a picture of the smithy, was signed, "Richard Rennison, priest." The plaintiff's husband admitted that he had never been in Scotland before the 28th September last, and that he had spent the previous three weeks in London. At the smithy he and his wife had held hands over the anvil. The blacksmith had asked whether they were single and had then told him to put the ring on his wife's finger, and had pronounced them man and wife. They had not been asked whether either of them had been resident in Scotland for the twenty-one days required by the Act of 1856. His Lordship had no difficulty in deciding that the ceremony at Gretna Green was an idle form which did not invalidate or, in any way affect the execution of the power conferred by the settlement, and he accordingly ordered the trustees to transfer the settled funds to the plaintiff subject to the payment of their costs.—L.T., 1930, p. 298.

Scottish Irregular Marriages.—The Scottish marriage laws often strike English lawyers as strange and unexpected, while their details are somewhat difficult to remember. Irregular marriages in Scotland are contracted (i) per verba de praesenti, (ii) by promise subsequente copula, or (iii) by "habit and repute." As regards a marriage of the first kind, the consent must, of course, be given by each to each in all seriousness, and when that is so, and the consent is to a present marriage, it constitutes ipsum matrimonium even before consummation takes place. When intercourse is claimed as constituting a marriage of the second kind there must have been a definite promise of marriage which has been relied on: mere courting is not sufficient. When habit and repute are put forward as constituting a marriage, the repute must have existed among friends and equals with good opportunities of judging and before whom a man would not be likely to pass off his mistress as his wife, for, as Lord Watson said in the Dysart Peerage case, (1881), "when a man takes his mistress with him to an hotel, or goes with her to a shop to buy baby linen, the probability is that he will prefer describing her as his wife to explaining the true position," and, therefore, evidence from such quarters will have no weight. The cohabitation must last for some years and must be in Scotland—not, for instance, in the Isle of Man, as occurred in one case. Lord Brougham's Act of 1856, referred to in the Sefton-Toms case, was passed to check border marriages. It required that one of the parties to a marriage "by declaration, acknowledgment, or ceremony" should have his or her usual place of residence in Scotland, or should have lived there for twenty-one days next preceding the marriage. It does not, it appears, apply to the second and third kind of marriages mentioned above. A "clandestine" marriage in Scotland is one where the religious ceremony "gangs agley" because banns are not duly published or because the celebration is by a "trafficking priest," i.e., a layman who deceives the parties by pretending to be a priest. Such a marriage may be valid as an irregular marriage.—L.T., 1930, p. 299.

No Innocent Man Hanged.—Whether the capital punishment controversy is to be settled by assertion and counter-assertion we are very doubtful. Authoritative statements are put forward by persons of experience both one way and the other, but on some subjects the ipse dixit of even the greatest is of little value. Personal temperament counts for too much. It is, too, an age which will not accept a statement without asking why it is made. We are, therefore, glad to see Lord Buckmaster sceptical upon the assertion of the negative, that "no innocent man is ever hanged." It is interesting to observe that in his evidence before the Select Committee now sitting, he used the same line of argument as we adopted in discussing this point (see p. 2 of our issue of 4th January last). It is, perhaps, a coincidence that he uses the same illustrative cases as we did—Slater, Beck and Habron—or may one conclude that our paper is perused by high judicial authority. We advocate no pronounced views upon capital punishment, but we repeat that, if it is essential to the case in its favour that no mistake can possibly be made, then the death penalty stands condemned. In fact both sides can produce solid arguments one way and the other. The "no possible mistake" nonsense is a mere sop to soft-heartedness. The question is one to be settled on the balance of advantage to the community. The personal view of the writer is that there is a slight balance in favour of an experiment in abolition, and he would like to see an Act prohibiting the pronouncing or execution of the death penalty for a period of say five years, the matter thereafter to come up annually in the Expiring Laws Continuance Bill.—S.J., 1930, p. 207.

Induction of Chief Justice Hughes.—American journals have a genius for devising laconic captions for their news paragraphs, and these, although amusing enough, are sometimes apt to strike the English reader as lacking in dignity. Thus, when Archbishop Davidson resigned the Primacy of the English Church the fact was announced in an American journal with the laconic heading "Canterbury Quits," a mode of reference to the aged and dignified cleric which, to say the least, was in doubtful taste. Of course, no offence was intended any more than when more recently an American legal journal headed a paragraph with the somewhat abrupt line: "Hughes takes oath as Chief Justice." But this is a way which Americans have, and of which, although we rarely think of it, we have a counterpart in the time-honoured practice of law reporters in giving merely the surname of counsel who argued a case, unless, indeed, to avoid confusion with another barrister bearing the same patronymic, initials have to be added. Although, however, the American journal docks the new Chief Justice of his Christian names in the heading referred to, it is only fair to add that these are fully given in the body of the paragraph where we are told that the ceremony of his induction was simple but impressive. Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, who has been a judge for the long period of forty-eight years, twenty-eight of which have been on the bench of the Supreme Court, and of which he is now the senior member, presided on the occasion, made the announcement of Mr. Taft's resignation—his death occurred shortly afterwards—and the appointment of Mr. Hughes, and then he directed the clerk of the Court to administer the judicial oath to Mr. Hughes. Complying with the usual practice in the Federal Courts, the new Chief Justice raised his right hand, read the oath, and then signed it for the records. The ceremony, it will be observed, closely resembles that of the swearing in of judges of the English High Court. Our Scottish neighbours have a more elaborate procedure, actually requiring the newly appointed judge to go through his trials, first in a Court of first instance, and secondly in the Inner House of the Court of Session. Suggestions have been made for the abolition of this procedure, but so far without result.—S.J., 1930, p. 223.

Human Sterilisation.—It is not realised in this country how far the eugenicists have proceeded to carry their theories into effect in some parts of the world. The Hungarian midwife whom a recent trial showed to have supplied arsenic to wives and mothers burdened with the idle mouths of chronic invalid relatives was but turning to her own advantage the stern economic pressure upon her neighbours, although incidentally she was in some cases furthering the elimination of the congenitally unfit. But elsewhere the State itself assumes the eugenic function. In California, between 1910 and 1929, six thousand and fifty-five operations have been performed in public institutions of the State designed to prevent reproduction of the human species. Generally speaking, this practice has been carried on under express statutory provisions definitely aimed at preventing the propagation of mental defectives and other unfit persons, and these statutes have been ruled by the State Courts and the United States Supreme Court to be constitutional. Those performing the operations are relieved by law of civil or criminal liability when acting within the statutes. It is a surprising picture. Control of the individual by the community can be carried to no higher point, and what is truly remarkable, it occurs in a land where personal liberty has been the watchword of the people from their very beginnings. California does not stand alone, though that State heads the list in this matter. How far the object aimed at is being achieved can be but the subject of a guess. The factor of heredity operates oddly, and it may be that by suppressing the unfit, the genius may also be accidentally eliminated. The final outcome of such interference is, in any case, exceedingly likely to differ from the expected.—S.J.; 1930, p. 240.

Authors on the Bench.—An eminent practitioner, since deceased, was once heard to say that he read nothing but law. The profundities of the science he certainly knew, but how much he lost by shutting himself off from the great field of humane literature it is impossible to estimate. Happily, many judges whose daily lives are spent in expounding "the lawless science of our law" do not confine their studies within purely professional limits, and every now and again give evidence of their skill in the domain of criticism and appreciation of the great writers of the past. The fine classical learning of the Lord Chief Justice is, as we all know, frequently exhibited in an apt quotation or felicitous phrase, just as his skill in marshalling his facts and presenting them in a lucid arrangement was shown in his recent book on "The New Despotism." Mr. Justice Mackinnon is another member of the Bench whose literary studies find expression in the careful editing and annotation of some English classic. A specialist not only in commercial law, he is likewise a specialist in all the learning that has gathered round the incomparable Jane Austen, and the "Old Benchers" of Charles Lamb; and these he has now followed up by an admirable edition of Fanny Burney's "Evelina," the novel which on its first appearance took captive such men as Burke, Windham, Gibbon, Reynolds, Sheridan and Johnson, the last named greatly preferring it to the writings of Fielding—an opinion which, however, has scarcely been shared by posterity, excellent though "Evelina" is not only for its story, but for the pictures it affords of contemporary life and manners. In this little book the learned Judge has found a subject to his very heart's content, and his copious annotations, the result of much research, will inspire his readers with not a little of his own enthusiasm.—S.J., 1930, p. 253.

CONTEMPORARY LEGAL LITERATURE.

At a time when the air is surcharged with ideas of reform in law school courses, it is opportune to find the useful and thought-provoking article "Making Lawyers" contributed by Professor John Dickinson of Pennsylvania University to North Carolina Law Review, (1930, June Part). It deals with the curriculum in the University of Pennsylvania, but the discussion of the subject is general and of general application. It must be admitted that neither the law school course alone nor mere work in a lawyer's office will be sufficient to equip a man to the bar but a happy combination of both is necessary. The law-apprentice who has not the theoretical training in a law school may get a good training in every-day rules of procedure and evidence and in drafting the familiar types of instruments current in the community in which his master practises. He may also acquire a working ability to search titles, and even prepare pleadings in familiar cases. But, as the Professor says, it is necessarily limited to routine. "His law, in other words, comes to him as a matter of habit rather than of understanding and in consequence he is subject, like all who rely exclusively on habit, to the disadvantage of not being equipped to face other than familiar situations. But now when new branches of law and variety of situations spring up with the changing needs of society, a preliminary legal training is necessary to guide the student and help him to tackle the problems. The task of the lawyer does not stop with merely picking up the lex scripta but he has to develop law through his arguments before courts.

The real quest of the Professor is to see what best and how much could be taught in a law school to fit the student for this ideal. The law school, he says, has two tasks before it:—

(1) to equip students with knowledge of a large enough body of law to serve as an orientation and starting point for learning the additional law they will need from day to day in practice;

(2) to habituate them to dealing with the application of law and with gaps where no legal rule exists.

The case system of instruction has some advantages but in the limited period of the college course it is not possible to take to it. There are essential subjects and "elective" or optional subjects to be taught in the college. What are essential and what are not depends largely on the needs of society at the time. The Professor gives an instructive table to make this point showing the degree of prominence attached to the different subjects during the times of Blackstone and Kent and in Pennsylvania itself during 1871, 1874 and 1930.

The writer points out towards the end that with the rise in importance of new branches of law in fields like corporations, taxation, public utilities and administrative law, some of these subjects must be taught in a law school as essential subjects along with contracts, torts, evidence, procedure, wills, trusts, etc. The attempt of the University must be to try and compress the time necessary for the other subjects without in the least degree affecting efficiency in the training so that it may thrust in these subjects.

The writer refutes the attempt on the part of some reformers to classify law in accordance with human activity like "Law of business," "Family Law," "Criminal Law and Criminology." But as the Professor points out several subjects will get into every branch of this classification and will tend to reduplication rather than compression. The better course will be to take up the abstract juristic classification and in dealing with any general rule to point out any slight variations that may be in their application to different branches of law. The task of the law student is not research. He has hardly time for it and however much it may be useful to have treatises on individual subjects like Banking, Real Estate Practice and so on, the concern of the student is primarily with legal categories; and their action on social or economic facts must be brought before him in the course of directing his attention to the former.

The distinction between possession and custody is very thin indeed and it is not easy to define when exactly a servant can be said to be in possession of his employer's effects. This distinction becomes very material in the Criminal Law. The note to R. v. Harding, (1929) 46 T.L.R. 105: 21 Cr.A.R. 166 in the Law Quarterly Review for April, 1930, points out that the decision will not be regretted, but that the basis of the decision is shaky. In R. v. Harding, the Court of Criminal Appeal held that when A broke into a house and forced a maid-servant, the only person then in the house, the master being in the garden, to give him her master's coat, A robbed the maid-servant of the coat. The case in R. v. Deakin and Smith was relied on. The note points out that the Judges only referred to the short summary of it in 2 East's Pleas of the Crown at p. 653 and that the fuller report of it in 2 Leach 862 shows that the very case on hand of a servant living in the house was put before them and distinguished. Deakin's case went off more on the argument of ab inconvenienti and whatever may be said of the case "where the servant's charge is to be executed at a distance from the master and where the manner of the execution is necessarily left in a great degree to the discretion of the servant," the note thinks that it cannot apply to the present case where the coat was not specially entrusted to her and the master was within call.

"Crime is an organized business, in many respects the best and most highly organized business of the day. These modern criminal gangs plan their crimes weeks in advance, fixing the day and the hour and the place. They locate their high-powered automobiles on different sides of the spot or place where the crime is to be committed, their sentries engaging the attention of the policemen on duty; their trigger men, as they are called, do the shooting if necessary. They have their lawyers employed in advance if they happen to be caught, surety companies arranged with to provide bail bonds for them if arrested and arraigned in court—all of this done beforehand—their alibis arranged so that if apprehended they can prove themselves to have been somewhere else at the time of the commission of the crime."

This is the statement made by Hon. William McAdoo, Chief Magistrate of New York City, before the Baumes Committee of the New York Legislature and quoted by Mr. Martin Conboy in his article "Organized Crime as a Business" contributed to the New York Law Quarterly Review. The writer describes several instances where the commission of the crime was all pre-arranged and even methods of escape pre-conceived. There seem to be cases where even the plea of alibi were arranged for in the event of apprehension. The individual crimes due to individual's passions are stated to be only 30 per cent. while the crimes organised for profit are 70 per cent. and of this the individual crimes are all efficiently apprehended and handled but only a small percentage of the major criminal is apprehended and even when apprehended, a good percentage of them escape. The writer says that the defect is in the law "which concentrates attention upon the individual charged with crime, and deals with him, when apprehended, as a free citizen, rather than as a soldier in an army by which society is continuously and systematically despoiled." The writer examines the reasons for the growth of the organisation but whatever they may be, it is necessary that means should be found to combat those organisations by bringing to book the ringleaders of the organisations, who work behind the screens. The actual doer of the crime is often an insignificant person who does not mind much whether he is within or without the prison. It cannot be denied that if, as the writer appeals to, the people wanted the crime business to be ended and co-operated it could at least be reduced in quantity though not wholly eradicated.

BOOK REVIEWS.

TRIAL OF MOTOR CAR ACCIDENT CASES, by Andrew Dewar Gibb. Published by Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell, Ltd., 1930. Price 20s. net.

Taking into consideration the increasing number of motor cars and the fairly good number of daily accidents in congested cities, we cannot adequately estimate the value of a book of this kind, which reduces the conduct of the trial of a running-down action to an exact formula enabling thereby the advocate to ask the right question at the proper time. The sensible and relevant questions that ought to be put in a motor accident case appear in the margin while the body of the book comments on the questions, containing at the same time the law, laid down in propositions or rules and followed by pertinent illustrations and references to decisions of courts. Though this book happens to be an adaptation of an American original, the attempt to introduce English and Scottish cases while retaining American decisions makes it worth studying.

The author has to be congratulated on being almost the first in the field with a work on such a novel and attractive subject.

THE MERCANTILE LAW OF INDIA SERIES:—THE NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT, by T. Ramachandra Rao, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras. Price Rs. 8.

This is the first of a series in which Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao proposes to give a comprehensive statement of the Mercantile Law of India in all its aspects. It is the first of its kind. It is designed on the lines of Smith's Mercantile Law. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao in the valuable Foreword contributed by him a book of this kind is a real desideratum for the reason that while books dealing exclusively with each of the topics comprised must treat the subject in isolation from the rest of the subjects a book of this kind "endeavours to consider the various allied subjects in their entirety and has advertence to their mutual bearings." It is useful to the lawyer. To the businessman it is indispensable. It will keep the latter from many a pitfall and, wisely handled, may even dispense with the necessity for his resorting for most of his ordinary business to the lawyer.

The besetting sin of the ordinary run of law books in this country is formlessness and want of clear thought. Most of them are mere digests without the least idea as to arrangement or consistency. Not infrequently, two statements are found in close contiguity without any attempt at explanation. Mr. Ramachandra Rao's book, we are glad to note, is entirely free from this charge. Without going into needless details, but at the same time omitting nothing which need be known, Mr. Ramachandra Rao has carefully arranged his material and, so far as we have been able to examine, has accurately and lucidly stated the law. It is not a bare statement of the law unaccompanied by the discussion of the principle underlying. It is a refreshing combination of both and we have no doubt that the series will be popular with the student, the lawyer and the businessman alike. The usefulness of the book is enhanced by the printing in the Appendix of all the various enactments that bear on the topics discussed—the Law of Negotiable Instruments. The selection is not confined to the Negotiable Instruments Act but includes others, the English Bills of Exchange Act and portions of the Limitation Act, Stamp Act, the Usurious Loans Act, Indian Evidence Act, the Bankers' Book Evidence Act and the Civil Procedure Code.

THE SALE OF GOODS ACT, by Messrs. P. Ramanatha Aiyar and N. S. Ranganadha Aiyar. Published by The University Book Agency, Kutcheri Road, Lahore. Price Rs. 5.

With their usual habit for elaboration with a wealth of details of any subject they happen to choose, the authors have given their best attention to the Sale of Goods Act. Every section has its full explanations and illustrations following it, and there can be no want felt by the student when relevant passages from the decisions of English Judges find themselves transported verbatim in these pages. The history of the Act from the time when it was a bill up to its final stage of appearing on the Statute Book has been traced in the first few pages to keep the reader aware of the scope and the purpose of the Act. We had rarely doubted the capacity of the authors to hunt for quotations and passages from various text-books and leading cases on the subject, and the expectations are more than fulfilled when they have arranged them in the proper way with almost word for word annotation of the sections.

INDIAN POLICE ACTS, by M. K. A. Khan, K.S., M.A., LL.M., Advocate, Lahore.

This book treats of the Indian Police Acts (V of 1861), (III of 1888) and (XXII of 1922), providing us with a good deal of analytical notes under every section along with the case-law bearing upon the subject. The noteworthy feature of this attempt to write an elaborate commentary is that the analogous law as found in the various local Acts of the presidencies is given side by side with the main Act.

We are quite appreciative of the merits of this book.

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS ACT, by A. Ramayya, Pleader, Madura, 1930. Price Rs. 3-8-0.

The passing of the Indian Sale of Goods Act has set many a diligent student of that branch of the law to write full commentaries, bringing out the almost entire modelling of that Act on the English Sale of Goods Act of 1893. The Report of the Special Committee itself can give any one the idea, how much of real endeavour was directed by the framers of the Act, to bring the present law of Sale of Goods in conformity with the English Law, especially in view of the great convenience which would be effected if there was a uniformity of law in the various countries, particularly those having trade dealings with one another.

The author of this book has not stinted in his efforts to provide the readers with all the necessary information regarding the scope of the present Act and the purpose for the adoption of the English Law. By the timely references to the English cases, many of which had much share in the formation and growth of the English Law itself, the book abounds in the leading and important decisions under the relevant sections. The kernel of some of the judgments of the English Judges, in the language of either the original or the author, finds a place in the notes and we feel no doubt that the attempts of the author also to add his own explanations to the sections in a succinct and clear manner, will aid the readers to get a sufficient understanding of the subject.

AN EPITOME OF THE LAW OF ADOPTION AS ADMINISTERED IN BRITISH INDIA, by M. P. Tandon, B.LIT.SC., Lawyer, Allahabad. Price Rs. 1-2-0.

This very tiny volume gives a concise account of the principles of adoption as developed by case-law in the various High Courts of India. Not being a treatise on the subject, it deals only with the broad outlines of the law of adoption. Moreover the case-law given here can give no greater aid to lawyers than digests of cases which are daily adding to their own numbers. Perhaps students of colleges who are eager to avail themselves of brief notes on that branch of the Hindu Law may feel it worth while to find in it their desideratum.

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS ACT, by V. V. Chari, B.A., B.L.

This is again a good attempt at elucidating the principles underlying the sections of the new Act, with all the necessary care and discretion bestowed on the selection of the important decisions which had moulded the law on the subject as administered in England. For an analytical comparison of the sections with those of the English Sale of Goods Act and the Indian Contract Act, we need not seek here in vain. Though concise of form, the contents will, we are sure, satisfy the curiosity of the readers to probe into the changes and improvements on that branch of the law brought into existence by the passing of this Act.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT, by K. Jagadisa Aiyar, B.A., M.R.P.A. (Lond.). Compiled at the Madras Criminal Cases Office, Madras. Price Re. 1.

In order to satisfy the demands of the members of the Bar for a handy edition of the Act, the author has brought forward this book after having taken the pains to add to it a short summary of the sections along with a brief introduction explaining the importance of the Act itself. The compiler has incorporated all the amendments to the Act up to the year 1930.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE with a full and exhaustive commentary, by Dhirendranath Guha, M.A., B.L., of the Bengal Civil Service. (Judicial). Part I. Printed at the Standard Law Book Society, Calcutta. Price Rs. 2.

This is the first part of an exhaustive commentary of the Code planned out by the author. The first three sections of the Code are the subject-matter of this volume and the notes and references are copious and complete. Of course, considering the number of issues, of the size of this part that will be required to make up the whole, we are led to infer that the work, when finished, will be immense.

INDIAN SALE OF GOODS ACT, by S. R. Dongerkery, B.A., LL.B., Attorney-at-Law, Bombay. Published by Messrs. Butterworth & Co. (India), Ltd., 1930. Price Rs. 5.

This is a short and neat commentary on the Indian Sale of Goods Act, 1930. It is modelled on the lines of Chalmer's book on the English Sale of Goods Act. The author has taken great pains to compress in as short a compass as possible the effect of the leading decisions on each section. The result is that the notes are clear and accurate, so far as they go, it cannot be said that the book deals exhaustively with either the case-law on the subject, English or Indian, or with the various difficulties of interpretation experienced by English Judges, especially as regards the applicability of the several sections to C.I.F. sales. To give an illustration, in dealing with the question of the measure of damages in the case of an "anticipatory breach of contract" under section 60, the vexed questions as to the buyer's duty or right to go into the market as against a defaulting seller, whether the duty arises only when it is reasonably necessary to protect the interest of the defaulting seller, or whether it is an absolute right of the buyer, how the damages are to be calculated when the action comes on for trial before the day of performance arrives (cf. Millett v. Van Heek, (1920) 3 K.B. 535 and on appeal (1921) 2 K.B. 369; Melachrino v. Nickoll and Knight, (1920) 1 K.B. 693) and all these are not discussed in detail.

But all this is merely incidental to the compression which the author has aimed at and does not detract from the value of this commentary as a useful addition to the literature on the subject both to the student as well as to the practitioner, bringing as it does in a handy form in clear and precise language, a vast amount of information on a growing branch of law.

EFFECT OF CONVERSION AND RE-MARRIAGE OF HINDU WIDOW ON HER PROPRIETARY RIGHTS.

Ancient Hindu Law is silent on this topic. Whether Hinduism was not a proselytising creed, or whether re-marriage of widows was unknown to the Hindus apart from custom—a body of immemorial usages which existed independent of, and prior to, the Sanskrit Law of the Aryans—, it is now covered by authority that conversion and re-marriage are permitted by Hindu Law. As to the effect of Hindu widow's re-marriage after conversion on her existing rights, there is a considerable conflict of judicial opinion among the High Courts in India. There is no authoritative pronouncement of the Privy Council on this question. We attempt to examine briefly in broad outlines this moot point in Hindu Law.

The term "conversion" is not necessarily change of religion, but means and includes change of social order or caste as well. We propose to deal with conversion under two heads—(i) Social conversion, and (ii) Religious conversion. Was social conversion recognised by the ancient Hindus, and if so what was its effect on the rights of the convert? This aspect of the question, as far as we can see, has not come up before the Courts of Law. The answer to such an inquiry serves if at all but an academic value. This kind of conversion was not easily achieved. Before this conversion or change from one social order to another obtained religious sanction in ancient times, the matter had to pass through several stages of Aryan civilisation resulting in internal dissensions, protracted struggles and no common sanguinary warfares.¹ Thus was the battle fought and peace concluded. Rajanyas like Visvamitra, Vithahavya and Janaka, to mention a few, were elevated to Brahmanhood. If conversion from a lower to a higher order within the four walls of Hinduism was not only possible but was permitted and recognised by eminent ancient sages, it follows a fortiori that conversion from a higher to a lower order is possible. Then what is the effect of such conversion on the existing rights of the convert? Ordinarily on the general principles of jurisprudence and considerations of equity, it can be safely said that on such conversion a Hindu should not be divested of the estate already vested in him, in the absence of any express texts of Hindu Law to the contrary. We are also fortified by another consideration. So long as the caste-system did not assume a definite shape, as it was undoubtedly unknown to the ancient Aryan-man and to the composers of the Vedic hymns,² the rights of the convert are to be regulated and determined by the prevailing practices of the times. Therefore in that state of society a widow-convert could not possibly forfeit her rights to the estate of her first husband if her re-marriage was permitted by custom. This state of society, however, did not last long. The universal principle of "division of labour" was replaced by a "religious element" in later times and the conduct of the Aryan-man came to be influenced by this religious impact. Law imposed penalties whenever the integrity of social order or the purity of blood was in danger of being threatened or violated. The principle "Poeta nascitur, non fit" applied with equal force to a Hindu. This was the state of affairs till 1850.

In 1850 "The Caste Disabilities Removal Act" called also "The Freedom of Religion Act" was passed. Its object was to relieve the convert from the trammels of law. Whether the Act was intended to relieve social converts of this class who remain as Hindus and who desire to be governed by the principles of Hindu Law, it is hard to decide. It has been held that the Act saves an "outcaste"—man or woman, widower or widow—from forfeiture of his or her rights to property, vested or contingent.³ The term "outcaste" though technically means a Hindu convert from one order to another, it connotes in ordinary parlance a degraded Hindu and who is subject to social ostracism. It is really the object of the Act to give protection to such people.

In the several cases that came up before the Courts, the convert is from a higher to a lower caste. But the difficulty arises when the convert is from a lower to a higher order. The Courts were not called upon to consider the effect of emulating or enhancing one's social order on one's existing rights. Does Act XXI of 1850 contemplate such cases; and, if so, does it save the convert from forfeiture of his entire property as per the provisions of the Act, or only certain items of the property as it appears to be reasonable and just? That is, if a Hindu of a lower order enhances his social order, is he entitled to hold such items of property as sheep or poultry which a member of his higher caste is not permitted under Hindu Law to possess? This difficulty can also be felt in the other case. That is, where a Hindu degrades himself or becomes an outcaste, is he entitled to hold such items of property as family idols or objects of religious worship which a member of his lower caste as a Hindu is not allowed to possess? There is the difficulty either way against the retention of entire property in the case of converts who are within the pale of Hinduism and who want to be governed by Hindu Law. The object of the Act is not to save such people.⁴ We cannot, however, ignore the general principle of equity that an estate once vested cannot be divested which applies to such converts independently of the Act. We therefore submit that the answer to this question must be sought in the compromise between religious susceptibilities and equities of environment. As to the effect of re-marriage of a widow of this class on her rights to the estate of her first husband, the answer is not difficult. The widow is a Hindu despite her conversion. If she re-marries, she forfeits the estate under Hindu Law; for she has not "kept the bed of her lord unsullied."⁵ The same is her position under Act XV of 1856 as clearly expressed by S. 2 of the Act. Different considerations must prevail if re-marriage is permitted by custom. The reasons for such a view will be considered later on.

The second aspect of conversion, namely, religious conversion or change of religion may be dealt with. Does a Hindu woman forfeit her husband's estate on her apostacy under Hindu Law? Whatever might be the principle originally and historically speaking, upon which the right of inheritance and succession of a widow to her husband's estate is founded, so far as a widow under Hindu Smritis is concerned her heritable capacity is based upon a religious doctrine. A Hindu woman after her husband's death inherits his estate on the theory that she is the surviving half of the body of her husband, and on the principle that she confers spiritual benefit on her deceased husband.⁶ The Smriti writers penalised the renunciation of religion by forfeiture of property. Therefore apostacy of a Hindu widow entailed forfeiture of her husband's estate. This state of things, however, could not continue long. By virtue of Act XXI of 1850 apostacy of a Hindu widow does not involve forfeiture of her rights; neither does this Act enlarge her rights.⁷ This is the state of the law at the present day.

What then is the effect of re-marriage of a Hindu widow after conversion on her rights under the personal law of the Hindus and under the statutes? Firstly, her position under Hindu Law may be examined. The earliest case on the point is *Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy*⁸ a decision of five Judges of the Calcutta High Court. This is not, however, a direct authority on this aspect of the question. The facts of the case are singular. A Hindu widow declares falsely that she is a Brahmo and then re-marries a Brahmo under Act III of 1872. The majority of the Full Bench held that by her re-marriage she forfeited her interest in her first husband's estate. The result was arrived at on a consideration of S. 2 of Act XV of 1856, to which we return presently, though an attempt was made at its effect under Hindu Law. So far as the result is concerned, we agree with their Lordships for the following reasons. In this case there is no question of conversion at all. The widow at the time of her re-marriage is not in fact a Brahmo but a Hindu. As a Hindu she forfeits her rights under Hindu Law and under S. 2 of Act XV of 1856. When she could not get by honest means how could she hope to better her position by false pretensions? Courts ought not to encourage the fraudulent and the unscrupulous. Again, even if she is a Brahmo at the time of her re-marriage, there is no question of religious conversion. As a Brahmo she is still a Hindu and is amenable to Hindu Law. In either case there is forfeiture. But we are unable, with all respect to their Lordships, to accept their reasons for this view.

8. (1891) I.L.R. 19 C. 289 (F.B.).

The nature of the estate of a Hindu widow under Hindu Law was also discussed in the case. According to the referring Judges Wilson and Banerji, JJ., who were also in the Full Bench, it was an estate during widowhood and liable to forfeiture upon a second marriage. This was also the view of the majority judges, Sir John Wallis, C.J., and Oldfield, J., in *Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakundu Sivayya*⁹ where the facts are a Hindu widow becomes a Muhammadan and marries a Muslim according to Muhammadan rites. With all respect it is difficult to accept this view. The estate of a Hindu widow is not laid down by any text to be an estate during widowhood durante viduitate. A Hindu widow can alter the tenure of her estate by alienation. It can be shortened during widowhood or extended beyond widowhood. Even if the estate of a widow is still a widow's estate after alienation, the surrenderee, or the donee or trustee of a religious endowment, or the purchaser can hold the estate beyond her widowhood. When once an estate is a widow's estate, it is immaterial who holds the estate, whether the holder is a widow or an alienee from her. Also an estate which a widow holds need not necessarily be a widow's estate. Hence a widow's estate need not be an estate during widowhood, nor need an estate during widowhood be a widow's estate. To hold therefore that forfeiture under Hindu Law is entailed "by reason of the incompatibility between the renunciation of a widow's status and the retention of a widow's estate" is, we submit with due respect, unwarranted by authority.

Their Lordships also justify the forfeiture on the principle of analogy. The effect of re-marriage of a widow permitted by custom on her first husband's estate was considered. In those cases no question of apostacy is involved. There is also a conflict of opinion among the several High Courts. According to Allahabad, where a custom while permitting re-marriage of a Hindu widow is silent as to its effect on her right to the estate of her first husband, her re-marriage does not entail forfeiture of her rights.¹⁰ This is also in consonance with the ordinary principles of jurisprudence that a custom should be so interpreted as to be beneficial to the person seeking protection under it. This view has been consistently followed by that Court though in later cases the learned Judges hesitated to accept the former view.¹¹ But the view taken in *Har Saran Das v. Nandi*¹² was maintained throughout on the principle of cursus curiæ. Patna and Oudh are to the same effect.¹² Madras, Bombay and Calcutta take a different view. According to them, she forfeits her estate. The reasoning adopted by these Courts is twofold. On the authority of Steele's "Indian Castes" it is held that the practice of widows forfeiting their rights in their first husbands' property on re-marriage is a "universal practice." If really it is such a universal practice in India as remarked by Mr. Justice Ranade, the caste custom permitting re-marriage of Hindu widows is not silent but is sufficiently eloquent. There is no force in argumentum ab silentio. Thus this view is distinguishable from the Allahabad view.¹³

As to the observation of Mr. Justice Ranade of the Bombay High Court that forfeiture of widow's right is a universal practice in India, we may just say a word. This view was questioned by Mr. Justice Krishnan of the Madras High Court. Of a race of this ancient people scattered through the length and breadth of the land with different types of civilisation—different in stature and colour, different in language and dress, different in habits and manners—we are not aware that there are not instances where a widow does not forfeit her estate on her re-marriage. Among them some are nomads and cave people whose "short and simple annals" are unheard of. Never did the bard sing nor the ethnologist relate "their homely joys and destiny obscure." Among them there are still polyandrous tribes where the addition of a husband to the plurality of her mates on the death of one does not entail a forfeiture of the rights of the woman to the estate of her deceased spouse. Again, among them there are cases where a widow while foregoing her right to her husband's estate on re-marriage, gets the estate on the death of the second husband in the event of the latter dying without means. The right is not lost for ever but is postponed till a contingency arises. In several cases the retention of the widow's estate is incompatible with the determination of the widow's right to maintenance.

The second ground according to these Courts is based on the fiction that the widow is the surviving half of her husband.¹⁴ The application of this principle to people who are governed by rules of unwritten law different from the law of the Smritis, is undoubtedly unhappy. Such a principle is not only unknown to them but is unsuited, if not repugnant, to their mode of life and archaic customs.^{14-a} It is curious indeed to hold further that a Hindu widow after conversion and re-marriage while ceasing to be the surviving half of her Hindu husband, becomes instead the surviving half of her non-Hindu second husband.⁸ In the result, the pushing of analogy to the case of converts, that is, to circumstances fundamentally different, is unsound. It is against all canons of logic; it is equally opposed to all principles of equity.

Apart from these considerations there is another difficulty. The view that a widow's re-marriage after conversion entails forfeiture of her first husband's estate is opposed to the general principle of Hindu Law enunciated by the Privy Council in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani.¹⁵ The law as stated by the Board in that case is, "that an estate once vested by succession or inheritance is not divested by any act or incapacity, which, before succession, would have formed a ground for exclusion from inheritance." It was also held that a widow's estate already vested in her could not be divested by her unchastity. If forfeiture in our present case is not opposed to this Privy Council decision, is widow's estate an exception to the general rule as laid down by the Board? Whether the estate of a Hindu widow is an exception to this general rule has been seriously doubted by the Courts. The view in *Chowdappa v. Narasamma*¹⁶ is that a widow's estate is not an exception to this general rule. The view in *Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy*⁸ is that it is. The referring Judges in the latter case observe that the Board in *Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani*¹⁵ did not consider the question of re-marriage but only of chastity; and there is a very broad distinction between misconduct on the part of a widow as a widow, and her ceasing to be a widow. This was also the reasoning of the majority Judges in the *Vitta Tayaramma's case*⁹ where it was observed, "Unchastity is uncertain and changeable by conduct whereas re-marriage is a definite legal step by which the woman ceases to be any longer the widow of the deceased. . . . Forfeiture is an inevitable incident of 're-marriage though not of unchastity.' Be it what it may, there is the distinction. But this distinction only applies to a widow who is within the ambit of Hindu religion. Her position after conversion is different. Act XXI of 1850, to which reference was made, governs her. The observation of Sir John Wallis, C.J., which is also the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench in *Vitta Tayaramma v. Chaitakundu Sivayya*¹⁷ is as follows: "Act XXI of 1850 though it relieved the widow of a Hindu from forfeiture of her widow's estate on her abjuration of Hinduism, did not enlarge the nature of that estate, so as to relieve her from forfeiture in the event of her renouncing her status of widow by re-marriage." With all respect, we cannot accede to this view. It is no doubt true, as observed by the Privy Council and it is also the policy of the Act, that Act XXI of 1850 does not enlarge or restrict the interest of the convert. Is there any enlarging of interest in the present case? Certainly, there is nothing of the kind. The Hindu widow has the right to the estate of her husband (before her conversion and re-marriage). This is unaffected by her conversion. It is also unaffected by subsequent event on the part of the convert (other than causing waste to the property or defeating the right of reversioners). Re-marriage is thus a subsequent act on the part of the convert, and therefore the effect of re-marriage cannot entail forfeiture of her first husband's estate. To hold therefore that there is the enlarging of her estate is an anomaly. Conversely if her estate is to be forfeited by her re-marriage, it is clearly imposing a condition or restriction on the right of the convert to the estate of her first husband, which right was not subject to any condition or restriction originally at the time of her conversion. To hold that there is the enlarging of interest on conversion and re-marriage is therefore inconsistent with, and repugnant to, the express provisions of the Act. The unhappy conclusion for the forfeiture of a Hindu widow's estate after conversion and re-marriage is due to the notions of Hindus that the heritable capacity ceases with the cessation of widowhood, and their application to a person who ceases to be governed by Hindu Law. This is the inevitable temptation one should be guarded against. The Allahabad High Court in *Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma*¹⁷ holds that a Hindu widow who becomes a Muhammadan and marries a Muhammadan husband according to her new religion does not forfeit her right to the estate of her first husband. Such a question has not presented itself before the other High Courts in India. The view of the Allahabad High Court was followed by Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in his dissenting judgment in *Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakundu Sivayya*⁹ where it was held, "The rule of Hindu Law that a widow who re-marries and is thus not true to the bed of her deceased husband cannot inherit to his estate can be applied only when she is within the pale of Hindu Law. Her re-marriage after apostasy cannot divest her of the right to inherit which subsisted to her at the date of her conversion to another religion."

The effect of re-marriage after conversion under Act XV of 1856 may now be discussed. In *Matungini Gupta v. Ram Ruttan Roy*⁸ the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench is that re-marriage after conversion entails forfeiture under Act XV of 1856. The learned Chief Justice observes: "Section 2 includes all widows who are within the scope of the Act, that is to say, all persons who being Hindus become widows." The Allahabad High Court in *Abdul Aziz Khan v. Nirma*¹⁷ while dissenting from the Calcutta view held, "Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 does not apply, as it cannot possibly include all widows. It is necessarily confined to 'Hindu widows.' The woman was not a Hindu when she was married to a Muhammadan husband." This was also the view of Prinsep, J., the dissenting Judge, who holds, "Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 does not apply to all Hindu widows re-marrying, but only to Hindu widows re-marrying as Hindus under Hindu Law as provided by the Act." The argument of the referring Judges in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Ruttan Roy,⁸ namely, "The words 'any widow' occurring in section 2 must be taken to mean any widow to whom the Act applies and for whom it was intended, that is, any widow who is Hindu, not only at the time of her succession, but also at the time of her re-marriage; and the word 're-marriage' in the section must be taken as meaning re-marriage contracted under the Act in accordance with Hindu ceremonies" only supports the view of their colleague, Prinsep, J. A different conclusion, it appears to us, is impossible from this argument. The opinion of the majority of the Full Bench in *Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakundu Sivayya*⁹ is that section 2 does not apply to such a case. A case of conversion followed by re-marriage of a Hindu widow has not come up before the Bombay High Court. Their Lordships, however, expressed their opinion as to the construction of section 2 of the Act while considering the effect of re-marriage of a Hindu widow permitted by custom. The scope of section 2 under similar circumstances was also considered by Madras, Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts. In all these cases there was no question of conversion. We submit at the outset that the decisions in the several cases are irrelevant to our present inquiry. However, we just note what these Courts have to say if there is any bearing on the subject at hand. The Allahabad High Court has been consistently holding since *Har Saran Das v. Nandi*¹⁰ that S. 2 does not apply to the case. The view of the Madras High Court is conflicting. In *In re Doraswami Thevar*¹⁸ it is held that there is forfeiture under section 2, but *Chowdappa v. Narasamma*¹⁹ refuses to follow this view. So far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned it is held in *Rasul Jehan v. Ram Surin*¹⁹ that there is no forfeiture under section 2 of the Act. The Bombay view in *Vithu v. Gorinda*²⁰ is that section 2 governs such cases. The better view seems to be that if re-marriage of a Hindu widow is permitted by custom, S. 2 of the Act does not take away her rights on re-marriage. The words "with certain exceptions" occurring in the preamble to the Act are significant. They clearly indicate that the Act does not apply to Hindu widows who can marry independent of the Act.

We now pass on to consider the scope of the Act and its applicability or otherwise to our present discussion. The title of the Act is "The Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act, 1856" and in Indian Short Titles it is worded as "Removing all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows." This Act gives a legislative sanction to the re-marriage of Hindu widows under Hindu Law. It is purely an enabling Act intended to remove "all obstacles to the re-marriage" a Hindu widow is labouring under. The Act intends to confer certain rights on a Hindu widow, which rights she could not exercise under her personal law. It is not intended to interfere with, or impose restrictions upon, her rights which her personal law or custom does not take away. This is the object and the policy of the Act as can be gathered from its preamble and general scheme.

Considerable difficulty has been felt as to the interpretation of section 2 of the Act. This section says, "All rights and interests which any widow may have in her deceased husband's property, . . . shall, upon her re-marriage, cease and determine as if she had then died; . . ." Though re-marriage and unchastity are both sinful under Hindu Law, it is an anomaly that subsequent unchastity is no ground of forfeiture, whereas by the operation of the Act, re-marriage entails forfeiture of her rights in her husband's estate. This is largely due to the fact that the legislation dealt with that portion of Hindu Law.

For a proper interpretation of the section, certain endeavour is to be made for the meaning of several terms occurring in the section and the Act but unfortunately left undefined by the Act. The term "Hindu widow" occurring in the title and the body of the Act has been held as meaning "the widow of a Hindu". It was thought sufficient if the deceased husband was a Hindu whether or not the woman was a Hindu at the time of her re-marriage. The widow of a Hindu need not be a Hindu at all even at the time of her marriage. She cannot be a Hindu widow according to the Act. Conversely, if a Hindu husband becomes a Christian or a Muhammadan and as a consequence of such conversion his wife separates herself, then if the husband dies, she cannot be the widow of a Christian or a Muhammadan consistently with her religious sentiments. The term "Hindu widow" has been held to be a widow who is a Hindu. At the time of re-marriage after conversion, she is not a Hindu and therefore not a Hindu widow. Again, the widow who is a Hindu might not have married a Hindu husband. Either view is not free from objection. A Hindu widow according to Act XV of 1856 must be a Hindu and must have married a Hindu according to Hindu rites. Further, the term "re-marriage" occurring in the title and the body of the Act means the marriage of Hindu widows to whom the Act applies and for whom it was intended. Hence section 2 of the Act does not govern cases of re-marriage after conversion as the Act does not apply to apostates. This is also evident from the wording of the title of the Act itself.

That the intention of the Legislature was to apply this Act to Hindus alone and not to converts from Hinduism is also significant from the expression "Hindu Widow's Re-marriage" occurring in the title. If really the Act was intended to apply to apostates from Hinduism, the Legislature would have termed the Act as "The Hindu Widow's Marriage Act" since marriage after conversion is not re-marriage according to the new religion. Or again, the Legislature would have termed it as "The Hindu Woman's Re-marriage Act." It was not so termed because they wanted to avoid its scope being extended to circumstances not contemplated by the legislature like divorce or dissolution of marriage wherever it is possible, or widowhood by presumptions of law.²¹ The Act has been deliberately styled as "The Hindu Widow's Re-marriage Act". The expression "Hindu Widow's Re-marriage" is by no means redundant; it is intentionally used to signify its full import.

To sum up, which is the proper view? The Calcutta High Court in the Full Bench case, Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy,⁸ did not consider, as rightly commented upon by Mr. Justice Krishnan in his referring judgment in Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakondur Sivayya,⁹ the scope and the object of Act XV of 1856. The learned Chief Justice merely says: "S. 2 includes all widows who are within the scope of the Act, that is to say, all persons who being Hindus become widows." The Allahabad High Court expresses the correct position. In *Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakondur Sivayya*⁹ it was held by Sir John Wallis, C.J., "The words 'any widow, ... upon her re-marriage' in section 2 of Act XV are wide enough to cover the case of any widow of a Hindu re-marrying, whether or not her marriage would otherwise be prohibited by any custom or interpretation of Hindu Law and whether the re-marriage was to a Hindu or to a member of another religion." This was also the view of the referring Judge Phillips, J. But it was not the prevailing opinion of the Full Bench. The correct view as also the opinion of the Full Bench is expressed by Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in the following language: "The belief that a Hindu widow adds insult to injury to the memory of her deceased husband by apostasy first and by subsequent marriage with a person belonging to a different faith, is not a ground for reading into section 2 of Act XV of 1856 words which are not to be found there. The Act was intended to give relief to certain class of people and not to penalise others, and Courts are not at liberty to supply a defect of this kind by direct legislation." This view must receive strength from the following observation of Lord Herschel: "The proper course of interpreting an Act, intended to codify a particular branch of the law is first to examine its language for its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations of the previous state of the law, and not to start with an inquiry as to how the law previously stood."

In this state of the law with such a diversity of judicial opinion in India, the labours of jurists in codifying certain portions of Hindu Law and in granting large concessions to the convert and to the widow by legislative measures like Acts XXI of 1850 and XV of 1856, must remain unfulfilled. It cannot be said with authority that her title to property can remain unchallenged unless this question receives strength from the Privy Council.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

JONESCO v. BEARD, (1930) A.C. 298.

Practice—Judgment obtained by fraud—Procedure for setting it aside—Appeal or new trial.

The trial Judge considered the evidence and decided all the issues against the plaintiff and consequently dismissed the action. The defendant appealed against it on the ground that the trial was tainted with fraud. The appellate Judge set aside the judgment and ordered a new trial accepting the allegations of fraud.

Held, that the course taken was, as a mere matter of procedure, irregular. The proper method of impeaching a completed judgment on the ground of fraud is by a new action setting out with exactness the particulars of fraud, though in special cases the court has jurisdiction to set aside a judgment for fraud on a motion for a new trial.

CLAYTON v. CLAYTON, (1930) 2 Ch. 12.

Title deeds—Custody of—Will—Settled legacies—Appointment of new trustees—Owner of freehold—If entitled to custody from trustees of title deeds.

The plaintiff who, in the events that happened, became the absolute owner of freehold estates, claimed a declaration that he was entitled to three indentures, being appointments of new trustees of the will of the plaintiff's grandfather. Some of the trusts were still on foot.

Held, that the right of an owner of land to the title deeds is not absolute and without exception. It is true that the immediate freeholder has both in law and in equity a prima facie title to the possession of the title deeds, but where the trustees have yet duties as trustees to perform, their deeds of appointment are legitimately with them and the freeholder cannot recover them as his title deeds.

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent transfer—Delaying creditors—Bona fides of debtor if material—Bankruptcy Act, 1914, Ss. 1 (1) (b) and 45.

A transfer by a debtor of substantially the whole of his property, whether by way of charge or by way of sale, will be an act of bankruptcy, if the necessary consequence of the transfer will be to defeat or delay his creditors.

Where in the place of a going business and substantial business assets, shares of a private company which had taken over the debtor's assets and liabilities together with a right of action by the debtor against that company on its covenant to discharge his liabilities were substituted,

Held, that the arrangement must necessarily delay creditors and that the sale effected in pursuance of the same was a fraudulent transfer.

Held, further, that the fraudulent character of the transaction was not modified by the parties having been under the bona fide belief that it was the best thing for the creditors.

Limitation—Acknowledgment—Company's balance-sheets showing fees due to directors—Effect—Lord Tenterden's Act, 1856, Ss. 1 (1) (b) and 45—Companies Act, 1908, S. 113.

An acknowledgment will keep a debt alive only if it amounts to a fresh promise to pay and if it is made to the creditor or his agent. Where the directors of a company at various board meetings held from time to time passed the balance-sheets before them and two of them signed the balance-sheets on behalf of the board pursuant to S. 113 of the Companies Act,

Held, that the promise to pay being to the directors themselves, the entries in the balance-sheets did not amount to acknowledgments in writing within the meaning of Lord Tenterden's Act.

Held, further, that the resolution of the board of directors sanctioning the fees due to them was not binding on the company.

Per Maugham, J.—Had the statement been made in the balance-sheet that the company owed a specific sum to a shareholder, to whom the balance-sheet was sent in the usual way, that would have amounted to a sufficient acknowledgment.

Company—Allotment of shares—Failure to pay call moneys—Forfeiture and re-allotment of shares—Bankruptcy of original allottee—Right of company to prove damages—Payments by new allottee as mitigating damages.

Where after the allotment of shares in a company the allottee was adjudged bankrupt and the shares having been forfeited for non-payment of calls were re-allotted to another person and the company sought to recover damages from the original allottee,

Held, that the company was entitled to prove in insolvency to the extent of the actual damage sustained by them. In such a case the payment by the new allottee ensured for the benefit of the original allottee and released him pro tanto in respect of the damages.

If a testator dies after the lapse of some time from the date of the execution of the will, the testamentary disposition cannot be treated as having been executed immediately before death.

Where the testatrix by her will directed that the income of the estate which she had or might acquire in future should be paid to her husband, and her father subsequently gave her a legacy with a power of appointment, but she died without exercising that power, Custom—Master and servant—Deduction in wages for bad work—Validity and proof of usage.

The plaintiff, who was an employee in one of the Lancashire Cotton Mills, sued to recover from his employer a sum of money which the latter had illegally deducted from his wages. The defendants pleaded that the deduction was for bad work and relied on a usage in the Cotton Mills permitting the deduction. The evidence showed, however, that the practice varied in the several mills.

Held, by Farwell, J., that the alleged usage was neither reasonable nor certain, because it depended on the will of the master, and the plaintiff was consequently entitled to recover the deduction in wages.

Bankruptcy—Pension of bankrupt not vesting in trustee—Power of Court to direct pension to be utilised for payment of debts—Pensions Act, 1921, S. 14—Bankruptcy Act, 1908, S. 31.

The Police Pensions Act, 1921, S. 14, provides that the pension due to a police officer does not vest in the trustee in bankruptcy. S. 51 of the Bankruptcy Act, however, provides that the whole or part of a bankrupt's pension may be directed to be paid to the trustee for the benefit of the bankrupt's creditors.

Held, on a consideration of both the sections, that, though the pension did not vest in the trustee so as to enure for the benefit of creditors in every case, there was nothing to prevent the court from making an order under S. 51 in favour of the creditors.

TAYLOR v. TWINBERROW, (1930) 2 K.B. 16.

Limitation—Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy from year to year—Sub-tenancy—Sub-tenant prescribing for yearly tenancy—Subsequent merger of freehold in yearly tenant—Action for possession against sub-tenant by tenant after merger—If notice should be given.

By a lease in 1900 F granted a tenancy from year to year of a freehold to T at an annual rent. H put his brother-in-law T who was then his foreman in possession rent free, H himself paying rents, etc. T continued in possession even after he ceased to be his foreman. In 1919 H purchased the freehold reversion of the property and an action having been filed in 1929 for possession by H's personal representative against T's widow,

Held, that T must be deemed to be in possession of the property not as the guest of H, but as a tenant-at-will, that as even after the foremanship ceased T continued in possession for over the statutory period the right of H to dispossess T had become extinguished in 1913, but the right of the freehold reversioner to dispossess him on the termination of H's yearly tenancy was not affected by such extinction. By H buying the freehold reversion, his yearly tenancy merged in the reversion and was thereby determined and as a result of it T's rights against all except the freeholder also terminated and a new tenancy-at-will, which can be put an end to by a week's notice, was created.

REX v. DIVINE WALTON, Ex parte, (1930) 2 K.B. 29.

Inquest—Duties of Coroner—Interference by Court with Coroner's verdict—When allowed—Procedure at inquest to be strictly legal.

The Coroner held an inquest over the bodies of two men who had been killed in a collision in a public road in or near the city of Hull and in so doing empanelled a jury of 11 men selected out of a list or panel of 16 or 17 for the city. He viewed the damaged vehicle before the inquest with a man who subsequently acted as foreman of the jury and during the inquest when the jury inspected the locality, the Coroner himself joined them and also allowed a police constable to speak and point things to the jury.

Held, that the Court may order a fresh inquest to be held under S. 6, sub-section (1) of the Coroner's Act, 1887, if satisfied that "by reason of fraud, rejection of evidence, irregularity of proceedings, insufficiency of inquiry or otherwise, it is necessary or desirable that in the interest of justice, another inquest should be held." The Court is not to attend to mere informalities nor to criticise minutely the summing up or the nature of the evidence or of the procedure but it must be so conducted that no room is given for a feeling that justice has not been done and the public have a right to expect that the verdict is given upon the sworn evidence heard at the inquest and upon nothing else. It is improper to have a small panel of regular jurymen to select the jurors from and is contrary to the principle of the jury system which is the determination of questions of fact by persons taken at haphazard from the general body of qualified persons. It is also contrary to public policy that a Coroner should take, before an inquest is held, one or more persons who are to serve on the jury and privately investigate with them any of the facts of the case and this whether or not it can be shown that there was anything in the nature of discussion. There is nothing wrong in the Coroner going with the jury to inspect, but he should carefully abstain from any discussion with them. It is improper for the constable to give information to the jury outside the Court and that itself can be a ground for quashing the inquisitions.

Insurance—Broker's lien—Policy parted with but possession again resumed—Immediate employer of broker only an agent—Knowledge of agency acquired by broker after effecting policy but before resumption of possession—Lien if lost—Marine Insurance Act, 1908, S. 53, sub-section (2).

An agent of the plaintiffs effected a marine insurance through the defendants who were insurance brokers. The policy was in the name of the defendants. The goods having been lost, the plaintiffs called for the policy from the defendants, who claimed a lien on it for balance due on account owing to them by their employer, who was the plaintiff's agent. By S. 53, sub-section (2), a broker who effects an insurance has, as against the assured, a lien on the policy for balances due on account and where he has dealt with the person employing him as a principal, he has also a lien on the policy in respect of any balance on insurance account due to him from such person, unless, when the debt was incurred, he had reason to believe that such person was only an agent.

Held, that generally a lien which is lost on parting with possession revives when possession is resumed, but that rule will not apply where the person claiming the lien voluntarily parts with possession of the policy and by the time he resumes possession he becomes aware or has reason to believe that his immediate employer is only an agent and not a principal. Held further, on the finding that when he got back the policy, the broker knew he was only dealing with an agent, that the defendants cannot claim any lien. In any case, the lien can only be claimed with regard to payments due to the broker before they became aware of the agency, though originally they did not know of it.

LYNN v. BAMBER, (1930) 2 K.B. 72.

Limitation—Sale of goods—Breach of warranty—Fraudulent representation—No concealment of fraud—Starting point.

In 1921 the plaintiff bought some plum trees warranted to be "Purple Pershore." After some years the plaintiff found they were "Coe's Late Red," an inferior plum, and in 1928 he brought an action for damages for breach of warranty.

Held, that since the Judicature Acts, the rule of equity has to be followed when it is at variance with the common law rule, and therefore even in a common law action active and fraudulent concealment on the part of the defendant is a good answer to the Statute of Limitation. It is not necessary for that purpose that there should be a fiduciary relation between the parties or any special contract. It is enough if there had been fraud unknown to the plaintiff, although there may be no active concealment by the defendant.

Vendor and purchaser—Sale of immoveable property—Agreement to sell containing clause to complete house under construction—Final conveyance silent about it—If the clause merges in the conveyance or can be collaterally enforced.

By an agreement to sell in writing, the defendant agreed to sell a plot of land and a dwelling-house thereon in course of erection and undertook to complete the said house construction on a proper manner. Later, he executed a regular conveyance of the property but the deed contained no reference to the building or to any work to be done by the defendant with regard to completing the house. The builder's work was badly done and in an action for breach of the agreement to properly construct the house, the vendor pleaded that by the conveyance the contract of sale was merged in the deed and the terms not repeated in it were no longer enforceable.

Held, that the contract to do the work was collateral to the contract for the sale of the house in the course of erection and being collateral had no place in the deed of conveyance and, therefore, did not merge on the execution of the deed of conveyance, which said nothing about the subject of the stipulation.

The documents appeared to have been signed by two persons purporting to sign on behalf of D company. In view of the defence raised, it was necessary to prove that the documents were signed by the persons not as mere strangers but as agents in the employ of D company and that in so doing they were acting within the scope of their authority. To prove these steps, the B bank administered certain interrogatories on the defendants passed by the Master as proper. They were required to answer them "by their Secretary or other their proper officer to the best of his knowledge, information and belief." The Secretary to the defendants replied to all saying "I do not know."

Held, that it is not sufficient for a secretary of a company answering as the mouthpiece of a company to merely search his own mind and say he knows nothing. He is not bound to give information which he did not acquire in the course of his employment but he is bound to institute proper enquiries of the other officers and agents of the company with regard to their knowledge, also acquired in the course of their employment and give the proper answer as gathered from such enquiries. He is not bound to institute a roving enquiry among all available sources of information for the purpose of enabling the other party to make out a case. He is bound to answer according to information and belief, which is not the same thing as to answer according to knowledge.

Negligence—Contractor felling tree without warning children near by—Accident to child—Child as trespasser—Liability of contractor.

The proprietor of a piece of land adjacent to a high road and unfenced entered into a contract with a contractor to fell a tree on his land. The assistants of the contractor drove the children playing near by twice, but just when the tree was being held by one root and the contractor knew it would fall in two minutes, he failed to drive the children away, with the result the tree fell and injured three children.

Held, that the defendant owed a duty to the children, even though they were trespassers, to warn them that the tree was going to fall, and by his failure to warn them, he was guilty of negligence and liable for the damages.

Scrutton, L.J.—"Where the land remains in the same state, a trespasser must take it as he finds it, and the owner is not bound to warn him. That, however, is a different case from the case in which a man does something which makes a change in the condition of the land, as where he starts a wheel, fells a tree, or sets off a blast when he knows that people are standing near. In each of these cases he owes a duty to these people even though they are trespassers to take care to give them warning."

Appeal—Application for delivery of bill of costs in criminal proceeding—No action pending—Order by Judge—Appeal whether to Divisional Court or Court of Appeal.

A firm of solicitors acted for a client in certain criminal proceedings in which he was defendant in 1925-26. The solicitors delivered a bill of costs in summary form to the client's attorney who also paid the bill. Later, the client took out an originating summons for a detailed bill. The Master ordered it but the Judge reversed the order. The client preferred an appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Held, that by the Judicature Act, 1894, in appeals from chambers, only appeals in matters of "practice and procedure" lie to the Court of Appeal, the others going to the Divisional Court. The question of a bill of costs is a substantive right under the Solicitors Act, the client having a right to delivery of detailed bill of costs in certain cases and having no such right in others and not a question of practice and procedure and, therefore, the appeal lay only to the Divisional Court.

Per Greer, L.J.—"One would think that decisions as to matters of practice and procedure are those given in the course of legal proceedings to get a final result. . . . It may be that where a bill of costs is to be delivered in relation to a civil action in which judgment has been given, the action is still in existence for the purpose of dealing with any interlocutory matters not disposed of."

Probate—Practice—Power of attorney by two joint executors—Attorney granted administration with will and codicils annexed—Death of one executor—Effect on grant of letters to attorney—Revocation of grant and fresh grant—Validity.

A testator in India, who had property in England, nominated by his will four persons to be his executors. Two of them died and the remaining two jointly executed a power-of-attorney in favour of A—their solicitor—to apply for and obtain letters of administration in the High Court of England. A was duly granted the letters and while still some of the testator's real property was undisposed of, one of the executors died and the other effectually revoked the grant to A.

Held, that except for acts done before the revocation, all the powers under the letters granted to A have gone. The form of the order should be "that the Court taking notice of the revocation by F (surviving executor) of the power granted to A, the administrator pro tempore, who was administrator for F and his co-executor jointly, the grant of that administration on behalf of the two executors should be revoked, that is, it should be brought in to be cancelled." The old grant thereby goes and the surviving executor is free to appoint his own attorney to take out administration on his behalf.

Will—Printed form—First page duly executed—First page referring to second page for completion—Second page containing dispositions, not executed—Effect—Attesting witnesses absent—Affidavit by them in prior application for probate if can be relied upon.

A testatrix made a will on a printed form. The first page of the form contained testamentary dispositions and was duly executed and attested. As there was no room for further writing on the page, the will was continued on the second page, the first page containing the reference "see other side for completion." The second page was not executed or attested. The attesting witnesses could not be found nor could their handwriting be proved. One of them had, in a previous application for probate, made an affidavit in common form wherein he had deposed to the effect that the reference "see the other side for completion" and the words on the second page were written before execution.

Held, that the whole will can be admitted to probate. What is written on the form is all part of one will. By the reference in the duly executed portion to the other side the testator intended to include it as part of her will and the words on the other side had become just as much a part of the will as if they had been interlined in the body of the will. The affidavit of the witness whose evidence could not be had is also admissible as evidence of execution and the state of the will when he attested.

Divorce—Marriage declared null and void—Petition for permanent maintenance—Matters to be considered—Conduct before and after marriage, if relevant—Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, S. 190, sub-section (1).

The wife obtained an order absolute declaring her marriage with the respondent null and void on the ground of consanguinity of the parties and then petitioned the Court for permanent maintenance under S. 190, sub-section (1) of the Judi-capture (Consolidation) Act, 1925. The respondent filed a counter-affidavit making serious allegations of misconduct on the wife's part not only after her marriage with him but even before. The Registrar ordered the allegations as to misconduct to be struck out and it was confirmed by the Judge.

Held, on appeal, that in awarding maintenance under S. 190, the Court is to have regard "to her fortune, if any, to the ability of her husband and to the conduct of the parties." The "conduct" referred to in the section includes conduct both before and after the marriage and, therefore, the allegations in the affidavit are all relevant in arriving at a conclusion as to the maintenance payable.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Too Many Briefs.—Solicitors, according to reports current in the Temple, show no abatement of their old desire to retain the professional services of Sir John Simon. He is in greater demand than ever. But the demand is now in excess of the supply, and it is stated that three good briefs were returned from Sir John's Chambers in the course of a single week. Inferences are drawn from this information on the assumption of its accuracy; and one is that our most prominent member of the Common Law Bar will not undertake work that he cannot personally do. A sound practice more honoured in the breach than the observance by many of our most illustrious judges in the days when they were busy at and within the Bar.

Many men, especially in these days when the King's Bench activities are so partial and intermittent, would take a chance that the hearings would not clash. But may be Sir John has now decided to adopt the principle of a fair term's remuneration for a fair term's work, and to leave the rest for distribution amongst his more needy comrades of the Bar. If this be so, praise and thanksgiving are his due, and praise and thanks he will receive.

Meanwhile the storm continues to rage around the India Report which bears his name. In India it has raised a loud yell of disapproval; but a taste for it may well be acquired, and in time it may become the staple diet of the East.—L.J., 1930, p. 42.

A Universal Lawyer Emerges.—I have received a printed pamphlet purporting to be signed by Andreas Marosi of Vienna, which fills one with amazement at the accomplishments of that apparently remarkable man. Most lawyers try to acquire a knowledge of one branch of the municipal law of one country, and lamentably fail. But Andreas Marosi can give sound advice on most of the laws of all the nations. "Sir," writes he, "I beg to call your attention to my international office in Vienna established for the purpose of rendering to lawyers of different States useful services in all cases in which the law of their respective countries don't afford sufficient means of solving law cases pertaining to the province of personal law, such as contraction, or dissolution of marriages, adoption and naturalisation in a manner answering the purpose of the parties."

"For the sake of illustrating the present state of things," he especially refers "to the digressions in the rules of law with respect to causes for divorce," and all his illustrations are indeed of "adultery," divorce and his willingness to solve a problem "in a manner answering the purpose of the parties."

He is willing to meet me and my need "in any place, say Paris or even London." "Rendering the rules of law of different countries concordant for the purpose of a practical enforcement of the same" forms the basis of his office, supplying thus a need hitherto sorely felt.

Is there anywhere in the world another lawyer like Andreas, so ready to supply so felt a need?—L.J., 1930, p. 42.

Christian Marriage in India.—Lord Merrivale had an important point in marriage law before him recently when he gave judgment in the cross petitions in Peal v. Peal (Times, July 8). The parties to the marriage, which took place in India in 1921, were nephew and aunt. Both were Roman Catholics, but had obtained from their church the official dispensation which did, if it could, remove the bar of consanguinity. Both of them were also British subjects, and though there was some doubt as to their domicile at the time of the ceremony, the President assumed it to be Anglo-Indian. The husband's English domicile, which alone gave the Divorce Court jurisdiction, was acquired in 1922. The vital question was whether the Indian Christian Marriage Acts confer upon Christians domiciled in India the right to marry within the degrees prohibited by British law, provided they be of the Roman Catholics, and obtain the dispensation which the Canon law permits. The President decided that those Acts do not grant that right. He founded his decision on the fact of the nationality of the spouses, and on a provision of the Indian Christian Marriage Act of 1872 which declares that nothing therein enacted should validate a marriage which the personal law of the parties forbids them to contract. It seems to be implicit in this interesting decision that nationality (at all events if it be British) has something to say in determining capacity to marry. Most lawyers have learned to say, and advise, that that capacity depends upon domicile or nationality according as either is regarded in this or that country as the fountain of personal law; and that in England it is a question to be decided by domicile. In the present case, the spouses were of Anglo-Indian domicile, and, if their original domicile was sought out, it was British. But the decision, with its strong emphasis on the nationality of the spouses, seems to show that British subjects, as such, are under certain rules as to marriage capacity which no domiciliary law can override.—L.J., 1930, p. 73.

What the Mace owes to Mr. Beckett.—One good result of the incident is that the present House of Commons knows more about the Mace than they had ever done. M.P.'s have heard from Mr. Beckett that the Mace has no Magic. To unauthorised persons it is not malum in se but malum quia prohibitum. They know now that its value is symbolic and useful, and knowing its uses they realise, as Mr. Beckett himself does, that to abuse it is unprofitable. For example, one knows at a glance, either by the Speaker's wig or the position of the Mace, whether the House is in full session or merely in Committee; the Thing is under the Table if the House is not at its fullest and best; aliter if it is on the Table.

The advantage, to members entering the House of being able to see by reference to the position of a sizable object like the Mace, what the state of the House is or what is required of them in the way of demeanour, must be obvious to all.

And it is safe to say that as a direct result of Mr. Beckett's Parliamentary misdemeanour, the Mace has never stood so high in the affection and esteem of the faithful Commons as it does to-day.—L.J., 1930, p. 93.

Offences without the Realm.—An interesting letter from Sir John Fisher Williams appeared in The Times this week (August 13), in which he dealt with the claim by the Soviet Government to try foreigners for offences committed outside its territory. The learned writer pointed out that the claim is not without precedent in the criminal codes of other countries, and specified Turkey and Italy as cases in point. Moreover, several Judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice approved the claim by dicta delivered in the Turkish case of the Lotus. There is sanction for it in our own criminal code. It is true that, at common law, the jurisdiction of the Courts is territorial, not personal; and the rule is so stated with correctness in the indispensable "Archbold" (1927, at p. 28), citing the authority of Macleod v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (1891, A.C. 455, 60 L.J. (P.C.) 55). But there are many statutory exceptions to the rule, which may be discovered by the student in the course of a day's research. As to treason—to take the first instance—it can never be doubted that a British subject, at all events, may be tried within the realm for adhering to the King's enemies by acts done without it. Any doubt which may have existed on the point was set at rest by the historic judgment in Rex v. Casement (1917, 1 K.B. 98; 86 L.J. (K.B.) 467). The one thing which appears to be essential in such cases is that the offender should be present at the trial and have the right to cross-examine those whose testimony supports the charge.—L.J., 1930, p. 102.

The Cost of Litigation.—As we noted at the time (ante p. 17), the Lord Chancellor intimated at the recent Mansion House Banquet to the Judges that he was considering appointing a committee to consider the question of the cost of litigation, which was brought into prominence by the Report of the Parliamentary and Commercial Law Committee of the London Chamber of Commerce. It was announced recently that Lord Sankey would receive, after the Long Vacation, a deputation from that Chamber on the subject; and it may be assumed that he will then be able to indicate more precisely what he has in mind. In the meantime, the topic of the cost of litigation is being canvassed in various papers; and, as might be expected, some of the contributions are better informed than others. Two articles by well-known members of the Bar, which deserve careful consideration, have recently appeared; the first, "The Curse of Trial by Jury" in the Quarterly Review for July, and is from the pen of Mr. Claud Mullins, and the other by Mr. Alfred Fellows, appeared in the Daily Telegraph of August 1. Mr. Mullins' paper is a wholly admirable one; his main point is that our rules of evidence—which are admittedly largely responsible for the cost of legal proceedings—are "the child of the jury system," and that so long as the standard for all litigation is that of trial by jury, there will be no cheaper justice. It follows in his view, and we are largely in agreement with him, that cheaper litigation so far as common law matters are concerned, will involve a restriction of the right to trial by jury in civil cases. At present the rules of evidence are the same whether a case is being tried with a jury or by a judge alone; but it is obvious that it would be possible to dispense with some of the strictness of proof at present insisted on if the case were being dealt with by a trained legal mind alone. Mr. Fellows' practical suggestion for reducing the cost of litigation is that trustees should be entitled to rely on an opinion of counsel as to the construction of a document, instead of having to take the opinion of the Court. This is a comparatively minor matter, and we doubt if the suggestion would be found to be satisfactory.—L.J., 1930, p. 102.

School and Office Training.—Mr. Reed finds the justification for the scientific teaching of law in the complexity which modern conditions have produced. "The ideal preparation," he says, "for any occupation, when applicable, is the apprenticeship method—participation under supervision in the actual activities of the craft. Whenever this method is appropriate, any elaborate apparatus for theoretical instruction is a waste of time." And the law was at one time so simple that "this was a suitable and satisfactory method of preparing young men to enter the legal profession." But that time has passed, and the law of the present day is so complex, "that large portions of it, in order to be mastered by the student, must be presented to him systematically, instead of being left to be picked up in the haphazard way that formerly sufficed." And so the student has to be prepared by book-learning, leaving practical knowledge to be acquired by such devices as moots and the case method, or better, by actual work in the office. There is no doubt much to be said for this view, especially in America, with its forty-eight independent systems of State law. In this variety, the grasp of principle which the systematic study of the law provides forms a necessary help to the lawyer. But perhaps the desire to raise the standard of legal practice is a still stronger reason for the spread of the Law School. And with this desire is linked Mr. Reed's other subject—ethical standards. Many attempts, it seems, are being made in the States to exclude from the profession men who are unworthy of it, but it is a difficult task to find any test which does not degenerate into a mere form. "It is impossible," he says, "to be certain how a young man or woman will react to temptation before the temptation occurs." It is the old theme that "cloistered virtue" is a poor asset. Over here it is proposed to tackle an important part of the same problem by separate accounts and annual audits, but in actual life character is discovered and tells without these adventitious aids. Mr. Reed's Review of Legal Education, with its discussion of how a practical direction can be given to legal study, should be of great interest to teachers of law.—L.J., 1930, p. 116.

The Custody of a Child.—On Tuesday last the Court of Appeal dismissed an appeal in Re Carroll from an order of Mr. Justice Charles refusing a habeas corpus to bring up the body of Joan Margaret Carroll, an infant. The applicant for the writ was the child's mother. The child was illegitimate and had been born in April of last year at Warkworth House, Isleworth, an infirmary under the Middlesex County Council. Soon after the birth, the mother, who was a Roman Catholic, had transferred the custody of the infant to the respondents, the Homeless Children's Aid and Adoption Society, etc. (Incorporated), a Protestant rescue society, and had signed a consent to adoption by a Protestant couple under the Adoption of Children Act, 1926. The adopters, to whom the child was handed over last December, had intended to complete the process of adoption under the Act, but had received a letter from the Roman Catholic Chaplain to Warkworth House saying that Joan Margaret had been baptised by a Roman Catholic priest and that they were trying to find a Roman Catholic home for her. In the course of his judgment, the Lord Chief Justice (Lord Hewart), referred to Barnardo v. McHugh (1891) and to the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, which expressly laid down that "where in any proceeding . . . the custody or upbringing of an infant . . . is in question, the Court . . . shall regard the welfare of the infant as the first and paramount consideration," and he remarked that between 1891 and 1926 there seemed to have been a certain development of thought in such matters, though probably the mere wish of a parent of an illegitimate child would at no period have been allowed to supersede the real interest of the child. In the case of a girl his Lordship felt that the care and affection of a private home would be better than the control of any institution, especially as in the latter case the care and control would stop at an earlier age. Although the mother's wishes with regard to religion deserved consideration, he did not feel the welfare of the child would be served by handing her over to institutional care, however excellent. With regard to a parent's right as to a child's religion it was said that the mother, when applying to the Society, had forgotten this important matter; and as she later applied that her boy aged five should be put on the Protestant society's list for adoption or admission into one of their homes, counsel's view that she did not care two straws in which form her daughter was brought up seems to have been fully justified. The adopters had become fond of the child, and the decision in favour of home life as against institutional life seems to have been a thoroughly wise one.—L.T., 1930, p. 67.

• Juvenile Offenders.—The House of Commons on Tuesday of this week gave a first reading to a Bill brought in by Mr. Rhys Davies and supported by Lady Astor, Sir John Withers, and others, the object of which is to amend the law on the above subject in several respects. Its contents will be discussed in these columns at a later date; meantime, however, it should be noted that this Bill, in addition to several amendments of detail, makes such far-reaching proposals as the abolition of the death penalty up to eighteen years of age, the raising of the age of criminal responsibility from seven to eight years of age, and the raising of the age limit for Juvenile Courts from sixteen to seventeen. One other interesting proposal is to abolish the registration of convictions in respect of offences committed by children, on the ground that convictions for even trivial offences committed in early youth do, as the law now stands, follow the individual throughout his life.—L.T., 1930, p. 68.

Income Tax Appeals.—On Thursday of last week Lord Dunedin, in the House of Lords, called attention to the practice of appeals in income-tax cases, and made some interesting suggestions on the subject. His Lordship referred to his own recent remarks, in the judicial business of the House, on the Crown's practice of coming to their Lordships on every occasion on which they lost, without regard to the importance of the case. We have already referred in these columns to his Lordship's remarks on this subject in the course of his judgments in the Burma Corporation Case (ante, p. 185) and Jones v. Leeming (ante, p. 254), and we noted with regard to the latter case that there had been "Judicial unanimity on the part of the trial Judges and the three Judges of the Court of Appeal," and that "the amount involved was only £130." On the present occasion Lord Dunedin stated he had learnt that in the latter case the Crown had told the litigant they were prepared to pay his costs as between solicitor and client. Earlier, on the 25th March last, the same case was referred to specifically in questions asked in the House of Commons, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. P. Snowden, in his reply, said the case—which had, it may be recalled, been referred to by their Lordships as “one of the simplest”—“was one in which the Board of Inland Revenue felt bound to seek an authoritative ruling from the highest tribunal on a point of income-tax law on which the guidance given by previous judicial decisions in other cases was uncertain,” adding that, “in accordance with their established practice in appeals of this type they undertook from the outset to pay the taxpayer’s costs, whatever the event, both in the Court of Appeal and in the House of Lords.” Sir W. Davison thereupon asked whether it was now clear that in future in all cases which, the law being in doubt, the Inland Revenue took to the highest court, the costs of the taxpayer would be reimbursed by the department, but the Chancellor replied that the hon. member must draw no such conclusion.—L.T., 1930, p. 317.

Lord Dunedin's Suggestions.—In Lord Dunedin’s opinion there was a perfectly easy remedy for the alleged abuse. His Lordship thought that when the Crown won in the Court of Appeal the taxpayer should go further only at his own risk, but that when the taxpayer won in that court the Crown should not be allowed to come to their Lordships’ House except with the leave of the Court of Appeal, who should be given a discretion to clog their permission with conditions as to costs. The Court of Appeal could very well be trusted to give leave to appeal in all proper cases, e.g., where judicial opinion on the case had been as nearly as possible divided, or, at any rate, not unanimous, or where, even though there had been unanimity, the question involved was of far-reaching importance. The Paymaster-General, Lord Arnold, stated that the Inland Revenue did not enter appeals from decisions given against them by the Court of Appeal or the Court of Session unless there was a large sum of money at stake, or an important point of principle in issue which would involve large sums in other cases, and in all cases where the board was seeking to establish some new point of principle in tax administration they paid the taxpayer’s costs in any event. Lord Hailsham was unwilling that the Crown should in revenue cases have imposed on it a limitation to which no other litigant had to submit. The real remedy, in his view, lay in a more rigid examination of cases by the Law Officers. When he was Attorney-General, before an appeal was entered by the board to their Lordships' House, there first had to be an opinion by the Treasury counsel and the counsel for the commissioners, and then the petition of appeal had to be signed in the usual way by two counsel, one of whom in a Crown case would always be the Law Officer who had argued it before the Court of Appeal. It had been his practice, and he doubted not that it was the normal practice of a Law Officer, before signing notice of appeal, further to consider the case, with which, of course, he was already familiar, and then to see the solicitor for the board and explain either that there should be no appeal, or, if there were one, that an undertaking should be given to pay costs, whichever way the appeal went. As Lord Arnold had pointed out, the Inland Revenue normally did that, at any rate, in cases in which they were seeking to decide some great point of principle where the actual stake was small. It seems to us that the matter should be regularised, and that the leave of the Court of Appeal should be required whenever the authorities wish to appeal without giving such an undertaking.—L.T., 1930, p. 318.

Departmental Powers.—While the committee presided over by Lord Donoughmore is deliberating this thorny question, a concrete example of what is involved has been put before the public in the appeal in the case of Rex v. Minister of Health; Ex parte Yaffe. The case, which relates to a housing scheme of the Liverpool Corporation, touches the fundamentals of the difficulty, and we have little doubt that the Court of Appeal hearing is but a further stage in its journey to the House of Lords, whither the Crown were, indeed, invited by Lord Justice Scrutton to take it. The cardinal question is whether, as a result of a clause enacting that the order of the Minister, when made, shall have effect as if enacted in the Act, an order is of such effect that a scheme in the making of which statutory conditions have not been observed acquires, by virtue of the making of the order, full statutory authority and cannot be touched by certiorari. It may be remembered that, in discussing the case when before the court of first instance, we expressed the opinion that the dissenting judgment was the more correct, and that if any of the steps leading to the order had been omitted the Minister could not be said to have made an order under the all-powerful section. It is interesting to note that this is the unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal, bringing the votes in its favour to four against two.

Should it ever become a habit with Government departments, as it well might, had the decision gone otherwise, to attach but secondary importance to the question whether they in fact possessed the powers they purported to exercise, then, indeed, there would be justification for attaching to them the opprobrious epithet of Star Chamber, which Lord Justice Scrutton affixed to clauses of the kind in question. The case of Ex parte Yaffe will, we feel, go down to history.—L.T., 1930, p. 343.

Discretion in Divorce.—On Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, in the case of Apted v. Apted and Bliss, the principles governing the exercise of the court's discretion to grant relief where a petitioner has been guilty of adultery were reviewed by the Attorney-General on the instructions of the King's Proctor. In May of last year it was proved in that case that each of the parties to the marriage had been living in adultery, and the President (Lord Merivale) adjourned the case in order to obtain assistance in considering the public interests involved in that and similar cases. The Attorney-General said that the fact that he had brought to bear on the subject "a fresh and untutored mind" had made him realise the judges' difficulties in such cases and the extreme gravity of the questions at issue. He referred to the rules to regulate the discretion which were laid down by Lord Penzance in Morgan v. Morgan and Porter (1869, 20 L.T. Rep. 588), and he described as prophetic a passage in the judgment in that case where Lord Penzance said: "A loose and unfettered discretion of this sort upon matters of such grave import is a dangerous weapon to entrust to any court, still more to a single judge." On reference to the case it will be found that Lord Penzance added, with regard to this discretion, that: "Its exercise is likely to be the refuge of vagueness in decision and the harbour of half-formed thought. Under cover of discretion, a conclusion is apt to be formed upon a general impression of facts too numerous and minute to be perfectly brought together and weighed, and sometimes not perfectly proved; while the result is apt to be coloured with the general prejudices, favourable or otherwise, to the person whose conduct is under review, which the course of the evidence has evoked. Upon such materials, so used, two minds will hardly ever form a judgment alike, and the same mind will often appear to others to form contradictory judgments on what seem to be similar facts. This invites public criticism and shakes public confidence in the justice of the tribunal."—L.T., 1930, p. 363.

Expense of Litigation.—As a result of representations from members of the London Chamber of Commerce the Parliamentary and Commercial Law Committee of that body recently appointed a small but competent sub-committee of solicitors, accountants, and others, with Mr. E. G. Roscoe as chairman, to report on the present cost of litigation in this country. In their report just to hand the sub-committee state that their observations are intended to cover litigation, including both actions in the High Court and arbitrations, arising out of ordinary business relationships, but to take no note of divorce matters, libel and slander cases, and other more or less domestic or personal proceedings. Among the features of the present system which the report selects for criticism are the pleadings, frequently of considerable length, which have to be settled by counsel; the punctilious production of all documents; the numerous interlocutory proceedings, many of which are attended by counsel—the pace in this respect being often set by the richer litigant; the minute proof of all documents and facts by oral evidence in court; the automatic increase of a junior's fee with that of his leader; the expense of expert testimony; the cost of copies, and the present-day tendency of the courts to go into matters of detail at great length, and so prolong the duration of trials inordinately.—L.T., 1930, p. 391.

Suggested Remedies.—The report admits that “the English procedure, like so many products of England, is, apart from cost, the most perfect of its kind in the world,” but it characterises that procedure as an expensive luxury and beyond the means of people who are neither very poor nor very rich. The authors of the report think the present separation of the two sides of the legal profession should be ended, but they recognize that the time may not yet be ripe for fusion, and that they have to deal with what is immediately practicable. Coming to remedies for the present discontents, the report finds that the main cause of expense to litigants is the English law of evidence, and that the first method of cheapening litigation is to be found in the compulsory, and not merely optional simplification of proof. The recommendations under this head, put very shortly, are (a) That all documents should be accepted in evidence unless formally challenged; (b) that the evidence of witnesses be presented in the form of signed and attested statements; (c) that foreign evidence should always be given by affidavit or declaration; and (d) that in really technical matters an assessor should sit with the judge as an adviser, just as the Elder Brethren sit in Admiralty cases, and that expert evidence should be only sparingly allowed. With regard to the fees paid to counsel, the views are expressed that the two-thirds rule should be abolished, but that the junior's fees for work done before trial should be increased. Against this it may, however, be urged that a heavy fee on a leader's brief is some evidence of the importance and difficulty of a case and the responsibility involved in the earlier work, and that a general raising of pre-trial fees would not cover this. Among other suggestions made are that proceedings before trial should be simplified; that only where important principles are involved should counsel's fees be allowed in interlocutory matters; that dates should always be fixed for trials; and that the management of the Law Courts should be entrusted to a business manager, who should be a responsible whole-time organiser such as "a solicitor who has had experience of organisation in the Army or a Government office." The framers of the report have, as they claim, endeavoured to go to the root of the matter, and as the questions discussed are not without interest to lawyers generally, we have given a brief summary of the suggestions which the sub-committee recommend "to the careful consideration of all business men, and also the Bench and legal profession."—L.T., 1930, p. 391.

Land Registry Speed.—The report of the Chief Land Registrar, Mr. J. S. Stewart-Wallace, for the financial year 1929-30, shows that the past year has been one of record expansion marked by four outstanding features, namely: (i) An increase in the speed of all registrations; (ii) a record increase in voluntary registrations; (iii) a new fee order largely reducing the scale of fees; and (iv) new rules improving the practice of the registry. The Land Registry has been and is self-supporting, the estimated surplus of the fee income over expenditure for the year in question being £78,500. With regard to the speed of registrations, the average time for first registrations in London in 1929 was 7.4 days as against 9.3 in 1928, while the average time for dealings with registered land has been reduced from 6.8 days in 1928 to 4.8 days last year. In view of this greatly increased speed of first registrations the report notes a suggestion that the examination of title in the Registry may have been lightened to an undesirable extent. To rebut this suggestion the report points out that every title has on first registration been considered by a barrister or solicitor of an average standing of over twenty years; that points of doubt are referred to more senior officers, who, if necessary, consult the Chief Land Registrar, and that before a decision is come to in any case raising an important issue, the opinion of the Conveyancing Counsel to the Court or other expert is usually taken. In addition, through the system of indexing titles which have been examined, the Registry is often able to point out matters unknown to applicants for registration, and this possibility furnishes "one of the hidden advantages of registration" by allowing flaws in title so discovered to be rectified while all parties are living and available. Moreover, as the report points out, even were examinations imperfect and perfunctory, no risk would be incurred by registered holders by reason of the State indemnity. As regards the volume of work in compulsory and non-compulsory areas, the first registration of and dealings with registered land in 1929 together total 116,979 as against 110,600 during the previous year.—L.T., 1930, p. 440.

The Debt Repudiating States.—The Council of Foreign Bondholders have issued a report as to international defaulters in payment of debt and interest. As might be expected, Russia overtops the rest. For what the defence is worth, the Government of Russia can plead both youth and poverty, and there is some suggestion of a counter-claim in respect of armed expeditions to overthrow the Soviet Government. Perhaps, when it is a little older and wiser, it will learn the value of common honesty. No such defence is available, however, for the second in the list of the defaulters, namely certain component parts of the United States. The unfortunate holders of bonds of the State of Mississippi and other defaulters who shelter under the Stars and Stripes may perhaps wonder why a family harbouring so many black sheep is so shocked at the Soviet's dishonesty that it declines to give the Russian Government official recognition. M. Stalin may plead, if he pleases, that the American repudiations had afforded him a valuable precedent. Incidentally, the Council also deal with the suggestion made on behalf of the defaulting States, that, after the lapse of so many years, the original holders of these bonds are dead, and their executors, administrators and assigns may be difficult to trace, and, any how, have got used to the loss of their capital and interest. The same argument would no doubt be available to the ordinary thief, if he had retained his swag for fifty years. The answer is, of course, that, whoever may be entitled to the money, the States which have obtained it on the false pretences of payment of interest and repayment of capital have no right to it. And so long as the repudiation exists the whole of the United States is tainted with the fraud, and the accusation of dishonour cannot be met with a technical defence on the Constitution. Moreover, honour knows no Statute of Limitations, and exacts payment to the uttermost farthing.—S.J., 1930, p. 253.

Pleadings.—Pleadings have been defined briefly by the late Mr. Blake Odgers as statements in writing delivered by each party alternately to his opponent stating what his contention will be at the trial, and giving all such details as his opponent needs to know in order to prepare his case in answer. By reason of their very nature, as above outlined, pleadings would appear to be a necessity inseparably associated with legal procedure; and it is not, therefore, surprising to find their original usage practically contemporaneous with the beginnings of our legal system. At first conducted orally, pleadings were, according to Mr. Blake Odgers, probably first drawn up on paper in the reign of Edward IV, but it was not until the passing of the Judicature Act, 1873, that the modern rules of pleading were formulated. Having regard to their venerable history and to the well-tested statutory provisions governing their use, it is not a little surprising to find a High Court Judge saying that “pleadings are often a mere farce and ought to be abolished” (Mr. Justice Wright in Penney v. Photomaton Parent Corporation, Ltd., “The Times,” 5th April). It is a little difficult to believe that his Lordship was expressing the opinion that all pleadings should be completely abolished, and his use of the word “often” would appear to support that belief. Pleadings in some form or another there must be, in order adequately to acquaint the court briefly with the matter in dispute, and in Truth of the 9th April a writer says: “Over thirty years ago a determined effort was made to do away with them, an attempt that failed completely, not only because of the innate conservatism of lawyers, but because of the appalling difficulty of preparing for trial without any idea what one’s opponent’s case may be. Compared with this the trouble and expense entailed in delivering pleadings is quite negligible.” Unfortunately, in these days of comparative poverty the expense entailed in respect of pleadings merits and has received a good deal of consideration. Judicial notice of the matter was taken by Mr. Justice Hill in the case of The Ciss, which came before his Lordship on the 16th April, when he said that he thought that the parties in the case had acted very wisely in having merely typed and not printed pleadings. In his opinion it would be highly desirable in limitation actions, when there was no real issue which would lead to a fight, for the pleadings to be typed and not printed. That would save expense. He did not like to give any general directions, but it was worth considering whether the whole of our system of dealing with the printing of pleadings did not need to be revised. The system of printing arose at a time when typewriting was unknown and when probably printing was cheaper than making a large number of longhand copies. Speaking for himself, he would raise no objection to typewriting instead of printing if it meant a saving of expense. If, in fact, however, pleadings were to be abolished, what would take their place? To state the case orally would be to revert to the original practice, and no doubt, in due course, a learned judge would request counsel to put a particularly intricate case in writing so that in the long run the modern pleading would evolve again. Better to profit by experience and retain what we have gained, provided that the profits of experience are not outrageous!—S.J., 1930, p. 307.

A Tangled Web.—Mr. Justice Mackinnon commented to the Grand Jury at the Manchester Spring Assizes on a case of folly, rather than of criminality, as he put it. It beautifully illustrates the moral couplet addressed to Victorian youth: "Oh, what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive!" A married man, said the judge, desired to live with a woman not his wife, and yet to give her the coveted marriage lines. An obliging brother went through the ceremony, signing the register, not with his own name, but with that of his married brother, then about to contract the irregular union. The latter wove another strand in the web by signing as his single brother. Exeunt omnes, all satisfied; the judge labels them as "incredible donkeys." Came the time when the single man wanted to take a real wife. He now stands charged with bigamy. Do the facts, if proved, constitute that offence? "Whosoever, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the former husband or wife," commits bigamy, 24 and 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 57. It is obvious that the same word is used in two senses in the same sentence. "Married" means lawfully married, and the validity of the first marriage must be proved by the prosecution [R. v. Kay (1887) 16 Cox 292]. "Marry," in the second place in the sentence, must mean "go through a ceremony of marriage." Now, did the obliging brother "marry" the irregular second mate of the married man? One of the requisites of a valid marriage is "that the parties, understanding the nature of the contract, should freely consent to marry one another" (Halsbury's "Laws of England," vol. xvi, para. 512). Here the parties did not consent to marry one another, and both were cognizant of a wilful misdescription done by the interchange of names between the brothers. We will not anticipate the decision of the court at the trial, but it may be the defence will be set up that the man charged with bigamy only went through an invalid performance with No. 1 wife, and therefore well and truly married No. 2. That is not bigamy.—S.J., 1930, p. 307.

Wife's Legal Costs as "Necessaries."—As was said by Lord Justice Greer in the recent case of H. S. Wright & Webb v. Annandale (decided in the Court of Appeal on 5th inst.) "it is an undoubted principle of law that a wife living apart from her husband who is unwilling to maintain her has a right at common law to pledge his credit for necessities, and, included in that term is the right to instruct a solicitor in proceedings taken by her against her husband or to defend proceedings taken against her by him." But as he proceeded to point out, there is a well-established exception to that rule, namely, where the wife has committed adultery. In "Lush on Husband and Wife," 3rd ed., pp. 394, 407, it is stated that "the wife's right to assume her husband's assent to her contracts for necessities exists only where she continues chaste." In the case before the Court of Appeal it was strenuously argued that this states the law much too widely, and that it is only when the wife is "living in adultery" that her power to pledge her husband's credit ceases to exist. All the members of the court rejected this contention and approved the statement of the law as appearing in "Lush on Husband and Wife." The court also rejected a second contention that the position of the wife as to pledging her husband's credit for costs is different according as she is the attacking or defending party—a distinction for which there appeared to be some ground in the judgment of Lord Justice Scrutton in Durnford v. Baker, (1924) 2 K.B. 587, 600, but the learned Lord Justice retracted his earlier view on this point. The decision on the two points logically follows from the earlier cases of Durnford v. Baker, supra, and Arnold & Weaver v. Amari, (1928) 1 K.B. 584, but it undoubtedly bears hardly upon the wife's solicitors who, while acting for her, were quite unaware of her matrimonial offences. The court, however, drew attention to the decision of the late Sir Samuel Evans in Jinks v. Jinks, (1911) P. 120, where the withdrawal of a retainer by a wife who was the petitioner in a suit for judicial separation was held not to deprive her solicitor of the right to carry in his bill and tax his costs in the Divorce Division.—S.J., 1930, p. 308.

Dangerous Walking.—Almost invariably one finds that the type of pedestrian who loudly claims as much right to the road as the motorist not infrequently courts disaster by deliberately sauntering in front of approaching motor-cars with the apparently obvious intention of inconveniencing and annoying the driver. All motorists are unpleasantly familiar with this intensely objectionable class of individual, and are more than justified in feeling strong resentment that no effective measures have so far been evolved to secure for him his just deserts. The already huge yearly total of road accidents continues to increase, and will doubtless do so until steps are taken to punish pedestrians as well as drivers who offend against the generally accepted rules of the road. The possibility of dealing with obdurate walkers was referred to recently by Mr. Morrison, the Minister of Transport, at the first-annual meeting of the Pedestrians' Association. So far, said Mr. Morrison, we had not followed some other countries in imposing penalties for dangerous and reckless walking, and he hoped that such action would not become necessary, but if fatal road accidents continued to increase it might be necessary in the public interest to impose penalties on pedestrians who walked to the common danger. How, it may be asked, would "walking to the common danger" be defined? It would of necessity be a question of degree dependent upon a number of widely varying circumstances. The partially deaf or blind, or the aged, for instance, would, of course, be entitled to greater consideration than those in possession of their full faculties. The legislature would, we think, in all the circumstances, be unwise to introduce any punitive measures for the benefit of pedestrians, and, after all, there are few intentionally reckless walkers; most of us are only too willing to keep out of the way of a motor-car. If, moreover, the suggested course were adopted, confusion would be bound to result in actual practice when cases arose for consideration. Lastly, surely the onus of keeping out of the way, so to speak, must be on those who choose to go at a great speed in vehicles over which they should have control.—S.J., 1930, p. 309.

THE NUMBER OF HERITABLE BANDHUS IN THE MITAKSHARA SYSTEM.*

Bandhu succession is perhaps the one branch of Hindu Law where uncertainty and arbitrary speculation still hold the field and would continue to do so until statutory codification comes to our rescue.

In this Article I intend to draw attention to what appears to be a very simple matter, viz., the total number of bandhus that could be recognised as heritable in the Mitakshara system. On this matter, in spite of 50 years' discussion, no two writers agree. The accompanying list illustrates this:—

Some of the eminent writers like Ghose and Sarkar Sastri do not make any calculations nor give a prepared List of Bandhus. Both these severely criticise Sarvadhikari's theories and from this we have to guess what the probable total number would be according to their schemes. Let us now examine some of the above lists.

For the determination of heritable bandhuship four fundamental rules have so far been formulated. They are—

1. The degree-rule.
2. The rule of mutuality of sapindaship.
3. The rule of parent's mutuality of sapindaship.
4. The rule of fixed family lines.

The total number of bandhus depends entirely upon the view a writer takes about each one of these rules. On each of these rules wide and sometimes irreconcilable difference of opinion has become manifest.

About the first rule the divergence of opinion is widest. There are nearly seven points of view: (1) For purposes of inheritance the Mitakshara neither defines sapindaship nor formulates any degree-rule. Most of the writers have sought to borrow both from the Chapter on Marriage. Those who demur to this will have to analyse the cases of the persons mentioned in Satatapa's text and deduce a rule applicable for the purpose. This would give a rule of four degrees only and upon this rule we get a total number of 47 male bandhus only.¹¹ (2) But the majority of writers have agreed to apply an all-round rule of 5 degrees. Among these, however, it is only one—Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar—who has wholly and consistently adopted this rule. (3) For, led by Sarvadhikari, almost all these writers—Bhattacharya, Mayne, Trevelyan, Mulla and Gour—make an exception in the case of FMF₃ (and S₂DS₂) and thereby adopt a special rule of 6 degrees, although they want us all to believe that FMF₃ is not beyond 5 degrees. (4) As regards the 7 degree-rule, Sarkar seems to apply it all round both to paternal and maternal sides as well as to ascending and descending lines. (5) Venkatasubba Rao, J., in *Kesarsingh v. Secretary of State for India*¹² is inclined to apply the rule of 7 degrees to paternal side and of 5 degrees to maternal side. (6) Mandlik¹³ followed by "Jurisprudence" applies the rule of 5 degrees to the maternal ascending side and the rule of 7 degrees to the paternal ascending side as well as to all descending lines whether descent is traced through a son or a daughter. (7) Hindu writers like Haradatta and Kamalakara compute the degrees from the point of view of the common ancestor and not of the parties.¹⁴

Much confusion prevailed about the second rule mainly because Sarvadhikari tacked to its formulation the other two rules also with the result that all those who felt themselves unable to accept the other rules attacked the main rule also. As regards the main rule, however, as distinguished from the other two rules, the majority are in favour of accepting it and the Privy Council also has approved of it. This rule necessarily cuts off a very large number of bandhus from heritability. In fact, on the basis of this rule you can have mainly an all-round five-degree rule and none else. For, as Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar points out, even where from one side you could proceed up to 7 degrees, from the other side which traces immediately through a female you could go only up to 5 degrees, so that, in order to preserve mutuality you have to adopt an all-round rule of 5 degrees.¹⁵

The third rule has been suggested by Sarvadhikari¹⁶ as well as Ganapathi Aiyar.¹⁷ The rule seeks to exclude the children of a parent where the parent is not a sapinda although the children may be sapindas. This rule also thus affects the number of bandhus.

The last rule was the pet child of Sarvadhikari. Analysing the cases of the 9 persons mentioned in Satatapa's Text this writer formulated that the claimant must always belong to the line of MF¹⁸ of three fixed families—of P or of his parents. Apart from other vital defects this theory was ab initio fallacious. For, even in the lines of families found in Satatapa's Text there are two distinct divisions—agnatic (lines of P and of his F₁ to F₄) and cognatic, and it is only the latter division that admits of the tripartite family grouping. Sarvadhikari kari himself was therefore forced to add two more fixed family lines—those of P and of F₁ to F₄. Since the list was not exhaustive, the cognate division should all be filled up and then analysed. This division would then yield, according to Ganapathi Aiyar's calculations,¹⁹ not three family lines only, but seven such lines—the MF lines of P, F₁, F₂, FM, M, ME and M₂. If the rule of 7 degrees is adopted the number of such family lines would further increase. It may now be taken without repeating the numerous criticisms levelled against it by several Judges and writers, that this theory of Sarvadhikari is now discredited as being untenable.

(18) MF is Mother's father. Similarly F₂ is P's FF, FM is Father's mother, S is Son, D is Daughter, B is Brother, D₂S₂ is Daughter's daughter's son's son and so on.

We have now seen the wide difference among writers about the number of bandhus and also the source cause for such difference. We shall now see the actual schemes of these writers as to how they arrive at their figures and compare the results.

SCHEME UNDER FOUR-DEGREE RULE.

The accompanying Table illustrates this scheme:—

TABLE I.

Among descendants those who are not repeated are italicised. In all there are 7 ascendent lines—3 agnatic and 4 cognatic, and then there is P's own line. In each line there are 7 male and 7 female descendants. Among the former 3 are agnatic and 4 are cognatic. These persons would satisfy every other rule of every writer. They would also satisfy the rule of spiritual benefit in addition. The scheme would correspond to the coparcenary scheme based on the rule of unobstructed heritage in agnatic succession. The total number of bandhus under the scheme would be as follows:—

(1) Male bandhus.

Cognatic ascendants	..	..	4
Their 3 agnatic descendents	..	..	12
4 cognatic descendents of 8 lines	..	..	32
Total including DS			48

(2) Female bandhus.

Wives of cognatic ascendants	..	..	4
7 descendents of 8 lines	..	..	56
Total including D			60

(3) Grand total excluding D and DS 47 plus 59 equals 106,

THE NORMAL SCHEME UNDER FIVE-DEGREE RULE.

The scheme would exclude FMP₃ and S₂DS₂ and would accept all the other three rules in full. It is illustrated by the accompanying Table II. Ganapathi Aiyar's scheme is simply its variation based on the rejection of the fourth rule.

TABLE II.

In this scheme there are 11 ascendent lines—4 agnatic and 7 cognatic. Of the 30 descendents of a line, 26 are cognatic, of whom 8 persons, namely—D₂S₂, D₃S, DS₃, DS₂S, DS₂D, DSD₂, D₂SD, D₄—are to go as they violate the fourth rule. There would then remain 11 female and 7 male cognatic descendents per line. The total number of bandhus would be as follows:—

(1) Males.

Cognatic ascendants	..	..	7
Their 4 agnatic descendents	..	..	28
7 cognatic descendents of 12 lines	..	..	84
Total including DS			119

(2) Females.

Wives of cognatic ascendants	..	..	7
11 descendents of the 12 lines	..	..	132
Total including D			139

(3) Grand total excluding D and DS 118 plus 138 equals 256.

Of these female bandhus about half a dozen only have so far received judicial recognition in Madras.

SARVADHIKARI'S LIST.

Sarvadhikari's scheme is the original model for all the popular text-book writers on Hindu Law. The above Table II illustrates all these variations. From the previous scheme Sarvadhikari's list excludes DS in P's line and SD₂S in F₁ to F₄'s lines²⁰ and includes FMF₃ and 3 of his cognate descendents.²¹ The result is as follows:—

Cognatic ascendants	..	..	8
Their 4 agnatic descendents	..	..	32
7 cognatic descendents of cognatic ascendants except FMF ₃	..	..	49
6 cognatic descendents of P and F ₁ to F ₄	...	...	30
3 cognatic descendents of FMF ₃	..	..	3
Total			122

(20) Pp. 637—8, Nos. 27—30.

(21) P. 639, Nos. 85—87.

This List, however, does not conform to some of the principles enunciated by Sarvadhikari himself in the preceding portion of the chapter. For instance, no reason is offered for the omission of SD₂S of F₁ to F₄ in the List. On the other hand he is expressly stated to be atma bandhu, ex parte paterna to whom P is related as a matri bandhu.²² Again, Sarvadhikari expressly states that all the 7 cognatic descendents of FMF₃ should be excluded as "being more than five degrees removed from the deceased,"²³ but the List includes 3 of them for which no explanation is given. Further, he includes in brackets²⁴ (indicative of some reluctance) S₂DS₂ as a bandhu and his Tables I-a and II facing pp. 606—7 of his work, where this heir figures as S₅-a show that S₂DS₂ of P, F to F₄ and of FMF and FMF₂ should be recognised. But the final List omits these 7 persons without any explanation. P is the S₂DS₂ of his FMF₃ and when FMF₃ is to be included among ascendants there is no reason whatsoever to reject S₂DS₂. Both must stand or fall together.

Apart from these glaring inconsistencies which have not been noticed in the revised edition, the inclusion of FMF₃ by Sarvadhikari has the effect of upsetting one or other of the first three fundamental rules of bandhuship, and in order to reduce to a minimum the havoc caused by his act, poor Sarvadhikari is driven to the resort of all kinds of anomalous expedients to preserve, so far as may be, the sanctity of the second and the third rules at the expense of the first. Thus he expressly justifies the extension of the degree limit for the inclusion of FMF₃ on the sole ground that P and FMF₃ are mutually sapindas.²⁵

If this were a crucial test, then we may have to include the father of FMF₃ also as he is P's sapinda by frog's leap. But the learned Doctor excludes him as he violates the third rule; for, this FMF₄ is not a sapinda of P's father.¹ Nor is this a conclusive test. For instance, the father and grandfather of F₄ would satisfy the first and the third rules but are still excluded because, as Ganapathi Aiyar points out, their cognatic descendents would violate the second rule. For the same reason, we cannot include more than 5 degrees of agnatic descendents of any of the maternal cognatic ascendents nor admit any of the cognatic descendents of FMF₃. They would all violate the second rule. The 5th and 6th agnatic descendents of FMF, FMF₂ and FMF₃ do not no doubt violate the first two rules but they cannot come in as they violate the third rule. For, they would not be sapindas of P's father.

Expressed otherwise, the position comes to this: In all the above instances, the general degree rule as stated by the Mitakshara (of 7 and 5 degrees as the case may be) is fully satisfied but in every case the rule of an all-round five degrees is violated. Nevertheless these cases are not excluded on that score but on account of conflict with the other two rules. The result is that a universal rule of five degrees becomes untenable while the rule of 7 and 5 degrees would not have free sway but would be conditioned and twisted by the other two rules. In other words, there cannot be a fundamental rule of degrees at all. There would no doubt be a rule but it would not be a fundamental one. This leads to the anomaly of the offspring becoming more fundamental than the source, and existing and growing at the expense of the latter. We cannot escape this vicious circle until we concur with Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and boldly think of doubting the rule of mutuality in both its aspects.

It is this rule of mutuality that is now governing the law of bandhu succession. The third rule is partly a corollary and Sarvadhikari includes the fourth rule indistinguishably in this rule of mutuality. And it is this rule that is regulating the degree-rule. Thus all the four rules centre round this theory of mutuality. The theory no doubt evoked considerable criticism but almost the whole of it was directed against the fourth rule which Sarvadhikari had not separated from the second. The second rule by itself has been sought to be deduced from Manu IX. 187 as interpreted by Visveswara and Balam Bhatta² but it is not easy to say if such a deduction is correct.

It is a matter of considerable significance that none of the dozens of the commentators of Manu have interpreted this text which would in any way lend support to the above deduction. In fact Sarvadhikari who finds fault with Sir W. Jones's translation of this text as not bringing out the rule of mutuality contained in it admits that Jones's translation is based on the gloss of Kulluka Bhatta.³ Even if we ignore the silence and possible opposition of the ancient and authoritative commentators of

(2) Sarvadhikari, pp. 443-4; 22 Cal. 339; 42 Cal. 384 (P.C.).

(3) P. 443.

Manu to such an interpretation, it is doubtful if we could support it by the modern critico-historical method. In Manu's scheme of inheritance cognates have no place, and his rules, whatever they may be, cannot be applied to cognatic succession. Manu calls the 12 kinds of sons one's bandhus.⁴ Sarvadhikari himself admits that it was Yajnavalkya who for the first time recognised "Bandhus" as heirs⁵ and maternal ancestors as being entitled to receive funeral oblations.⁶ Such being the case, Manu's rules for sapindas, in the sense of the word then prevailing, cannot, on any validly historical and comparative principle, be extended to cognates or bandhus. Manu also states a single universal rule of 7 degrees.⁷ If this were adopted for cognates also the problem of mutuality or of its want would not arise at all. If Manu had in contemplation the case of cognates he would either have not enunciated the alleged rule of mutuality or have expressly applied the rule of 7 degrees to them also. But so far as the scheme he actually puts forward is concerned, he is consistent and clear. It is only when his alleged rule, which was formulated before the idea of admitting cognates to inheritance was born, is sought to be extended to them, coupled not with his rule of 7 degrees but with Yajnavalkya's rule of 7 and 5 degrees, that this trouble arises. But this attempt, to say the least, is unhistorical and not logical. Further, the context where this text occurs in Manu cannot be held to favour the intended interpretation. For, after stating in verse 185 that in the absence of sons, the father and then brothers succeed, Manu in the next verse interprets Pinda to mean funeral oblations. This is immediately followed by the text in question stating that sapindas next succeed. Here there was no occasion to enjoin mutuality at all.

Jimutavahana in fact relies very strongly on this context to support the meaning he gives to the word "sapinda". But how does the rule of mutuality fare in his system? Among his class of sapindas it is only the collaterals that can be said to have any mutuality with P; for, P is a sapinda of, say his F₂S₂, because the former offers pinda to the common ancestor to whom the latter offers pinda, and F₂S₂ is a sapinda of P because he offers pinda to the ancestor to whom P offers pinda. Their position is thus perfectly and exactly mutual. But this is not the case between P and either his ascendants or his descendents. For example, F₂ is a sapinda of P, because P offers pinda to him but P is a sapinda of F₂ not because the latter offers pinda to P but because he receives it from him. The case of P and S₂ is similar. Thus in this system sapindaship is determined not on the basis of reciprocity but on that of independent rules.

Even apart from these considerations, it is doubtful if the text even in its special form of translation would really bear out any theory of mutuality. Bannerjea, J., translates it on the basis of the commentaries of Visveswara and Balam Bhatta as "the property of a near sapinda shall be that of a near sapinda."⁸ Sarvadhikari on the basis of the same writers offers a different translation which reads as "Whoever is near to a sapinda, his property shall belong to him."⁹ Prima facie both the translations contain elements of ambiguity. Taking the latter first, the words "whoever," "sapinda," "his" and "him" are capable of meaning either P or the heir. By permutation we get four possible interpretations of this translation, viz., (1) Where P is near to a sapinda heir (of P), P's property belongs to the heir; (2) Where P is near to a sapinda heir (of P), that heir's property belongs to P; (3) Where an heir of P is near to his (the heir's) sapinda P, P's property belongs to the heir; (4) Where an heir of P is near to his (the heir's) sapinda P, the heir's property belongs to P. The first interpretation is indistinguishable from that of Sir W. Jones. In the fourth, P and the heir exchange places but the meaning is otherwise identical with that of the first. The second and third interpretations also mean that the properties of P or his heir go to their respective near sapindas. Thus Sarvadhikari's translation in any view of the case is not distinguishable from that of Jones. It need not be pointed out that these four interpretations are alternative and not simultaneous. It is only when they are taken simultaneously that any theory of mutuality could be implied, but this is opposed to all rules of grammar and logic. As regards Bannerjea's translation, he himself comments upon it to mean "From this it is clear that a man in order to be a heritable sapinda of the prepositus must be so related to him that they are sapindas of each other." It is doubtful if all this could be read into his translation. In the text as well as in the context the subject-matter of discussion is P. He is the known quantity and from him we proceed to ascertain his heir the unknown quantity. But Bannerjea's interpretation would reverse this position. For, his interpretation would read thus: "The property of a near sapinda of an heir of P shall be that of a near sapinda of P." Are we to hold that P is an unknown quantity who has to be specified as a sapinda of his own heir who is not yet named and ascertained? It seems to me that the mistake of Sarvadhikari and his followers arises in taking the words of the text not in a generic sense but in a narrow sense as referring to P and his heir individually. The text does not seem to refer to two individuals merely but to heirs in general and it merely states that sapindas generally take each other's property in the order of their nearness. The text enunciates not both propinquity and mutuality as Sarvadhikari thinks¹⁰ but only propinquity.

(8) 22 Cal. 339.

It may be argued that, whatever may be the natural meaning of the text or the idea of Manu or of any other Commentator, the Mitakshara uses the text to deduce this rule of mutuality and has been so understood by the authoritative commentators of the school like Visvesvara and Balam Bhatta. But this argument is not tenable. It is most important to note the context in which this text of Manu is cited by the Mitakshara. When arguing for the priority of the mother over the father, the Mitakshara states as follows:¹¹

"The father is a common parent to other sons, but the mother is not so; and since her propinquity is consequently greatest, it is fit that she should take the estate in the first instance conformably with the text, 'To the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs'."

"Nor is the claim in virtue of propinquity restricted to sapindas but, on the contrary, it appears from this very text that that rule of propinquity is effectual, without any exception, in the case of Samanodakas, as well as other relatives, when they appear to have a claim to succession."

Here the word used throughout is "Pratyasakti" or propinquity. There is not the ghost of an idea of mutuality. There was no need or occasion to think of mutuality. No question of mutuality would ever arise in the case of oneself and one's parents. It would be an insult to Vijnanesvara to say that he bases the superiority of the mother's claims over the father's on her possessing mutuality of sapindaship which the father lacks or that she possesses it in a greater degree than the father.

(10) P. 445.

(11) II. iii. 3—4. The same text is next cited to prefer the full brother to half-brother, II. iv. 5.

Under the context he could think, and think only of propinquity, and for this he cites Manu's text. He then goes to extend this principle of propinquity to the case of all heirs. It is thus perfectly clear that even if the text of Manu contains both the ideas of propinquity as well as mutuality, the Mitakshara accepts only one of them.

If we take the two paragraphs in the text of the Mitakshara separately, the absurdity of the theory becomes very clear. As already stated the idea of mutuality cannot have any place in a competition between the father and the mother. The third paragraph as it stands does not therefore support any theory of mutuality. Nor can the fourth be said to do so. If it were so it would have been expressly stated. For, if there was any occasion and appropriate place where the rule of mutuality should have been clearly and unambiguously stated it was in this paragraph. But what do we find here? Nothing but the rule of propinquity. Even if we could suppose that the previous paragraph adumbrates a theory of mutuality the fourth does not do so.

If we credit Vijnanesvara with at least as much common sense and shrewdness as we profess, we must admit that he would have known that the break in mutuality of sapindaship arises not among agnates but among cognate sapindas of the paternal side. And if he really wanted to enunciate any rule of mutuality he would have done so only when he was dealing with the succession of such cognate sapindas. But he is altogether silent about this rule when he is dealing with bandhus. Nor, for the matter of that, does he anywhere expressly, clearly and unambiguously enunciate any such rule. Even apart from Vijnaneswara, how is it that not a single other commentator including Visveswara and Balam Bhatta state any such rule in unequivocal words either when dealing with bandhu succession, which is the proper place to do so, or anywhere else? The Sarvadhikari school have not been able to cite a single passage from any of these which would directly or indirectly show that these writers had any comprehension of such a rule. On the other hand, writer after writer of the Southern School has sought to lessen the rigour of the degree-rule even in the case of marriage in order to validate the customary sanction of the marriage of maternal uncle's daughter. The degree-rule is a rule of exclusion in marriage but is a rule of inclusion in succession. A tendency that aims to restrict the number of degrees in the former case would aim to increase, not to restrict the same in the field of succession. A rule of mutuality which would exclude a number of persons otherwise qualified would be repugnant to such a tendency. It is impossible to find any support anywhere for this theory until the fertile brain of Sarvadhikari invented it fifty years ago.

It may be said that at last two eminent writers—Visvesvara and Balam Bhatta—interpret this text when commenting on the Mitakshara in such a way as to support the rule of mutuality. Even supposing they do so, how far can it be recognised as authoritative? It is clear that their view is unprecedented and is not also followed by anybody else. Several other more useful doctrines of Balam Bhatta are discredited as being novel and peculiar, and why then should we make an exception in the case of this rule of mutuality? Is it demanded on the ground of natural justice or equity? On the other hand, equity and natural justice would at least in this matter join hands with the letter of the law to oppose its introduction. These two writers are authorities only in the Benares School and need not be followed by the other schools. Even in the Benares School their position is not of first rank.¹²

But is it after all true that these two writers really adumbrate any such theory of mutuality? Their comments on the two paragraphs of the Mitakshara, wherein the text of Manu in question occurs, do not contain any such theory. They do not even indirectly hint at it. What they do is to interpret the text of Manu cited in the passage of the Mitakshara in a peculiar way. If this interpretation be held to support any full-fledged theory of mutuality it is opposed to the context and to what precedes and follows the citation. But it is not correct to say that the interpretation of the text contains any such unequivocal and full-fledged theory of mutuality. Their interpretation of the text is fully brought out in the translations of Sarvadhikari and Bannerjea¹³ and what we have said about these translations equally and exactly applies to the original interpretations of these two writers.

It would also be instructive to note the place where some of the other writers cite this text of Manu and the interpretation they put on it. After finishing the case of the compact series of heirs, Apararka¹⁴ takes up the case of Gotrajas and there cites this text and declares that Gotrajas succeed in the order of their propinquity which is however to be determined by the text of spiritual benefit. In this scheme, then, mutuality has no place. The Smṛiti Chandrika¹⁵ cites this text to justify its two-line scheme of agnatic sapinda inheritance which has now been disapproved in Buddha Singh v. Lattu.¹⁶ The learned translator of this work appends a special foot-note¹⁷ to point out that this text is understood differently in the Smṛiti Chandrika and the version of Jimutavahana which corresponds to the translation of the text by Sir W. Jones "does not seem to be in strict accordance with the Sanskrit Text as quoted in the Smṛiti Chandrika." According to him the text should be translated as, "whoever is the next in the line of kinsmen (pinda), to him the inheritance belongs." This version as well as the context are both opposed to any theory of mutuality being deduced from the text. Visvesvara Bhatta in his *Madana Parijata*¹⁸ cites the text to declare that among brethren the order of succession is determined by propinquity. Here also there is no whisper of mutuality. Chandeswara in his *Vivada Ratnakara*¹⁹ cites it for the case of brothers and interprets the word "anantarah," "next" to mean the nearest. He is not aware of any theory of mutuality. Nilakanta²⁰ cites it to bring in the sister among the Gotrajas. Mandlik's translation of the text reads thus: "The wealth (of the deceased) goes to whoever is next among sapindas and the rest." This text is immediately followed by a text of Brihaspati which corroborates it. There is no idea of mutuality at all present to the mind of Nilakanta or to his learned translator. The same text is translated in Stoke's work thus: "To the nearest sapinda (male or female) after him in the third degree the inheritance next belongs."²¹ This translation is approved by Setlur.²² Madhavacharya's Dayavibhaga cites the text to prefer the uterine brother to the half brother and then in connection with the succession of the spiritual pre-

(18) Ch. VIII. We have three different translations of the text. Setlur, Hindu Law Books of Inheritance, p. 531, adopts Jone's translation. B. Sitarama Sastri, 9 M.L.J. at 102 (Jour.), does the same. Sarvadhikari, p. 340: "To the nearest kinsmen the property of the (deceased) sapinda next belongs."

(19) Ch. XXXIV. Sarv., pp. 346—7: "He who is next to the (deceased) sapinda, the property devolves upon him." B. Sitarama Sastri, 8 M.L.J. at 170 (Jour.): "To the nearest among the sapindas goes the wealth of the deceased." Setlur, p. 233, adopts the last.

coptor.²³ Burnell's translation reads thus:²⁴ "He who is the sapinda in course of succession, let him have the wealth." Setlur renders it differently²⁵: "Whoever is the nearest sapinda, to him the wealth belongs." Vachaspati's *Vivada Chintamani*¹ cites it in connection with brothers and Setlur has adopted the version of Jones. The *Sarasvati Vilasa*² and the *Viramitrodaya*³ both cite the text, like the Mitakshara, to prove the superiority of the mother to the father in the matter of propinquity and literally repeat all the arguments of the Mitakshara. Setlur has adopted the version of Jones for the latter work and renders it thus for the former:⁴ "The nearest among the sapindas takes his wealth." This review clearly shows that the idea of mutual-ity was not known to these writers or to their translators.⁵

It is therefore submitted that the acceptance of this theory of mutuality by the Privy Council requires reconsideration.

Now that we are at it, a few words may be said about the third fundamental rule also. Of the only two writers that suggest it, Sarvadhikari does not formulate it as an express rule. He merely wants to exclude sapindas by "frog's leap" and this necessarily creates this rule. Sarvadhikari does not discuss it but cites Mitra Misra in support of his view. Mitra Misra when arguing for the inclusion of the maternal uncle as a bandhu on the ground that his son is named in Satatapa's text, states: "It is extremely improper to give the heritage to the sons and to exclude from succession their father, though nearer in degree of affinity."⁶ This argument, so far as it goes, is perfectly valid, but it would be dangerous to push it to extremes. It is not good logic to convert an argument for inclusion of omitted persons into one for exclusion of admitted persons. Mitra Misra's argument when literally taken would not support Sarvadhikari's conclusion at all; for, on the one hand, the subject of exclusion is not P or his father but a remote ascendent like FMF₄, and on the other the argument states that since the son is included as a sapinda (by frog's leap) his father who is omitted for some other reason should nevertheless be included. The father may not be a sapinda for other purposes, but on Mitra Misra's argument he will have to be deemed to be nevertheless heritable. Beyond this we cannot push this argument. For, there are about four classes of instances where P may be a sapinda of a claimant, whereas his father or ascendent may not be so. These are: (1) P's wife; (2) P's maternal sapindas; (3) P's descendent sapindas that are beyond the degree limit to P's ascendents, e.g., S₆ is beyond 7 degrees to P's father, and P's S₂DS, SDS₂ or SD₂S are not sapindas of P's F₃ or F₄; (4) P's ascendent, through his father to whom P is a sapinda by "frog's leap," such as FMF₄, FMFMFM, FM₂F₃ and FM₃F₂. P has perfect mutuality of sapindaship with these ascendents. To these, P as well as his father, are both sapindas but to P's father they are not sapindas. Mitra Misra's argument cannot apply to the first three classes at all.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathi Aiyar defines it a little more carefully and more elaborately. He states the rule thus: "If a male or a female is not a sapinda of another, much less can the son of that male or female be the sapinda of that other, as his father or mother, having no corporal particles (of the given person or their common ancestor) in common with the given person, can transmit none to his son." The reason for this is to be found in the very definition of sapindaship in the Mitakshara which says that the grandson is a sapinda of his grandfather and the rest because the latter's particles of the body have entered into his own through his father in succession. Mr. Aiyar's rule as it stands is too wide, while the reason for it confines it to the fourth class of instances only. But he does not seem to perceive it. For, he states that the only class of instances of the kind which is not governed by the rule is the second class stated above. He does not allude to frog's leap theory. His reference to the mother is incorrect since frog's leap could never occur on the maternal side.

There is no express authority to be found anywhere in support of this rule. Mr. Aiyar's attempt to take it as an axiomatic deduction from the definition of sapindaship is not very convincing. It is not always a safe method in law. For instance, the Mitakshara elaborately argues that in all cases propinquity is the governing rule of preference and that the mother is more propinquous than the father. In the case of bandhu succession it states that the three classes succeed in the order of their propinquity. From these doctrines it must follow as an axiom that matri bandhus should be preferred to pitri bandhus. But the Mitakshara enumerates otherwise which is accepted as established law. Similarly, the third fundamental rule of bandhuship may be an axiomatic deduction from the definition of sapindaship and may be valid on medical and physiological grounds, but nevertheless we have express authority to recognise sapindaship by frog's leap and this express rule cannot be repudiated on the ground of its contradiction with the definition. In fact there is no contradiction at all here. According to the definition of sapindaship as well as according to medical and physiological grounds, P's father is much more related to the ascendent sapinda by frog's leap than P himself but the anomaly arises only through operation of the degree rule. The degree rule is a convention, not a fundamental natural law, and the modification of this convention by means of other conventions in the form of contrary exceptions cannot be made much of.

After all, it is P who is the centre of interest and the starting point of computation. To concern ourselves with P's father or the claimant (as in the case of the rule of mutuality) is not sound logic. The principle should always be to interpret the rules of succession in favour of the claimants. Sapindaship which is a matter of exclusion for purposes of marriage is a matter of inclusion in the case of inheritance. There is thus no reason to accept the third rule of bandhuship.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

BIRMINGHAM CORPORATION v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, (1930) A.C. 307: 99 L.J.K.B. 299.

Income-tax—Local authority—Housing scheme—Interest on housing loans—Government paying subsidy towards loss on the scheme—Interest paid collected through the Exchequer subsidy—If interest paid out of profits brought to charge to income-tax.

The Birmingham Corporation undertook an Assistant Housing Scheme under the Housing, Town Planning, etc., Act, 1919, and to assist the scheme raised loans which were secured on the revenues and property of the Corporation. The Corporation had one fund only—borough fund—out of which all payments were made. Interest was paid on the loans raised for the housing scheme and income-tax was deducted at the time of payment to the creditors. In accordance with the regulations, a separate account was maintained in respect of the scheme and the loss that the Corporation sustained by the working of the scheme was recovered from the Exchequer by means of a subsidy. The question arose, if the Corporation was liable to account to income-tax for the sums that it deducted when paying interest. The Corporation contended that interest was paid out of the borough fund which was already charged to tax. The accounts were passed by the auditors and the subsidy paid covered also the interest on the loans.

Held, that as the effect of the form of the housing account charging the gross amount of interest as an element of loss intended to result in receipt of a subsidy from the Government and followed by the actual receipt of the money based upon the representations contained in it, the Corporation must be deemed to have said that they paid the interest out of untaxed funds and cannot now escape assessment.

FRY v. BURMA CORPORATION, (1930) A.C. 321: 99 L.J. K.B. 305.

Income-tax—Foreign Company—Transfer of managing office to England from the foreign country—Trade continuing as before without any alteration—Company whether newly set up and commenced in the year of transfer.

A Company was incorporated under the Indian Acts and till 1925 not only did the whole of its business, but managed the whole of its business, in Burma. As a matter of fact the majority of its shareholders were persons who lived in England. In 1925, the Company resolved to manage their business in England and established a regular office in London and as a result it became liable to income-tax as resident in the United Kingdom and carrying on business elsewhere. An assessment for the year ending April 5, 1926, was made on the Company on the basis of the profits of that year under sub-r. 2 of R. 1 of the rules applicable to cases I and II of schedule D. The Commissioners held that as there was no change in the character of the trade and as it was going on exactly as before 1925, except that the office was shifted to England, the rule applicable to case I applied and the average of the three years was to be taken for assessment.

Held, that "trade" in Rule 1, Sub-Rule 2 of the Rules applicable to cases I and II must bear its ordinary meaning and not mean "trade controlled in this country" or "home trade". The result of the transferring of the control of the trade to England so that from that date the trade was partly carried on there was not to set up and commence the trade within the year of assessment so as to render it taxable on that year's income. There is no reason why, when the trade still continues, the profits made at the time when it was not taxable should not be taken into account for the purpose of computing profits in a year when it is taxable.

STANYFORTH v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE,
(1930) A.C. 339: 99 L.J.K.B. 327.

*Revenue—Stamp duty—Re-settlement of real estates—Clause reserving power of revocation of the appointments—
"Value of the property conveyed or transferred" with the clause—If the powers of revocation and new appointment can be disregarded in calculating value.*

Under a previous settlement a joint power of revocation and re-appointment was vested in P and H, who were the 1st and 2nd tenants for life of the estates and they in exercise of that joint power executed a deed poll which itself contained a fresh power of revocation and new appointment in their favour. By S. 74 of the Finance Act, 1910, "a conveyance or transfer operating as a voluntary disposition inter vivos" (which the deed in question was held to be) "shall be chargeable with the like stamp duty as if it were a conveyance or transfer on sale, with the substitution in each case of the value of the property conveyed or transferred the amount or value of the consideration for the sale."

Held, that in arriving at the value of the property conveyed the overriding powers of revocation and new appointment ought to be taken into account. The question is what the property would have fetched in open market when the sale is subject to drastic provisions of defeasance as in this deed and therefore only a nominal value ought to be attached for stamp duty. "Property" in the section means "subject-matter of the conveyance or transfer".

Earl of Westmorland v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, (1928) 1 K.B. 703, overruled.

KHOO HOOI LEONG v. KHOO CHONG YEOK, (1930) A.C. 346.

Custom—Straits Settlements—Chinese residents therein—Custom of legitimation by recognition—Repugnant to English Law—If can be applied.

A Chinese resident Lowi in the Straits Settlements executed a deed in favour of his "sons and grandsons". The settlor had in addition to a t'sai or principal wife, one or more t'sips or lawful secondary wives. For some time he was in sexual connection with a woman P and during that time the appellant K was born to him by her. P was a Catholic Christian woman and it was not clear, if during this connection her husband was alive. Shortly after the birth of K, she married another Christian.

Held, that no form of marriage ceremony is necessary to create the position of a t'sip, but the connection must be permanent and not only of a temporary or casual character and as P's connection was only temporary, she was not a t'sip. The father recognised K as his son and that is enough to establish legitimation by recognition according to Chinese custom but as that custom was not part of the law operative in the Colony and as the custom treating illegitimate natural son as legitimated by the mere fact of subsequent recognition is repugnant to common law of England, the custom cannot be recognised in modification of English law. No presumption can be drawn that P was a t'sip from the fact of the recognition of K by the settlor as according to Chinese custom "a mistress cannot be recognised and yet her son may".

BENJAMIN KNOWLES v. THE KING, (1930) A.C. 366: 99 L.J.P.C. 108.

Ashanti Administration Ordinance (No. 1 of 1902), S. 9 Murder trial—Trial to be as per procedure in Gold Coast Colony—Exception so far as is practicable in the locality—Trial without jury—Presumption in favour of impracticability—Criminal cases—When Privy Council will interfere.

According to the Ordinance the procedure in criminal cases was to follow the procedure obtaining in the Gold Coast Colony "so far as it is practicable and local circumstances permit". In Gold Coast trials in cases punishable by death were compulsorily triable with a Jury. The appellant was sued in Ashanti for murder of his wife without a jury and convicted. It was found that as a matter of fact there never has been hitherto trial by jury in Ashanti.

Held, that the maxim "Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter acta" applied and that it could be presumed that under the local circumstances jury trial is not practicable. The Board does not sit as a Court of Criminal Appeal and will not review criminal proceedings unless substantial and grave injustice has been done or the conviction be without jurisdiction. But as the Judge did not at all consider whether the standard of proof required to prove murder as against man-slaughter was reached in the case, and as the evidence did not support a conviction of murder, the conviction was set aside.

EXCELSIOR WIRE ROPE COMPANY v. CALLAN, (1930)
A.C. 404: 99 L.J.K.B. 380

Negligence—Trespassers—Liability of owner for injuries to—Dangerous machine—Extent of duty to trespassers.

Two children were injured by the appellant's haulage apparatus being set in motion to carry some trucks. It was in evidence that the employees knew that the place wherefrom the wire ran was frequented by children who played with the wire. Just before the wire was used, a little child was seen swinging on the wire. There were two men employed for the purpose of putting the wire properly round the pulley and for driving the children away and they drove the child away. But they went back and started the machinery without being clear that the wire was free from children then and the accident to the children who got on to the wire again was the result. The land over which the wire ran did not belong to the appellants but they had a license to erect it there.

Held, as the appellants knew that when the machine was going to start it was extremely likely that children would be there and with the wire in motion, would be exposed to grave danger, there was a duty cast on the appellants when they set the machine in motion to see that no child was there. The mere fact that they were not occupiers of the land on which the apparatus ran does not remove the case from the category of those cases where the land was in the occupation of the person owning the dangerous machine. The land was in their charge. In the circumstances it was held to be immaterial to decide whether the children were or were not trespassers.

Income-tax—Purchase and re-sale—Isolated transaction and not one of a series—No trade on purchase and re-sale—Profit, if liable to income-tax—Income-tax Act, 1918, Sch. D., case VI.

The respondent joined with three others in acquiring two options to purchase certain rubber estates in Malay. Ultimately the two options were sold at a profit. So far as the respondent was concerned, it was an isolated transaction, there having been no transactions like it before or after. The Commissioners found that it was not a concern in the nature of trade, but taxed him on the profit.

Held, income-tax is a tax on income. The profit made by the respondent being the result of an isolated transaction of sale but not a transaction of sale by way of trade, it cannot be called income, but only a capital accretion and so outside the category of annual profits or gains. It is more like the case where a person bought shares in two companies which were going to be amalgamated, and then sold equivalent shares in the amalgamated company at a profit. The accretion to capital does not become income merely because the original capital was invested in the hope and expectation that it would rise in value and yield a profit.

FRY v. SALISBURY HOUSE ESTATE, LTD.: JONES v. CITY OF LONDON REAL PROPERTY CO., (1930) A.C. 432: 99 L.J.K.B. 403.

Income-tax—Letting a building in parts for offices—Landlord assessed as owner—Landlord supplying cleaning, heating, etc., services for additional charges—Profit therefrom—Assessment on profits, including the rents also therein—Deduction of rates paid as owner—Method of assessment if correct.

The respondent Company were owners of a large building containing some 800 rooms, which were let by the Company to the tenants for offices. The Company maintained a staff of porters and cleaners, who performed certain services like cleaning, heating, etc., to the tenants for which additional charges were made by the Company. The Company was charged as landlord under Schedule A in respect of the annual value of the building. The Commissioners now assessed the Company under Schedule D upon the profit of the trade, but in ascertaining the profits, it included also the rents recovered by the Company as landlord and gave credit to the tax paid under Sch. A.

Held, the land owner was not carrying on a trade with regard to the property and was, therefore, assessable under Schedule A only, on the basis of the conventional annual value. The respondents were liable also under Schedule D in respect of the profits from the services rendered to the tenants. By the operation of the assessment under Schedule A, which is made imperative by the Statute, the income of the assessee is so far dealt with and cannot be dealt with again. This does not mean that the assessee may not be liable in respect of other income under other schedules but only the income from real property cannot be dealt with over again.

Rosyth Building and Estates Co. v. Rogers, 8 Tax Cases 11, overruled in so far as it says that there is an option to the Revenue Commissioner to select which schedule they would prefer to tax the assessee under.

The cases which indicate that the Inland Revenue authorities may have an option as between several cases of any given schedule upon which they may determine to assess the taxpayer distinguished, as by an option within a schedule the general scheme of the Act is not disturbed, but by an option to select schedules, it will be totally changed.

Company—Rules—Alteration of by a 3/4th, majority—Alteration requiring members to take additional shares—If intra vires and binds those who did not vote for or consent to it.

By R. 12 of a Company's original rules passed in 1910, it was provided that "Individual members shall hold at least one share for every 20 acres or fraction thereof farmed by them up to 500 acres, and at least one share for every 40 acres or fraction of 40 acres above 500" and "Milk retailers shall hold at least 6 shares of every churn of 17 gallons retailed daily by them . . .". In 1922, it was amended by a 3/4th majority as required by the rules to the effect that every member should hold at least shares of the nominal value of 5*l*. for every 20 acres or fraction thereof and milk producers should hold shares on the above acreage basis or at least shares of the nominal value of 5*l*. In 1923, the Company went into liquidation and the question arose, if members who joined the Company prior to 1922—date of the amendment—and did not vote for or consent to the amendment were bound by the amendment and liable to contribute on that basis. The Company was registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893.

Held, reversing the Court of Appeal, (1929) 1 Ch. 321 (Lord Buckmaster dissenting), that a contract to take extra shares and incur extra liability which is not set forth in the original rule, but only introduced through a general power of the amendment of the rules is too vague to be enforced and is bad at common law. The alteration here did not simply affect the rights of the member in the capital of the Company but imposed a perfectly new and outside liability upon him and unless it was voted for or accepted by the member expressly or by conduct, it cannot bind him.

Biddulph and District Agricultural Society's Case, (1927) A.C. 76, explained as a case where the member accepted the situation arising out of the altered rules by applying for shares and accepting and paying for them.

Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, S. 14, Sub-S. (1) (b)—Failure to claim compensation within six months—Reasonable cause—If a question of law.

A workman who was injured in 1924 in the course of his employment reported the fact to the proper officer, but continued in the employment without claiming compensation, though all the while he suffered considerable pain therefrom. He left the employment in 1928, when as a result of muscular rheumatism occasioned by the injury he was totally incapacitated and fit only for light work. He did not intend to claim compensation so long as he was able to earn his full wages in the service of his old employers.

Held, the question whether the facts as found amount to reasonable cause for delay in applying is one of law and therefore an appeal lay. The fact that the workman thought, as also his officer, that the injury was trivial and nothing serious had happened to him till 1928, when he was prostrated is a reasonable cause for failure to make the claim within the statutory period.

Per Viscount Dunedin.—Lingley v. Thomas Firth and Sons, (1921) 1 K.B. 655, limits too rigidly the enquiry which must be made into the circumstances of each particular case.

Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 43—Date of disablement of the workmen—Certificate of certifying surgeon—If conclusive and cannot be re-opened by arbitrator.

It may involve hardship and possibly injustice that the certificate of the certifying surgeon as to the date of the commencement of the disablement of the workman should be conclusive as the certificate is given by the surgeon without giving any opportunity to the employers of adducing evidence or of hearing the case put by the workman before the surgeon. In some cases the date may be most material in ascertaining the liability, not only of the respondents in the arbitration, but also the employers who may have employed the workman during the preceding twelve months. But the language of S. 43, sub-S. (2) being clear, it is not open to the Court to give to the words anything but their plain meaning. It is not therefore open to the arbitrator to go behind the certificate so far as the date of disablement is concerned.

Land Registration—Effect of—Land belonging to and in the possession of another included in the registration—If the register can be rectified by cancelling the registration of the land.

The plaintiffs purchased certain freehold land and got themselves registered as proprietors of the land under the Land Transfer Acts, 1875 and 1897. But by the date of registration, the defendant had acquired a title by prescription to the fee simple of a portion of the land. In an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction restraining the defendants from trespassing on that portion of the land,

Held, that a plaintiff in an action in ejectment must succeed upon the strength of his own title. The defendant is entitled to plead that he is in possession and leave the plaintiff to oust him by proof of the strength of his title. Under S. 82, sub-S. (1) of the Land Registration Act, 1925, there is power in the Court to order rectification of the register so as to cause the actual delimitation on the maps more accurately to represent what did pass under the conveyance. S. 147 of the Act

Indemnity and guarantee—Breach of an implied term—Breach going to the root of the contract to indemnify—Guarantor electing to treat the contract as at an end on breach—Guarantee making good the implied term after the election—If can claim the indemnity.

F, the Chairman of a Company which became desirous to issue First Lien Debentures, got the plaintiff G to invest some amount in those debentures and agreed to indemnify him against any loss thereon in consideration of his giving F one-fourth of any profit he may receive on such investment, any profit therein referred to profit other than interest. The debentures were redeemable in 1925, but as there was power in the Company to extend the due date, it was extended to 1930. In spite of F's protestations G sold the debentures at a loss without keeping them till the due date, and F treated the contract as at an end. After the election by F, G again bought back the debentures and claimed the loss from F.

Held, that it was an implied term of the contract that G would retain the debentures with him and a term which formed the consideration for F's agreement to indemnify G. Without such retention G could not give to F the one-fourth share of the profits. The breach of that condition entitled F to rescind the contract and once he elected to rescind, the contract was brought to an end and G cannot afterwards insist on the contract by saying that he has bought back the debentures and that his prior sale did not prejudice F inasmuch as no profits accrued during the period when the debenture was out of his hands.

The case may also be treated as one where F unequivocally elected to treat the sale as a final assertion by G that he intended no longer to be bound by the contract, and that, therefore, the contract ceased to exist, with the result that G cannot now sustain an action upon it.

Will—Joint will by husband and wife—A life interest on the survivor and remainders over—Will not to be altered or revoked save by mutual agreement—The remaindermen, if take vested interests—If so, in the deceased's share alone or in the survivor's also.

• A husband and wife made a joint will in 1902 by means of which they gave everything they possessed to trustees to pay certain debts and legacies and pay the income of the whole of their remaining estate to the survivor of them during his or her life and after the death of the survivor to divide the freehold between six named persons and the residue between two others named the distribution to begin at the death of the first of them. It was agreed that the will should not be altered or revoked except by mutual consent. The wife died in 1904 and some of the legatees died before the husband. The husband before his death made a will bequeathing what he was able to dispose off to legatees, several of whom were not mentioned in the joint will.

Held, when the husband and wife made this joint will, they contemplated that the property which they were pooling would all go to the same beneficiaries, whether in its inception it was the property of the husband or of the wife. On the death of the wife the position as regards that part of the property which belonged to the husband was that he will be treated in this Court as holding the property on trust to apply it in terms of the joint will; at any rate it will be so since the husband took the benefit of the joint will. The husband had no residue to will and the legatees under the joint will took a vested interest on the death of the first of them, the wife.

Company—Issue of 8 per cent. convertible notes—Noteholders to receive a fixed interest and share in profits available for dividend after making certain payments thereout—Directors setting aside profits towards sinking fund—If ultra vires as affecting 8 per cent. note-holders.

• A Company created a series of 8 per cent. convertible notes and agreed to pay to the holders of the notes interest at 8 per cent. per annum and (omitting unnecessary clauses) to a share in the 'profits of the Company available for dividend in respect of any year' if they exceed the amount required to pay the fixed dividends, etc., payable by the Company. The Company's articles provided that before recommending any dividend, the directors might set aside out of the profits such sums as they thought proper towards sinking fund, reserve fund, etc.

Held, the profits available for dividend only mean profits available for dividend after making any reserve or other similar appropriation which the directors, in good faith, acting on behalf of the Company, think it is their duty to make in the interests of the Company. The note-holders cannot therefore object to the writing off by the directors of a portion of the profits towards debit balances of the Company.

HUDD v. MATHEWS, (1930) 2 K.B. 197.

Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, S. 4—Tenancy—Termination of compensation for goodwill—No benefit to landlord from the goodwill—Landlord, if liable to pay compensation.

Under S. 4. of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, a tenant of a holding shall be entitled at the termination of the tenancy on quitting the holding to be paid by his landlord compensation for goodwill if he proves that by reason of the carrying on by him or his predecessors-in-title at the premises of a trade or business for not less than 5 years, Goodwill has become attached to it, by reason whereof the premises could be let at a higher rent than they would have realised had no such goodwill attached thereto.

By virtue of the tenant carrying on the business of an eating house on the premises for more than five years it was found that goodwill had attached to the holding, but it was not clear that only by reason thereof the premises could be let at a higher rent than they would have realised had no such goodwill attached. The County Court Judge held that under S. 4 the tenant was entitled to compensation, if he could prove that by reason of his carrying on the business, goodwill became attached to the premises by reason whereof they could be let as an "eating house" at a higher rent than they would have so realised as an eating house had no such goodwill attached thereto.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the section does not say that if a tenant has created a goodwill in premises which he has rented and that goodwill is still attached to it when his tenancy comes to an end, he is to be entitled to compensation for that when he goes out. The section requires proof that the landlord gains by coming into possession of those premises by virtue of that goodwill and if he could let them for a greater rent for some other purpose than the one the tenant used it for, it cannot be due to the goodwill and no compensation will be payable. The Act contemplates benefit to the landlord and not loss to the tenant.

Per Talbot, J.—From the fact that reading a section as it stands, a proviso to it may become unnecessary, "it does not follow by any means that the section would not have meant the same thing without it". Such provisos are often put ex abundanti cautela.

In re HIRST AND LIVERPOOL VICTORIA FRIENDLY SOCIETY, (1930) 2 K.B. 209; 99 L.J.K.B. 138.

Life insurance—Friendly Societies' Acts of 1896 and 1924—Insurance on children's lives—Amounts assured exceeding statutory limitations—Clauses restricting the payment to the statutory maximum—Validity of policies.

Under S. 2, sub-S. (1) of the Friendly Societies' Act, 1924, it is illegal for a Society to insure or pay on the death of a child under certain ages any sum of money which exceeds or which when added to any amount payable on the death of that child by any other Society exceeds a maximum fixed under the Act. The question was if three policies in question contravened that provision as the amounts assured exceeded that limit. Policy (1) contained a proviso stating that the amount payable was subject to the following limitations of the Friendly Societies Act, 1924, and the limitations were set out in detail. Policy (2) stated that where the amount secured would exceed the statutory limit, the sum assured shall be limited to that amount. Policy (3) was in favour of a child who was already assured by another society and therefore it stated that "the full sum assured printed in the schedule will not come into operation until the attainment of the age of ten. The combined amount payable in the event of earlier death shall not exceed" the statutory amounts.

Held, the proviso in each case was a contractual term which reduced the assured amount to the statutory limit. The effect of the clauses is that the Company says that "For 2l, we are insuring those sums except in cases where they would exceed the statutory limit, in which case the sum assured shall be restricted to that limit" and therefore the policies are valid.

Harker v. Britannic Assurance Co., (1928) 1 K.B. 766, doubted and distinguished on the ground that there the clause was construed to be a mere statement of the Act of Parliament and not a contractual term.

Shipping—Wreck of ship—Unemployed seaman—Service of the seaman to terminate shortly after the wreck—Compensation if payable for two months' wages or till usual termination—Merchant shipping—International Labour Conventions Act, 1925, S. 1.

By section 1 of the Act "where, by reason of the wreck or loss of a ship on which a seaman is employed his service terminates before the date contemplated in the agreement", he shall be entitled to be paid his usual wages till he secures an employment, for two months from the termination of the service. But he will not be entitled to wages (i) if the owner shows that the unemployment was not due to the wreck or (ii) that on any day the seaman was able to obtain suitable employment.

The ships in question were both wrecked but the services of the plaintiffs would have anyhow terminated within a few days after the wreck. The plaintiffs were unemployed for two months. It was in evidence that if all had gone well, the plaintiffs would have been re-employed in service.

• Held (per Scrutton and Greer, L.JJ.), that the section was clear and unambiguous and that, therefore, neither the preamble nor the League Convention on which the section is based could be looked at to control the plain meaning of the section. The words of the section plainly mean that if his services end before the date contemplated in the agreement, and he is in fact unemployed for two months, he is entitled to wages for every day during the two months on which he is unemployed unless his employer proves that he would have been unemployed even, if there had been no wreck. The section is not dealing with unemployment under an existing contract, but with unemployment in fact. It may be different, if the employer could prove that the employee would not be re-employed after the termination under the agreement.

Per Slessor, L.J., dissenting.—The section being ambiguous the preamble and title can be referred to clear up the ambiguity. The section intends to amend S. 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act by giving the seaman an indemnity for loss of his service by the wreck and the employer would have discharged the onus on him of proving that the unemployment was not due to the wreck by showing that anyhow the services would have terminated under the agreement.

Trade-mark—Sale of two varieties of plaintiff's wine—The varieties bearing the marks used by the plaintiff—One variety for sale in France and the other in England—Defendant selling both in England—If infringes trade-mark.

Plaintiffs, producers of champagne in France, produced two types of wine, one for sale in England and the other in France and continent. English type bore the marks "Reserved for England". The type for sale in France was also in similar bottles, but bore the mark "Brut" and "Maison Fondeegen, 1785". The Brut wine was to the knowledge of the plaintiffs being sold in England.

In an action for injunction restraining the defendant from passing off the "Brut" wine as and for the wine reserved for England.

Held, there can be no infringement when the plaintiff's goods are sold with plaintiff's genuine marks. The registration of the trade-mark only gives to the registered proprietor a statutory title in respect of his mark and a right to prevent others from selling wares which are not his marked with that trade-mark, but does not give him a right to object to any person selling or dealing with goods produced by the owner of the trade-mark with the trade-mark affixed. Trade-mark is a badge of the origin of the goods and not a badge of control over the goods. The law in this respect is not altered by the Trade Marks Acts of 1875 and 1905.

A notice to quit premises to be complied with at a date long after the person giving notice has ceased to have any interest in the premises cannot have any operation. From a mere continuance in possession by one who originally took possession as tenant under a legal title, with the consent of the person who has become the landlord, an inference may be drawn of a consensus between the landlord and tenant that the tenant shall hold as tenant on the same terms as before.

Workman's compensation—Death by accident—Workman getting down employer's lorry on private errand—Attempting to board the lorry in motion—Slipping—If accident arose out of and in the course of the employment.

• A licensed driver of a motor lorry while going along on a journey for the employer stopped his engine and got off to see his father working at a distance. The lorry was then driven by the steersman, who was unlicensed. The driver ran up to the lorry while in motion and while attempting to board the moving lorry slipped and fell under the wheels and died. In an action by his wife for compensation, the County Judge held that the accident did not arise in the course of employment as

(i) he got out of his employment to get tobacco, and

(ii) he was not employed to get on to a moving lorry driven by a person whom he knew was not qualified to drive it.

Held, on appeal, that having temporarily left the employment to go to his father, it was his duty to re-enter the employment, and when he was getting up the step to get into the lorry again he was re-entering his employment.

Lord Sumner's dictum in Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Highley, (1917) A.C. at p. 372; 86 L.J.K.B. at p. 727 "was it part of the injured person's employment to hazard, to suffer, or to do that which caused his injury? If yea, the accident arose out of his employment" has been modified by later cases and the question 'was it outside the scope of his employment to get on to a moving lorry' depends on whether he was acting negligently within the scope of his employment or had taken upon himself in doing so such an added peril as to take the act outside his employment.

EXPRESS DAIRY CO. v. JACKSON, (1930) 99 L.J.K.B. 181.

Contract—Restraint of trade—Agreement by employee not to solicit "customers"—Employee, an infant—Breach of covenant—Validity of covenant.

The defendant, while yet an infant, entered into service as a milk carrier with C, a dairyman, under a written agreement which provided, among other conditions, that for two years after the defendant left C's service, he would not interfere with or serve, solicit or canvass any of the customers belonging to C's business with milk or dairy produce either for his own benefit or for any other person. Defendant left C's service and against his agreement attended on C's customers for the benefit of his new employer.

Held, that an infant may be bound by reasonable restrictions in the contract of employment and even where the contract contains unreasonable stipulations he will be bound provided they are clearly severable from those which are reasonable and prima facie enforceable. The Courts will not enforce a restrictive covenant where it is vague and indefinite. The word "customers" in the clause is too wide and vague and the covenant is, therefore, unenforceable, nor is this a case in which the doctrine of severability should be applied.

How far covenants can be severed and given effect to discussed.

Moneylender—Loan—Excessive rate of interest—Burden of proof—Courts, when will relieve against—Money lenders Act, 1927.

The defendant, a dealer in antiques, borrowed money at 60 per cent. and 80 per cent. interest from a firm of money-lenders to successfully carry on his business, which was so speculative that the banks would not give him credit.

Before the coming into effect of the Act of 1927, the Court might re-open transactions of money-lending, if it was satisfied that the interest was excessive and the transaction harsh and unconscionable or otherwise such that a Court of Equity would give relief. S. 10 of the Act of 1927 only raises a presumption that where the interest charged exceeds 48 per cent. it is excessive and the transaction harsh and unconscionable, thereby shifting the onus on to the money-lender to prove that the transaction is fair in the circumstances. Where a man of full understanding and in full possession of facts was for his own business purposes content to pay excessive interest, the Court will not relieve him. It is not enough that the interest is excessive, it must also be harsh and unconscionable, though high interest may itself serve as proof of harshness.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Sir Montague Lush.—Sir Montague Lush, who has just died at the age of 77, was one of those lawyers whose career, if not made by a book, has been greatly assisted by legal authorship. Mr. Justice McCardie's judgment, which we notice below, is a striking commentary on the complexities of the law of the marriage relationship, and by more than one reference it bears witness to the value of "Lush on Husband and Wife." That well-known work was written soon after Montague Lush had come down from Trinity Hall, Cambridge—a college prolific of judicial talent in recent years—and had been called to the Bar, and he started, too, with the inherited reputation of his father, Sir Robert Lush, a member of the Court of Appeal when that Court was exceptionally strong. But while Fortune favoured Lush at the start, he made his way on his own merits, and when, after a busy career as a junior, he took silk in 1902 he rapidly became one of the most powerful advocates of his time, and his advocacy was based on profound knowledge of the law. From that year until he was made a Judge of the King's Bench Division in 1910, he was one of the most highly esteemed and trusted leaders at the Common Law Bar, and on the Bench he proved himself, as was expected, a valuable and careful Judge. On Mr. Justice Bankes being promoted to the Court of Appeal in 1915, Mr. Justice Lush succeeded him as President of the Railway and Canal Commission. He resigned in May, 1925. His career showed in their best light the qualities of learning, courtesy and strength of character for which the English Bar and Bench are famous.—L.J., 1930, p. 431.

The Maltese Dyarchy.—The Constitution of Malta, granted in 1921, was an interesting experiment in dyarchical government; but it does not seem to be working as its authors hoped. Proceedings towards a General Election had lately commenced.

when it appeared that the Roman Catholic clergy would exercise the great influence which they possess in the island to advise their flocks to vote in a certain way. As a matter of policy, (with which lawyers are not concerned) this move was no doubt open to grave objection; but it is a well-known fact in many Continental countries that this influence is used in this way. Last month the Governor, in the exercise of certain powers which enable him to legislate for "the public safety and defence of the Empire," issued an Ordinance staying the elections sine die. A good many lawyers who know little about the affairs of the island will probably doubt whether the abolition, even for a season, of the public right of election can be "for the public safety and defence of the Empire." If the elections were so hotly contested that disorders actually arose, no doubt all lawyers would hold that in the presence of such disorder laws are silent, and the Government can do what it pleases. But the mere anticipation of such acts of violence by hot-headed partisans would scarcely seem to have been in the contemplation of the draftsman who defined the power which has now been exercised. Lawyers always like to adhere to a written document, be it contract or Constitution, unless the reasons for ignoring it are of manifest urgency.—L.J., 1930, p. 433.

The Courts and the Legislature.—Nor is it easy to understand the need for the publication of Ordinance No. II of 1930, the substance of which was published in London this week (The Times, June 23). Certain Acts were passed by the Legislature of Malta last year, but they were passed when two Senators were sitting who had been unseated by the competent Court—the Court of Appeal in Malta. These gentlemen obtained special leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and, hoping for a successful appeal, continued to sit and vote. The Judicial Committee disappointed them by refusing to entertain the appeal—a decision on which we commented at the time. The question whether the laws so passed were valid then became an issue; and before the Courts could decide it, the Imperial Government intervened with an Ordinance declaring that they should not entertain the question. This Ordinance appears to have been brought into force as a measure of urgency at once, without waiting for the four weeks required by the Constitution between first publication and legal effect. The Governor has this power of peremptory legislation when it is imperatively necessary in the public interest; and it can, of course, be used in a proper case. The constitutional question which followed is—how could such necessity arise before the local Court had given judgment? A decision adverse to the validity of any law might lead to difficulties which would justify peremptory legislation; but it is not easy to see how it could arise while the matter was still sub judice. This view may have weighed with this Court of Appeal which subsequently ignored the Ordinance. On the whole, it is well that Malta has still the strong and skilful hand of Downing Street to get her out of her troubles.—L.J., 1930, p. 433.

A Chancellor Saint.—The canonization of a Lord Chancellor is a matter of rare occurrence; but so far as a poor layman may judge of such matters from the evidence before him, Sir Thomas More is not the least deserving of the Saints. His life, according to the evidence of his son-in-law and of others, was one of remarkable and consistent piety; and his judicial murder, as one competent biographer describes it, was the direct and by him foreseen result of his refusal to do that which his conscience forbade. As a youthful M.P. he spoke up like a man against the financial encroachments of King Henry VII; and despite all the influences, favours and cajolery to which he was subjected by King Henry VIII, he could not be persuaded to share the views of the Merrie Monarch on Divorce or on the headship of the Church. A splendid fellow, undoubtedly, in his life and death, was Sir Thomas More.

As Chancellor he was indubitably a success; and the account of how he cleared off the accumulated arrears of his incompetent predecessor makes good reading. Incorruptible in an age of bribery, he was without offence; and his enemies could find no rope to hang him, even with the aid of a packed jury, until Counsel for the Prosecution, deserting his proper place for the witness box, swore his life away with queer evidence of an alleged seditious conversation in the Tower.—L.J., 1930, p. 444.

Down-Grade Diet: Lincoln's Inn to Oxford University.—He maintained in his own household his sons and daughters, their spouses and families; guests came and went, and his house at Chelsea was reported to be "a veritable school of the Christian religion." But the time came, after he had resigned the Chancellorship and refused to accept from the Churches a gift of 5,000*l.*, when he could no longer maintain from his own resources so large a family; and thus he addressed his sons:

"If we wish to live together you must consent to be contributories together. But my counsel is that we fall not to the lowest fare first; we will not therefore descend to Oxford fare, nor to the fare of New Inn; but we will begin with Lincoln's Inn diet, where many right worshipful men of great account and good years do live full well; which, if we find ourselves the first year not able to maintain, then we will the next year come down to Oxford fare, where many great, learned and ancient fathers and doctors are continually conversant; which, if our purses stretch not to maintain neither, then may after with bag and wallet go a-begging together, hoping for pity some good folk will give us their charity."

But Bluff King Hal proceeded: after More's death his head was stuck on a pike at London Bridge, the happy home in Chelsea was taken, and all his goods declared forfeit to the Crown.—L.J., 1930, p. 444. . . .

McCardie, J., misunderstood.—I observe that the long discourse of McCardie, J., on the Law of Husbands and Wives, has given some people the erroneous impression that he is opposed to Women. But the intelligent majority have frankly recognised the truth of his observations and join with him in the pious hope that Parliament will do something about it. Husbands and wives are, generally speaking, no longer one in law except in so far as this theory operates to the advantage of the wife and the disadvantage of the husband. His ancient dominion has departed, but his liabilities, in amazing number and variety, remain. And he would be a bold fellow who in our time dared to introduce and carry a Bill in Parliament to abolish the differences. The time is certainly not ripe for the abolition of the husband's legal liability to maintain his wife and to pay for "necessaries" in accordance with the ancient and reasonable rule.

But why the poor fellow should still be legally liable for his wife's manifold and multifarious torts is beyond justification. If the present Attorney-General could find the time he might establish his place in legal history and forever justify his acceptance of the law officership by gathering his draftsmen about him and introducing an Act to be known popularly as the Jowitt Act, putting these matters right as between man and wife.—L.J., 1930, p. 444.

Summing up a Judge.—The summing up by his surviving contemporaries of a departed Judge is always interesting, particularly in regard to the qualities which are not mentioned. I came recently on references made to Kekewich, J., a Chancery

Judge well known and remembered. The Master of the Rolls, in a moving address to the Bar, described the late Judge as "painstaking, industrious and high-minded." He knew much law, but his applications of it did not always commend itself to all and many of his judgments were reversed on appeal.

Once Kekewich, J., observed to counsel that if he (the Judge) were to do so-and-so as a trustee, he would be compelled to give judgment against himself. "But, of course, your Lordship would appeal," said the helpful counsel. "This, my Lords," said counsel for the appellant in opening his case in the Court of Appeal, "is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Kekewich. But there are other reasons for saying that the judgment is wrong."

A brother Judge once described him as "quick, courteous and wrong," while Lord Bowen's remark on another occasion was to the following effect: "To have a judgment by my brother Kekewich in your favour is like putting to sea on a Friday—unfortunate, but not necessarily fatal."—L.J., 1930, p. 444.

India and the Royal Title.—Whatever changes may, in the course of the years, be made in the Government of India, the Sovereign may alter or amend his title without Parliamentary enactment to meet any changes or occasions which may arise.

The Statutes dealing with the question of Royal Titles have omitted to bind the Sovereign to any specific Colonial designation. Later enactments followed the precedent of 1876. By 39 and 40 Vict., c. 10, it was left to Queen Victoria to say what the future description of the Sovereign in regard to India should be. "It shall be lawful," declared the Statute, after preamble in plenty, "for her Gracious Majesty, with a view to such recognition as aforesaid of the transfer of the Government of India, by her Royal Proclamation, under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to make such addition to the style or title at present appertaining to the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom and its dependencies as to her Majesty may seem fit."

It was in accordance with this provision the Queen, by Royal Proclamation, became Empress of India; and the precedent was followed by similar provisions and proclamations on the accession of King Edward and King George.—L.J., 1930, p. 444.

Pensions for Solicitors' Clerks.—In dealing last week with the Report of the Council of the Law Society, we referred to the fact that the proposal to provide pensions for solicitors' clerks had, after careful consideration, become an established fact, and that sufficient promises of support had already been received to render the scheme actuarially sound. The prospectus and rules of the scheme, which is called the Solicitors' Clerks' Pension Fund, has now been published, and we print, in another column, a short statement with regard to it. The scheme has obviously been very carefully framed, and we commend it warmly to the attention of solicitors and their clerks. A clerk who joins as a young man and who is employed throughout his career by a solicitor who is ready to make the employer's contribution will become entitled, on retirement at 65 or later, to a pension on extremely favourable terms. Provision is made for the case of the death of the clerk before attaining the pensionable age and for the commutation, in approved cases, of a pension for one of reduced amount payable during the lifetime of the clerk and his wife and the survivor. We are not quite clear as to the position of a member of the fund who, after having been a member for, say, twenty-five years, becomes a solicitor and goes into partnership or starts to practise on his own account; nor does the position of a clerk who, having for some years been a member of the fund, changes his situation and enters the employment of a solicitor who refuses to pay the employer's contribution, seem to be expressly dealt with. As time goes on and the benefits of the fund, both to solicitors and their clerks, are more fully realised, cases of the latter kind are likely, we imagine, to become very rare; but it should be possible, where such cases do occur, for the clerk to continue as a member by paying either the whole contribution himself or the employee's contribution with a proportionately reduced benefit in respect of the period during which half contributions only are paid.—L.J., July 5, 1930, p. 1.

Crime in 1928.—The elaborate tables of figures which form the Criminal Statistics for England and Wales for the year 1928 and which have just been issued (Cmd. 3581) are prefaced by a remarkably interesting Introductory Note, the work of Mr. Arthur Locke, C.B.E., of the Home Office, which runs to sixty-nine pages and is entitled, "The Offender and the Community, before the War and Since." We cannot attempt in a couple of short paragraphs to deal adequately with what is an admirably written essay on a subject of great interest and much importance; but a few points may be noted. For the purposes of comparison with the year 1928, the average of the quinquennium 1910-1914 is taken; and it is not very satisfactory to note that the number of indictable offences known to the police rose from 97,924 to 130,469, or 33 per cent., whilst the population increased by only 9 per cent. During the war the figures fell, but since the war, and allowing for an exceptional increase in 1926 which is attributed to the General Strike, there has been a steady rise. Crimes of violence against the person, taken as a whole, have decreased—murder by 11 per cent., endangering railway passengers by 72 per cent. and cruelty to children and abandonment by 66 per cent.; but the procuring of abortion has increased from an average of 40 in 1910-14 to 113 in 1928 or 185 per cent., and Mr. Locke, speaking with all the authority of an Assistant Secretary of the Criminal Division of the Home Office, says that these figures no doubt reflect a real increase in this offence. Sexual offences also unhappily show a very substantial increase; bigamy has increased by 120 per cent., and indecent assaults by 57 per cent., though rape has decreased by 34 per cent. Drunkenness has enormously decreased; the number of summary proceedings in 1928 for drunkenness, simple or aggravated, was nearly a hundred and thirty thousand fewer than the average of the years 1910-14; and crimes likely to be associated with drunkenness, such as personal violence, cruelty and neglect, decreased also, though not, of course, in anything like the same proportion.—L.J., 1930, p. 2.

Dog Left in a Car.—The case of Fardon v. Harcourt-Rivington, disposed of last week by Mr. Justice Talbot and a common jury, was a most unusual action for negligence brought against the owner of a dog. The plaintiff on an evening of April 1929, walked past the defendant's saloon car, which had been parked with its back to the kerb in a street at the rear of Selfridge's Stores. The defendant had left a young Airedale dog in the car for upwards of an hour, and the dog had been barking and "jumping about on the seat". As the plaintiff passed, the dog smashed the glass panel at the back of the vehicle, and a splinter of glass entered the plaintiff's left eye. Four days after the eye had to be removed. The defendant stated that it was his invariable practice to leave the dog in the car while shopping, and it was held that there was no evidence that the animal was anything but docile and quiet. His Lordship told the jury that, however much they might sympathise with the plaintiff, they should not award damages unless the defendant had done some legal wrong. The jury found for the plaintiff and awarded him £2,000 damages. Now the "possible foresight of a reasonable man" may in this case at least be taken as the test both of the existence of negligence and of the remoteness or otherwise of the consequences. A young dog kept in a car for an hour is bound to become noisy and restive. "As noisy as a dog in a cart" is proverbial in some parts of the country. But would a reasonable man expect a fairly docile dog accustomed to being left in a car to smash the small glass panel at the back, through which only its head and paw could protrude? We very much doubt it!—L.T., July 5, 1930, p. 2.

Patchwork Divorce Law.—We have it on the authority of the New Testament that new cloth should not be used to patch old raiment lest the rent be thereby made worse, and, according to Mr. Justice Hill's latest obiter dicta uttered in the hearing of a case last week, there is ample illustration in the state of affairs prevailing at present in the Divorce Court of the unsatisfactory results which follow disregard of the axiom. Consisting as it does in great part of the old ecclesiastical law and in part of various statutory provisions, influenced moreover by the common law, and insensibly modified by the shifting of public opinion in social matters, the divorce law of to-day is certainly full of anomalies, the more obtrusive of which must seem frankly insensate to anyone unfamiliar with its evolution. The subject which gave rise to Mr. Justice Hill's strictures on this occasion would seem to have been the rule of evidence explicitly applied to divorce suits by the proviso to section 3 of the Evidence Further Amendment Act of 1869 by virtue of which neither parties nor other witnesses are liable to be asked or bound to answer questions tending to prove adultery unless they shall have already given evidence in disproof thereof. That this limitation should still apply in the case of the parties to the suit although the presence or absence of adultery is commonly the pivot on which the whole proceedings swing is certainly not calculated to facilitate the work of the court, which is left, in the phrase of Mr. Justice Hill, to shuffle along as best it can.—L.T., 1930, p. 2.

Directors and their Fees.—The decision in In re Coliseum (Barrow), Ltd., reported in The Times of 26th March, and in [1930] W.N. 101, is of some importance, for it establishes that directors proving in a winding up for their fees cannot recover fees due more than six years, for the reason that balance sheets in which fees appear cannot amount to acknowledgments within Lord Tenterden's Act. The combined effect of section 1 of that Act and section 13 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856 is to make a written acknowledgment signed by the agent of the party chargeable sufficient, in an action of debt, to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. In the case before the Court, which had been brought as a test case to have the point decided, the liquidator had rejected the proof of the applicant, a director, to the extent of something over one-third, alleging that his fees to that amount were statute-barred because outstanding for more than six years. Evidence was given that the fees appeared in balance sheets passed at Board meetings and duly signed by two directors, and it was therein that the mischief lay, for Maugham, J., held that "directors cannot double the parts of agents of the company to make an acknowledgment and creditors of the company for directors' fees." Balance sheets, as they are signed by directors, can amount to acknowledgments that the company owes sums therein mentioned to, e.g., shareholders to whom the balance sheets are circulated, and, apparently, to anybody save directors. Directors, however, said Maugham, J., would be "interested in the matter, and so incapable of passing the resolution so to bind the company." Thus it seems that the passing of the resolution adopting the balance sheet does as much as the signing of the balance sheet by two of the directors to disqualify all the directors from being creditors for the fees. In future, the only course for directors who, while prepared to be lenient when their companies are in difficulties, are unwilling to forego their fees altogether, is not to let them remain outstanding for too long a time.—S.J., 1930, p. 325.

Erosion of Case Law.—Sir Thomas Browne, of whom it has been well said that to know his writings is no small part of a liberal education, and of whom it may also be said that he had a genius for artistic phrasing, has, in his "Hydriotaphia," a striking sentence in which he speaks of "Time, which antiquates antiquities and hath an art to make dust of all things," thus giving to a very common-place thought regarding the ravages of time on everything mundane a new force by the exquisiteness of its language. The observation finds its application in the sphere of law as in aught else of human activity, despite the supposed conservatism of everything legal. In one of his letters, Lord Bowen discusses the project of attaining immortality by writing a book on English Law, and adds, with a touch of sadness, "you write a history of the law, or a treatise about it, and then a puff of reform comes and alters it all, and makes your history or treatise useless." But not only is law "antiquated" by legislative innovations: it becomes so also by changes in habits both of business and social life.

Some sixty years ago Chief Baron Pollock enquired in Clay v. Roberts, 8 L.T. 397, whether it would be libellous "to write of a lady of fashion, that she had been seen on the top of an omnibus," and although he considered that to do so would not constitute a legal injury for which damages could be recovered, he obviously thought it would be a gross breach of taste. Autres temps, autres mœurs. Who would dream of putting such a question now? Forty years ago the Court of Appeal decided in Pullman v. Hill & Co. (1891) 1 Q.B. 524, that it was not reasonably necessary and in the ordinary course of business for a merchant to dictate to a shorthand clerk a letter containing defamatory matter in reference to the addressee, and that, consequently, the occasion was not privileged. The decision has been adversely criticised, distinguished and queried, on various occasions, and now it would appear to have received its coup de grace in Osborn v. Boulter & Son, which was before the Court of Appeal on 16th May, and where it was said that what may not have been reasonably necessary and in the ordinary course of business in 1891 had certainly become both reasonably necessary and in the ordinary course of business in 1930. Time has thus "antiquated" Pullman v. Hill & Co., and practically relegated it to a decision on fact which in the course of forty years has ceased to be fact. Just as many parts of our coast line suffer from erosion, so in the same way many of the cases which were thought to be landmarks of legal principle are, through changes of habits and changes of thought, eaten into and found to be little more than shifting sand.—S.J., 1930, p. 326.

Case Law Slavery.—Mr. Hammond in his book on Legal History says that: "Our Common Law is really judge-made law and has been developed and adapted to varying conditions ever since its early stages. It still grows, and even at the present day custom is incorporated into it." The interesting part of this extract are the words "has been developed and adapted to various conditions." Conditions, indeed, have changed much during the centuries over which our case-law extends, but that principles have also altered too is not so readily acceptable. An unusual but not surprising reference to case-law was recently made by Mr. Justice McCardie, who, when his attention was drawn by counsel to a decision given in the last century, said: "My own view is that this slavery of case law which exists to-day is doing infinite harm to English law. To my mind principles and decisions should change with the times." His Lordship went on to say that he had been looking at some of the decisions given in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries by which he was said to be governed, and he expressed the view that they were given at a time when superstition was so prevalent and foolish notions so dominant that, but for the doctrine of precedent, one would reject those decisions as being vanities. His Lordship has, no doubt, voiced the opinion of other Judges who, on many occasions, must have longed to shake off the strangling fetters of case-law inconsistency and give an independent decision based on the application of a principle to modern facts. With regard to principle, one might, with respect, differ from his Lordship, by denying that principles should change with the times. Principles are immutable; it is merely the application of the principles to widely varying sets of facts that requires reviewing in the light of modern ideas. So different, in fact, are modern conditions from those of some centuries ago that it may well seem that fundamental principles themselves have undergone a change. What, however, is the alternative to case-law, but independent decision, where each Judge decides when and how a principle applies entirely irrespective of the views a brother Judge may be expressing in the adjacent court. In that event, it is submitted, chaos more appalling than that which Mr. Justice McCardie said existed in case-law might probably result. Imagine only the immense difficulty counsel would experience when searching diligently for argument in support through a wide field of possibly inconsistent expressions of opinion. Perhaps, though, if a Judge could give an independent decision he would not require the assistance of the view of others on similar matters, and then law reports would cease. Obviously, the most satisfactory practice would be that case-law should continue, but with a discretion in a Judge, not to be abused, that he may exercise his own judgment in cases to which old decisions are manifestly not applicable to modern circumstances.—S.J., 1930, p. 341.

Soviet Marriages.—The decision of Hill, J., in Nachimson v. Nachimson, ante, p. 14 (1930) P. 85, that a Soviet marriage cannot be recognised as legal in our courts, was one as to which, our readers may remember, we expressed considerable doubt. It has now been overruled by the Court of Appeal (74 Sol. J. 370). The Russian law appears to allow such easy divorce that Hill, J., held in effect that marriages under it were mere unions at will, and not permanent. Whether any divorces could be much easier than those at Reno, or even in our own court on hotel bill evidence, may be a controversial question; but Hanworth, M.R., pointed out in his judgment that the most faithful adherents of life-long monogamy could do no more in Russia than Mr. and Mrs. Nachimson had done to solemnise their union, and that prima facie every Russian marriage, like every English marriage, must be deemed to be made "till death us do part." The polygamy cases, where one man can lawfully be the husband of two or more women simultaneously, are of course on a different footing. The previous recognition in our courts of foreign Jewish marriages, subject to the rule of the "ghet" divorce, was in fact entirely inconsistent with the decision of Hill, J., in Nachimson, an inconsistency pointed out on p. 57, ante, by our sprightly correspondent, Miss Rosa Dartle—whom Mr. Copperfield will no doubt be able henceforth to meet without the shadow of an insoluble legal riddle between them. See also our note on Spivack v. Spivack, ante, p. 96. The essence of the decision of the Court of Appeal is that, given a marriage made for life or until dissolved by law, it will be recognised here without reference to the ease or otherwise of its dissolution.—S.J., 1930, p. 360.

The Quality of Mercy.—"Compounding a felony," says "Wharton's Law, Lexicon," "is where the party robbed not only knows the felon but also takes his goods again, or other amends, upon an agreement not to prosecute." The Attorney-General in a recent case before Mr. Justice Rowlatt objected to a suggestion which, he said, had been advanced before the Commissioners of Inland Revenue that revenue officers had entered into negotiations to purge a criminal offence. In the case in question the appellant, after an enquiry into his books and accounts, had had to pay a considerable sum in respect of previously unpaid super-tax, income-tax and excess profits duty. A few days before the last instalment was paid a prosecution was launched against him under the Perjury Act, 1911. He was committed for trial. His health was very bad, however, and the prosecution was dropped, the then Attorney-General being satisfied that if it were carried on the appellant's life might be endangered, and, in consequence, the appellant paid £300,000 in penalties. Commenting on the above facts, Sir William Jowitt, K.C., the Attorney-General, said that before the Commissioners the suggestion was made that the Crown accepted the £300,000 in penalties in lieu of taking criminal proceedings, and were actuated in doing so not simply and solely by reason of the appellant's condition of health, but that they had, in fact, compounded a criminal offence. The revenue officers, he added, took a very serious view of that suggestion. Counsel for the appellant said that he did not understand that that had been done; it certainly was not suggested now. It does seem remarkable that a suggestion such as that alleged could be made against responsible revenue officials who could have no conceivable personal interest in adopting the measures imputed to them. What, rather, is the striking feature of the matter is the humane consideration exhibited by the authorities, indicating that the State will not, when extreme ill-health makes it unadvisable, relentlessly and unnecessarily pursue a matter in the criminal courts when there is an alternative and satisfactory civil remedy. "The quality of mercy is not strained."—S.J., 1930, p. 375.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT, by A. C. Ghose. Third Edition. Published by M. C. Sarkar & Sons, Calcutta. Price Rs. 6.

The third edition of this exhaustive commentary on the Provincial Insolvency Act contains, as was expected, all the improvements that are necessary to make it much more useful than the previous ones. The author gives his own views, wherever he deems it but pertinent to give expression to them, along with his elaborate notes to every section. The subject being a much-discussed one and the case-law upon it having grown fairly copious, the author might not have had considerable difficulty in collecting the relevant information under each section. But in addition to the general satisfaction which we feel about the book, we are glad to note that some of the suggestions for improvement made by us in respect of the previous edition are carried out, when we find the English Bankruptcy Act and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act have been included in the appendices to this volume. The printing of the Civil Justice Committee's Report in the first few pages adds to the value of the book as it will enable the readers to have a historical and analytical survey of the Act, which is essential in the scheme of a work of this kind.

SNELL'S PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY FOR THE USE OF INDIAN STUDENTS, by S. C. Bagchi. Published by Messrs. Sweet & Maxwell, Ltd., London, 1930. Price Rs. 14-7-0.

It is needless to introduce to the legal world a standard treatise like this on the principles of Equity. But the purpose of the present edition is to suit the needs of the students of Indian Universities. This attempt deserves all the praise for the careful editing as well as the retention of the arrangement and language of the original as much as is consistent with the scope and nature of this work. For acquiring a sound knowledge of the fundamentals of the subject one has to get thorough with this book.

THE LAW OF MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, by K. G. Kale. Published by Ramakrishna Bros., Law Publishers, Poona, 1930. Price Rs. 2.

This small volume deals with the subject of malicious prosecution. We have had occasions to find this subject treated along with the other important branches of the law of Torts by book writers. We find an earnest attempt made here to elucidate the various points under the relevant headings. The small size of the book has not disallowed room for the mentioning of a number of cases which form the chief source of much of the information gathered by the author. We are sure that it will be of immense help to students of colleges as well as practitioners.

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS ACT, by P. S. Narayana-swami Aiyar and A. S. Srinivasa Aiyar. Published by the Law Publishing Co., Mylapore, Madras, 1930. Price Rs. 4.

One finds it a little embarrassing to choose any one book in the plethora of publications of fresh commentaries on the Sale of Goods Act. But that need not necessarily encourage us to withhold our due appreciation of the work of the present authors who have not spared any pains to make this book quite useful. Of course, the amount of labour spent and the discretion exercised in the search for and selection of cases, both English and Indian, that have contributed much to the principles underlying the sections thereunder, are highly commendable. With regard to some points on which the authors try to differ from the opinions of the Special Committee that drafted the Act, we need hardly express that anything from us, for or against such a discussion, will be premature now in the initial stages of the working of the Act itself.

We shall now proceed to examine the schemes and lists of some of the other writers of the present day on Hindu Law.

BHATTACHARYA.

This writer has adopted entirely the scheme of Sarvadhikari as well as all his principles and rules. His sole difference with him consists in the matter of placing S₄ of M₂F and M₂F₂. He also agrees with Sarvadhikari in the latter's peculiar and unwarranted conception of the Atma bandhu class.

MAYNE.

At one time (5th Ed.) Mayne could not recognise more than 27 bandhus in all. But his figure in the 9th edition has risen to 128. His list is essentially evolved out of Sarvadhikari's principles except in the matter of the order of succession which now radically differs from that of every other writer. Following Sarvadhikari, Mayne includes FMF₃ and S₂DS₂. It has already been pointed out that Sarvadhikari's final list differs from what is stated by him in the body of the chapter in dealing with these two persons and their lines. Mayne discards the final list and follows the principles stated in the body of the chapter. He therefore includes SD₂S and S₂DS₂ of P and F₁ to F₄ and omits all the cognatic descendents of FMF₃. His total figures include the following groups:

Cognatic ascendants	8
Their 4 agnatic descendents	32
7 cognatic descendents of these excepting those of FMF ₃	49
8 cognatic descendents of F ₁ to F ₄	32
7 cognatic descendents of P	7
Total excluding DS	128

Mayne has thus rectified the two defects in Sarvadhikari's List. But Mayne omits S₂DS₂ of FMF and FMF₂ whom Sarvadhikari admits.⁸ On the principles of Sarvadhikari, as they stand, there is no reason to exclude these two.

TREVELYAN.

With some modifications Trevelyan adopts Sarvadhikari's scheme. He follows Sarvadhikari in preference to Bhattacharya in placing S₄ of M₂F and M₂F₂.⁹ The sub-divisional order is entirely taken from Sarvadhikari except in one respect. The sub-class (a) in Trevelyan's pitri and matri groups has been included by Sarvadhikari under Atma Bandhus. In conformity with the view of the Courts based on the specification found in Satatapa's text itself, Trevelyan places the first subclass (7 cognate descendents of F₃ and F₄) under Pitri Bandhus and the second (7 cognate descendents of MF₂ and MF₃) under Matri Bandhus. Mulla and Gour have also done the same. Trevelyan includes SD₂S of F₁ to F₄ who are inexplicably omitted in Sarvadhikari's final list, but himself omits without any reason whatsoever the three maternal ancestors of P's father—FMF, FMF₂ and FMF₃. There is no authority or reason stated for this omission. Gour's list is a literal copy of Trevelyan's which includes the following groups:—

Cognatic ascendents		5
4 agnatic descendents of 8 cognatic ascendents		32
7 cognatic descendents of cognatic ascendents except FMF ₃		49
7 cognatic descendents of F ₁ to F ₄		28
6 cognatic descendents of P		6
3 cognatic descendents of FMF ₃		3
Total		123

Like Sarvadhikari, Trevelyan includes three of the cognatic descendents¹⁰ of FMF₃.

MULLA.

Without attempting to make any original study, Mulla has sought to incorporate all the results of the labours of all the scholars and Judges in the field of Hindu Law. In the matter of bandhu succession it would have been better if he had been a little more explicit in specifying the authorities he relies on and the reasons, if any, for following them.

In his latest (6th Edition) Mulla has made considerable changes. He had, like Trevelyan, excluded¹¹ FMF, FMF₂ and FMF₃ whom he now brings in.¹² Mulla amended Sarvadhikari's view of the fourth fundamental rule of bandhuship, viz., that the heir must be in the line of the MF of either P or P's parents, by omitting the MF line of P's father and on that basis sought to exclude FMF, FMF₂ and FMF₃¹³. As to how he evolved this rule, we are not in a position to understand. If this rule were to hold good, then all the descendants of these three ascendants would cease to be heritable bandhus inasmuch as they trace their sapindaship to P through these common ancestors. (Vide Rule 3.) For the same reason, DS₂ and SDS₂ (and S₂DS₂ whom, however, Mulla does not recognise) in each line would be excluded for want of mutuality of sapindaship. Without however recognising these consequences of his rule, Mulla went on repeating it, until in the latest edition he has completely dropped it.¹⁴ In the previous editions Mulla had included¹⁵ all the 7 cognatic descendants of FMF₃ and he now omits¹⁶ all of them. To justify the inclusion of FMF₃ and his 7 cognatic descendants Mulla had formulated a special rule to the effect that "in counting the father's maternal ancestors, the father's mother is to be excluded."¹⁷ This rule is now amplified so as to suit the new modifications by the addition of a proviso to the effect that "in determining the degree of relationship of the cognate descendants of the father's maternal ancestors, the father's mother is to be included."¹⁸ Lest under this amplified rule FMF₄ might creep in, Mulla formulates an all-round five-degree rule¹⁹ in the very words of the Privy Council.²⁰ For the former amplification the authority cited is Sarvadhikari's 2nd ed., p. 613. But we do not find any such rule or reason stated by Sarvadhikari for the inclusion of FMF₃ and the exclusion of his cognate descendants. The rule is wholly Mulla's invention. Dr. Gour who had in his previous edition altogether missed²¹ this earlier rule of Mulla has now incorporated into his latest edition the amplified rule.²² It is difficult to understand the reason for this rule. Mulla does not state any nor does he cite any authority to justify it. Sarvadhikari's reason for the inclusion of FMF₃ is different and has already been noticed. In fact Sarvadhikari frankly wants a rule of six degrees in this particular case and does not want to make us believe like Mulla that FMF₃ is really within 5 degrees only. It may be suggested in justification of Mulla's rule that, in a scheme of "frog's leap" sapindaship appears to leap over FM and therefore she does not count in the reckoning. But this is not correct. Sapindaship in such a case really leaps, not over her but over her son. It is because she is counted as a real unit that her son will not be a sapinda of FMF₄. Otherwise there would be no occasion at all for a "frog's leap."

In all other respects Mulla follows Sarvadhikari except in the matter of the order of succession. He has adopted entirely Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth fundamental rule as well as the other rules. He notices *Kesar Singh's case*²³ but is not prepared to follow it. He does not seem to be aware of all the implications of that decision. His order of succession (unlike Mayne's) is that of Sarvadhikari as modified by the judicial decisions. He even has sought to incorporate the view of the Privy Council in *Vedashala's case*²⁴ by bringing in MF and 7 of his descendants into the very midst of the daughter's sons of the agnatic lines of P.

His scheme includes the following groups:—

Cognatic ascendants	8
Their 4 agnatic descendants	32
7 cognate descendants of the cognate ascendants except FMF	49
7 cognate descendants of F ₁ to F ₄	28
6 cognate descendants of P	6

GOUR.

There is not any originality in Gour's treatment of bandhu succession. He takes everything from everybody without acknowledgment and without proper assimilation. The result is a patch work. In spite of his overwhelming revision in his latest ponderous edition, every page bristles with errors. There is no errata appended to the work. It is often hard to call some of these errors mere printing mistakes. Thus, for instance, at page 1303 (S. 2669) Gour gives several figures almost all of which appear to be incorrect. His figures are thus stated:

Total number of descendents	...	123
do. of collaterals—
Ex parte paterna	..	64	} 168 (?)
Ex parte materna	. . .	31
Father's bandhus	..	36
Mother's bandhus	..	17
Grand Total	..		391 (?)

Here the total for collaterals would be 148 and the grand total 371. The figures purport to represent the total number of bandhus within 5 degrees. As regards the first group, the 4 agnate descendents of the 8 cognate ascendants and the 7 cognate descendents of the 13 lines would come to 123. But since DS₃, DSDS, D₂S₂ and D₃S, who are excluded on account of Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth fundamental rule, are within 5 degrees, we have to include these 4 descendents of all the 13 lines which would make the total 175. The second group does not differ from the first. If it consists of only collaterals its total would be 175 minus the 11 descendents of P. If it includes the bandhus of all the three classes, its total would be 175 descendents plus 8 cognate ascendants. But curiously enough Gour adds up the figures of both the groups. The whole thing is thus most inexplicable. Nevertheless all these figures are to be found verbatim at page 1002 (S. 2327) of his previous edition. The figures for the subdivisions are also all wrong.

Gour's List consists of 123 persons and is a verbatim reproduction of Trevelyan's. He however adds 3 unclassified heirs (S. 2775, p. 1369) who have been recognised by recent decisions. These are (1) F₃SDS,²⁵ (2) F₂DS₂,¹ (3) F₂DSDS.²

(25) I.L.R. 47 A. 10.

(2) I.L.R. 49 Mad. 652.

But of these the first is identical with No. 44 and the second with No. 10 of Gour's own list. His No. 10 (page 1360) contains two persons numbered as one—SDS₂ and S₂DS₂. The Chart facing page 1368 also numbers both these as No. 10 only. This unnumbered mention of S₂DS₂ is however confined to P's line only. Gour's No. 42 (p. 1365) must be mother's brother's D₂S. His Nos. 75—77 ought to mention the great great grandson and not S₃. These are obvious printer's mistakes.

Gour no doubt notices in detail Kesar Singh's case and collects the criticisms against Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth fundamental rule, which he, although not being able altogether to separate it from the second rule, still differentiates by calling it "an additional test of mutuality" (page 1348, S. 2748). But his list does not outgrow the limitations of this rule. Nor is he able to recast it in the light of Kesar Singh's case and Vedachala's case. He notices the latter case but is unable in his list to put the maternal uncle before F₂DS₂ just as Mulla has done. He reproduces Mulla's rule about the counting of FM. He however does not account for the exclusion of the three maternal ancestors of P's father and has not said a word about it.

Being a great scholar Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar cannot avoid being original and in his article he has given us an over-dose of originality. He clearly accepts the second and the third fundamental rules of bandhuship and repudiates Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth rule. He does not explicitly state, like the Privy Council in Ramachandra's case, that in bandhu succession a universal rule of five degrees should be adopted, but his scheme is based on such a rule. He is opposed to the recognition of female bandhus⁴ and the introduction of the test of spiritual benefit for settling the priority of succession⁵ in the Mitakshara system. He has framed⁶ elaborate rules about the intervention of females between P and the heir which are all now perhaps only of historical interest. Kesar Singh's case definitely rejects them. It must also be noted that Sarvadhikari kari who had in fact originated these rules in his first edition (page 689) has omitted them in the new edition. But it is in his calculation of the heritable bandhus that Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar has sought to be most original. He makes a distinction between bandhus in general and one's heritable bandhus. The distinction is not very clear. The bandhus in general are calculated and ascertained starting from P himself and they cannot therefore be different from the latter group. Besides, the Mitakshara cites Satatapa's text to state, not that your bandhus are of three classes but bandhus are of three classes. Anyhow, on this theory of doubtful validity, Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar adopts a most clumsy, uninfelligible, and round-about method for the calculation of heritable bandhus, which could have been very simply done on the basis of the following table:—

TABLE III.

N.B.—Descendents as in Table II.

Under this scheme there would be 16 lines including P's and in each line there would be 11 male descendents since we have to include D₂S₂, D₃S, DS₃ and DSDS who had been rejected by Sarvadhikari under the fourth rule. The result is as follows:—

Cognatic ascendants	..	...	11
Their 4 agnatic descendents	..	..	44
11 cognatic descendents of 15 ascendants	..	..	165
10 cognatic descendents of P	..	..	10
Total	..	..	230

But what is the ground for cutting down the rule of 7 degrees where relationship is traced through a male into one of five degrees? Textual authority is against it. Each of the other three fundamental rules cuts off a large number of lines beyond the fifth degree. But this reduction is not complete. Even when we accept all these three rules in full we have to go beyond five degrees at least in one case (viz., FMF₃). But since Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar discards Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth rule he has to include several other lines. There can be no justification at all for their exclusion.

MANDLIK'S SCHEME.

Mandlik has prepared Tables to calculate the total number of persons that fall within prohibited degrees of sapindaship for marriage. Our Table IV on the next page would suffice to explain his scheme. Here we find 32 ascendent lines on the paternal and 7 on the maternal side. Descendents through a son up to 7 degrees would be 63. If descendents through a daughter are also counted up to 7 degrees, as Mandlik does, they would be 63 instead of 15. Mandlik's calculations proceed thus:

63 descendents of 32 paternal lines	..	2016
15 descendents of 7 maternal lines	..	105

There would be for each person 2121 male and 2121 female sapindas. For purposes of marriage the total would not exceed 2121 as we have to take sapindas of only one sex that is opposite to that of the person concerned, but for other purposes we can total the total of both sexes. Hence the total number of sapindas of P according to Mandlik would be 4242.

This requires a slight rectification. These are all collaterals of P to whom his 126 descendents and his (32 plus 7) into 2 equals 78 ascendents should be added. The proper total would then be 4446.

But this includes agnates also. Agnatic sapindas within 7 degrees come to 57. Barring wife (or husband) who has not been included in the total, the total cognate sapindas of P is 4446 minus 56 equals 4390, of whom 2174 are males and 2216 are females.

THE SCHEME OF "JURISPRUDENCE."

This writer after pointing out the distinction between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga systems goes to calculate the number of heritable bandhus on the basis of Mandlik's scheme. He is for the rejection of all female bandhus. He then devotes all his space to an effective demolition of Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth fundamental rule.

He disputes Mandlik's total of 4242 and by a clumsy method of calculation arrives at a total of 2325.⁸ This can be represented by the following simpler method of calculation:—

63 descendents of 32 paternal ascendants...	2016	}	2121
15 descendents of 7 maternal ascendants ..	105
126 descendents of P	126	{	204
78 ascendents of P	78
Total			2325

Here this writer rectifies the omission made by Mandlik but himself omits one entire set of collaterals numbering 2121. His further processes of distillation are still more interesting. He arrives at the figure of 382 thus⁹:

Maximum number of sapindas 2325
Deduct from this—

(a) Agnates.

P's F ₁ to F ₆ and S ₁ to S ₆	12	}	30
P's M ₁ to M ₆ and D ₁ to D ₆ and daughters of F ₁ to F ₆	18

(b) Cognates who have no mutuality.
48 descendents of 31 paternal

Balance	..	759
(c) Female bandhus.

Agnates	.. 18
Non-mutual (half of 1536)	.. 768	786
		377	377
Male heritable bandhus	..	382

These calculations are not correct. The daughters of F₁ to F₆ would never be agnates. P's D may be an agnate but a D₂ or D₃ would only be a bandhu. This writer strangely omits P's DS, and S₁ to S₆ of F₁ to F₆ from the list of agnates. He rejects in each line 48 out of 126 descendents for want of mutuality. But as he takes only 63 descendents for each line he must deduct 24 and not 48 from each line. He has not explained why a similar deduction should not be made in P's line and in that of the other remaining paternal line. His figures for female bandhus are also incorrect for the same reasons.

This writer does not allude to the third fundamental rule at all. He however accepts the second rule. As already stated this reduces the rule of seven degrees to one of five degrees except in a few cases. The writer is not alive to this effect. He will have to cut off not merely a large number of descendents but also several ascendent lines.

SCHEME UNDER KESAR SINGH'S CASE.

This scheme does not materially differ from the foregoing except in the matter of taking only five degrees among descendents through a daughter. In each line there would be 63 plus 15 equals 78 descendents (39 male and 39 female) instead of 126. Our Table IV exactly illustrates this scheme. Of these descendents 24 would not have mutuality of sapindaship which requisite is accepted by the Judges. The total would be as follows:—

Paternal ascendants	..	64
Their 54 (78 — 24) descendants of	32
lines	..	1728
P's descendants	..	54
Maternal ascendants	..	14
Their 30 descendants of 7 lines	..	210
Total	..	2070
Males	1035.
Females	1035.
Agnates	..	56
Cognates	..	2014
Males (1035 — 49)	986.
Females (1035 — 7)	1028.

But here again we have to exclude several ascendent lines on account of want of mutuality.

To make our criticisms on the foregoing schemes quite intelligible we must pause here to consider the exact effect of each one of the fundamental rules on the total number of bandhus. Each one of them excludes certain ascendent lines and descendants. A comparison of our Tables II, III and IV would explain this. Our references are to our Table IV.

Rule Two—the rule of mutuality—excludes among ascendent lines (1) twelve lines that trace to P through a daughter but are beyond five degrees, viz., Nos. 11, 13, 15, 17, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32 and (2) thirty-eight cognate descendants of Nos. 5, 6, 12, 14, 16, 19, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29, 31 who trace to the common ancestor immediately through a female so that to them P would not be a sapinda as he is beyond 5 degrees from the common ancestor. These are as follows:—

		Males.	Females.
VII Degree line—3 and 4 of each block	..	8 plus 8 equals 16
VI do. 1 and 3 of b, d, f, h	..	4 „ 4 „	8
V do. 1 of c, d, g, h	..	2 „ 2 „	4
IV do. 1 of e, g	..	1 „ 1 „	2
Blocks I & J Nos. 2, 3, 6, 7, 10, 11, 14, 15	..	4 „ 4 „	8
Total	..	19 „ 19 „	38

Barring these there would remain 40 descendants of whom 34 are cognates. Among descendants Rule II excludes 24—3 and 4 of each block in the 7th degree line and 1 and 3 of blocks b, d, f, h in the 6th degree line. To these 24, the common ancestor would be beyond 5 degrees. The total number of bandhus under a scheme where this rule alone is accepted, as in Kesar Singh's case, would be, not 2014 but as follows:—

Paternal ascendants (32 minus 12) 20 lines	..	40
40 descendants of 12 of them	..	480
(78 minus 24) 54 descendants of (32 minus 12 minus 12) 8 lines	..	432
P's descendants	..	54
Maternal ascendants	..	14
Their 30 descendants of 7 lines	..	210
Total	..	1230
Males 615.
Females 615.
Agnates	..	56
Cognates	..	1174
Males (615 minus 49) 566.
Females (615 minus 7). 608.

If female bandhus are not taken into account the total number of heritable bandhus would be 566 and not 382 as Bhashyam Aiyangar states.

Rule III is as already suggested, a simple extension of the second rule. The second rule enjoins mutuality of sapindaship between P and the heir who form the two ends of a chain of relationship. Rule III wants that every link in this chain should possess mutuality of sapindaship with one another and with both the ends. Both thus form parts of a single universal rule of mutuality. In a sense both these parts must be accepted together and we cannot accept one and reject the other. This is what Sarvadhikari and Ganapathi Aiyar have done. As regards the third rule we cannot stop with the case of the non-sapindaship of P's father only. It is only logical to extend it to cover all cases of non-sapindaship of every one of the ascendants and descendants of P through whom P is related to the heir. Similarly we must also see from the side of the heir all cases of the non-sapindaship of every one of his ascendants and descendants through whom he is related to P.

Among descendants rule three excludes only those of the 7th degree line. It excludes 8 of them of blocks b and d as P is beyond 5 degrees to one of their parents. It further excludes 16 of them of blocks e, f, g, h, as they are beyond 5 degrees to P's son who is related through his daughter. Out of this total of 24, twelve (3 and 4 of b, d, e, f, g, h) are also excluded by rule two. Rules II and III together would therefore exclude 24 plus 24 minus 12 that are common to both, that is 36. Out of a total of 48 belonging to the sixth and seventh degree lines, twelve descendents (Nos. 5, 6, 18, 21, 22, 25, 26, 29, 30, 33, 40, 41) survive both these rules. Two of these are agnates and 10 are cognates. If Sarvadhikari's rule four were also adopted, 8 out of these 10 would be cut off and the only cognate descendents beyond 5 degrees that survive all these rules would be No. 21—S₂D₂S₂ and No. 22—S₂DSD.

Among the 32 paternal ascendent lines Rule III excludes (1) ten entire lines, Nos. 19 and 23 because to their sons P is beyond 5 degrees on the daughter's side, and Nos. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32 because they are beyond 5 degrees from P's father on his maternal side; (Nos. 26, 28, 30, 32 are covered by Rule II also, so that both these rules would exclude 12 plus 10 minus 4 equals 18 lines); (2) 24 descendents in P's line and in F₁ to F₄'s lines; (3) all descendents beyond 5 degrees in the remaining 16 cognatic ascendents, because an ascendent of P traces to their common ancestor through a female, so that these 48 descendents will have no mutuality of sapindaship with such interlinking ascendent of P; (4) and all the cognatic descendents of such of the surviving 14 lines as are in the 6th and 7th degree lines, who trace to the common ancestor through a female and to whom P would be beyond 5 degrees from such common ancestor.

The combined effect of both these rules would be as follows:—

They would exclude 18 paternal ascendent lines out of 24 of the 6th and 7th degree lines. In these remaining 6 lines, all but 4 agnatic descendents are excluded. In the 8 paternal ascendent lines within 5 degrees to P, these rules reduce the descendents to 5 degrees and to a total of 30 only. In P's line they exclude 36 descendents. A scheme based on these two rules would consist of the following groups:—

	Males.	Females.
Paternal ascendents ..	14	plus 14
4 agnate descendents of 6 lines
Nos. 5, 6, 12, 14, 16, 21 ..	24

	Males.	Females.
30 descendents of 8 lines Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10 ..	120	plus 120
42 descendents of P ..	21	„ 21
Maternal ascendants ..	7	„ 7
Their 30 descendents ..	105	„ 105
Total ..	291	„ 267
Agnates ..	37	„ 7
Cognates ..	254	„ 260

Ganapathi Aiyar's figure is 230 to which we have to add 24. These are 4 ascendants—Nos. 12, 14, 16, 21 and 4 agnate descendents of each of them, and 4 descendents of P, Nos. 21, 25, 29, 40. If Sarvadhikari's rule four were also accepted it would exclude all these except ascendant No. 14 (FMF₃) with 4 of his agnatic descendents and descendent No. 21 (S₂DS₂) who are both recognised by Sarvadhikari.

Under Sarvadhikari's version of the fourth rule would survive (1) 6 agnatic and 31 cognatic descendents out of 78; and (2) among ascendants only 15 lines—Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 14, 25, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38; and (3) among these, 37 descendents in the paternal lines and 22 descendents in the maternal lines (33, 34, 35, 36, 38).

We shall conclude by examining two other schemes which have eschewed all these rules.

SARKAR SASTRI'S SCHEME.

This writer wants to take maternal ascendants also up to 7 degrees and descendents of them as well as of every other line even when related through a female, up to 7 degrees. In such a case there would be 32 paternal lines and 31 maternal lines plus P's. In all lines there would be 126 descendents. The total would be as follows:—

Ascendants—Paternal ..	64
Maternal ..	62
Descendents—126 x 64 ..	8064

Males 4095. Females 4095.

By deducting 56 agnate sapindas we get a total of 8134 cognates, of whom 4095 minus 7 equals 4088 are females and 4095 minus 49 equals 4046 are males. This extension of degrees up to 7 where relationship is traced through a female may be in accordance with Manu and many others but it cannot be justified in the Mitakshara system where the rule of Yajnavalkya is accepted.

HARADATTA'S SCHEME.

In the computation of degrees for purposes of marriage, Hindu writers have developed two theories. These have been explained at length in a recent article in 31 Law Weekly of Madras (January Issue, Parts 3 and 4, pp. 9—16 and pp. 17—24). The heirs or sapindas of P are to be ascertained not directly in reference to him but in reference to a common ancestor. The first thing to be done is to ascertain a common ascendent who is a sapinda of P—a Sapinda Kutastha as he is called; the next thing is to ascertain the relations of this sapinda common ancestor. In ascertaining these relations of the latter difference of opinion has arisen. The school of Kamalakara (which includes Anantadeva, etc.) holds that the entire progeny or santati of this common sapinda ancestor unlimited by any number of degrees are to be deemed to be the sapinda relations of P. This theory is called the Sapinda Kutastha Santatitwa—theory of relationship of progeny to a sapinda common ancestor. The school of Haradatta (which includes Vachaspati, Balam Bhatta, Nagesa, etc.) holds that we must take only the sapinda relations of this common sapinda ancestor. This theory is called Sapinda Kutastha Sapindatwa—theory of sapinda relationship to a sapinda common ancestor. The writers state that there would be no want of mutuality according to the latter theory, as there would be according to the former.

But this idea of mutuality is fundamentally different from that of Sarvadhikari and the modern writers. Haradatta wants that sapindaship should be ascertained from the point of view of P and the common ancestor, whereas Sarvadhikari wants that sapindaship should be ascertained from the point of view of P and the heir and of all the interlinks. This leads to fundamental differences. In the first place, what is wanted by Haradatta is that the common ancestor must be a sapinda of P and not that P should at the same time be a sapinda of this common ancestor. This would restore the 12 paternal lines excluded by rule two. In the second place, it is the heir that should be a sapinda of the common ancestor and not vice versa, so that it is unnecessary that P should be a sapinda of the heir. In the third place, it is unnecessary that the common ancestor or P or the heir should be a sapinda of any other intervening person. The practical result is that every bandhu who is excluded by Rules II to IV would be included in Haradatta's scheme. Haradatta demands only two requisites—sapindaship of the common ancestor to P and of the heir to such common ancestor. This is the only mode of computation that is known to Hindu writers. Even the common ancestor need not possess mutuality of sapindaship to P and the heir. In computation we start from P to the common ancestor and then from the latter to the heir, and from none else to none else. Even in the maternal ascendent lines we have to adopt the rule of 7 and 5 degrees for their descendents. Our Table IV exactly illustrates Haradatta's scheme which contains the following number of bandhus:

Ascendents	39 x 2	..	..	..	78
78 descendents of these and of P	40 x 78	..	..	..	3120
Sapindas	..	..	..	..	3198
Agnates	..	..	..	..	56
Cognates	..	..	..	..	3142

Males 1599 minus 49 equals 1550.

Females 1599 minus 7 equals 1592.

According to Kamalakara the progeny of these 40 lines would be not 78 but infinity.

CONCLUSION.

The above review establishes (1) that the fundamental Rules two, three and four cannot be supported on any ground, and (2) that the only scheme of bandhuship that is warranted both by authority as well as by logic is that of Haradatta. The conflict of views among modern writers and Judges is mostly due to the wrong lead given by Sarvadhikari which they want to support in varying degrees by means of arbitrary speculation and mere guess work.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

In re DRABBLE BROTHERS, (1930) 2 Ch. 211.

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent preference—Payment by principal innocently to a creditor on the agent's advice—Agent intending to prefer that creditor—If amounts to fraudulent preference by principal.

Two partners carried on business as builders and contractors. They were doing business through one T who acted as their agent to order the necessary building materials and to see to their payment. T drew up the cheques and laid them before the partners for signature and then despatched them to the payees. Knowing that the partnership was in insolvent circumstances, and with the intention of preferring a creditor, T drew up the cheque for payment to him and in the usual course obtained the principal's signature to it. The principals had no idea of preferring and they innocently signed it under the belief that it was for the current purchases. Within 3 months of the payment, the principals were adjudicated insolvents.

Held, by the Divisional Court (Clouston and Farwell, JJ.) that it may be that when a principal delegates to an agent the making of payments of a particular class, then in considering whether a payment so made is or is not fraudulent preference, the agent's state of mind may be considered, but where the payments are made by the principals (the agent having no funds to pay) and on their own responsibility, then it is their mind and the view with which they made the payments that has to be considered and inasmuch as they made the payments innocently there was no fraudulent preference.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing the Division Bench) that the bankrupts no doubt retained control over the banking account, but exercised no independent determination as to the creditors to be paid or the amounts to be paid to them and delegated all such details to their agent T. T thereby fully represented the bankrupts in their finances and therefore the view to prefer entertained by the agent was in law the view of the principals. The mere fact that he did not possess the power of actually signing cheques does not matter so long as it is clear that the discretion was entrusted to him to select the creditors to be paid.

A DEBTOR, In re, (1930) 2 Ch. 239.

Bankruptcy—Money-lender—Judgment on a loan lent at 270 per cent.—Bankruptcy notice for non-payment—Non-compliance with—Receiving order on moneylender's bankruptcy petition—Validity of—Moneylenders Act, 1927, S. 9.

The petitioning creditors—a firm of moneylenders—obtained a judgment against the debtor on a promissory note executed by him, interest on the loan being 270*l.* per cent. per annum and issued a bankruptcy notice against him for the judgment debt. The debtor failed to comply with the notice whereupon a receiving order was made against him. The question arose if the notice which required the debtor to pay the judgment debt in accordance with the terms of the judgment was good and can form the foundation of an act of bankruptcy when the claim was not limited to 5 per cent. interest on the money actually lent to the judgment-debtor.

Held, that under S. 9 the right of the moneylender to receive a higher rate of interest is preserved but only postponed till payment of all the debts in full and there is no prohibition in S. 9 against the inclusion of a claim for interest at a higher rate than 5 per cent. in a bankruptcy notice founded on a judgment.

ASKEW, In re. MARJORIBANKS v. ASKEW, (1930) 2 Ch. 259.

Conflict of laws—British subject with foreign domicile—Birth of a daughter by a lady when his marriage was not dissolved—Subsequent dissolution of the first marriage and marriage with the second lady—Legitimation of the daughter under the German law—Appointment of a trust fund in favour of the daughter as his child—Recognition in English Courts—Renvoi, when recognised by English Courts.

By a settlement made on the occasion of the marriage, the husband J, then a British subject, settled upon trusts, during his life to apply the income for the benefit of him and his wife and their children and after their death to the issue of that marriage. But if he should remarry, he (J) might revoke the trusts concerning a part of the fund and appoint that part in favour of any wife that might survive him or any child or other issue of such subsequent marriage. . . . For some years before 1912 he and his first wife had separated, he living in Germany. J acquired a de facto German domicile before 1911. In June, 1911, the marriage with the first wife was dissolved and in 1912 he married A as his second wife. The defendant M was born in January, 1911, before the first marriage was dissolved and she was acknowledged by him as his daughter. J purported to revoke the trust fund to the extent permitted and settled it in favour of M and A. If German Local Law were applicable, then the subsequent marriage would effect M's legitimation, though she was born before the divorce.

Held, that as stated in R. 37 of Dicey's Conflict of Laws, "If both the law of the father's domicile at the time of the birth of the child and the law of the father's domicile at the time of the subsequent marriage allow of legitimatio per subsequens matrimonium, the child becomes or may become legitimate on the marriage of the parents" but the "law of the father's domicile" there must mean the municipal or local law of the domiciled country (Germany, here) and not as Dicey would mean the whole of the laws applicable in that country (Germany), including the views entertained in Germany as to the rules of private international law. When such matters come before English Courts, the lex domicilii in the widest sense must apply and as by the German law M had acquired a legitimate daughterhood, she must be treated by an English Court as a legitimate child of J.

In re Johnson, (1903) 1 Ch. 821, dissented from.

Case-law discussed.

Desirability of making clear by a statute the position of British subjects who acquire domiciles in countries which do not agree with our views as to the effect of a foreign domicile pointed out.

OSBORN v. THOMAS BOULTER & SON, (1930) 2 K.B. 226.

Defamation—Privilege—Letter dictated to typist—If privilege lost by such dictation—Reasonable and ordinary course of business.

In reply to a letter from the plaintiffs complaining about the quality of the beer supplied to their public house by the defendant, the defendant replied stating that the plaintiffs were responsible for the deterioration in the quality as they were adding water to the beer supplied and this letter was dictated by the defendant to his typist.

Held, that the occasion of the publication being a communication between the respondent, who alleged that bad beer had been supplied to him, and the brewers, who were protecting their own interests by repudiating the suggestion of supply of bad beer by them and suggesting another cause for the inferiority, was privileged.

Held, also that as it is in the usual course of commercial business to write letters by dictating to the typist, the privilege was not lost by such publication to the typist unless it was so written maliciously. If a business communication is privileged, the privilege covers all incidents of the transmission and treatment of that communication which are in accordance with a reasonable and usual course of business.

Pullman v. Hill, (1891) 1 Q.B. 524, explained away as a decision on facts that in 1891, it was not usual for a member of a business firm to dictate letters to a clerk.

• RALSTON v. RALSTON, (1930) 2 K.B. 238: 99 L.J.K.B. 266.

Defamation—Husband and wife—Separate living by agreement—Inscription on a tombstone—Defamatory of wife—Action for libel—If maintainable by wife—Married Women's Property Act, 1882, S. 12.

By a deed of separation, the husband and wife separated and were living apart, the husband covenanting to pay an annuity to the wife. The deed also contained a covenant for further assurance. On a tombstone, the husband caused an inscription to be made to the effect "I in loving memory of the beloved wife of R. . . . Died, 20th May, 1916." The wife was carrying on a motor business.

Held, that the inscription is capable of a defamatory meaning against the wife. But by reason of S. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the wife could not sue the husband upon it, the action being on a libel which is a tort and not for the protection of her separate property. A charge of dishonesty or the like may injure her trade and thereby her property but an imputation of unchastity can in no way affect the ownership or the management of the motor garage.

BIRCH BROTHERS, LIMITED v. BROWN, (1930) 2 K.B. 255.

Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 9—Loss of left eye by accident in the course of employment—Cataract beginning in the right eye at the date of accident—Supervening blindness in right eye—Offer of work by employers' Insurance Company—Inability to accept owing to blindness—Whether complete blindness due to accident.

A workman met with an accident in the course of his employment which resulted in the loss of his left eye. His right eye was then showing signs of a cataract, which later developed and completely blinded him. He was receiving compensation as for total incapacity. The employers' Insurance Company offered him a job, which the workman was willing to accept if he could be given an escort home. The employers thereupon applied to reduce the compensation by the amount offered to him by the Insurance Company and the County Court Judge reduced the compensation holding that though the workman was unfit for work, yet the condition of the right eye, which was responsible for his inability to work was due not to the accident but to cataract.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Scrutton, L.J., dissenting) that the County Court Judge was wrong in reducing the compensation. The case was one where the man had been deprived of his one eye at a time when his other eye was diseased and likely to become useless.

If the workman's right eye had been sightless at the time of the accident, he would have been entitled to compensation on the basis of total blindness. The same consequences would follow if the blindness did not immediately result, but arose at a later date, the workman at the time of the accident suffering from a progressive disease, viz., cataract.

Held, by Scrutton, L.J., that though were the matter res integra the majority view may be correct, on the authority of Hargreave's case, (1912) A.C. 319 and Lomax's case, 19 B.W.C.C. 301, the judgment of the County Court Judge was right.

NACHIMSON v. NACHIMSON, (1930) P. 217: 99 L.J.P. D.A. 41.

Marriage—Lex loci contractus permitting dissolution at will of one party without any cause—Marriage if such as can be recognised by English Courts—Validity, if depends on indissolubility.

The parties, who were both domiciled Russians, went through the procedure requisite for a legal marriage under the Russian law and were by Russian law deemed to be married. Subsequently they lived as man and wife for some years. As the law stood in Russia at the date of the registry of their marriage (1918), a marriage lasted during the lifetime of the spouses but could be terminated by their mutual consent or even by the unilateral desire of either of them subject to a certain procedure. The Judge on the application for divorce had merely to register the divorce and it was not necessary to adduce any proof of any cause for divorce. The question arose if the parties have contracted a marriage that is to be recognised as such by the Courts of this country.

Held, that as regards marriage—putting aside the question of capacity—locus regit actum. The validity of a marriage celebrated in a foreign country conforming in all respects to the definition of a Christian marriage, as understood by the English law, does not depend upon whether under the law of the country where it was celebrated it could be dissolved more or less readily. The marriage here was the union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others; it was to last for life unless dissolved and was duly entered in the registers as required by Russian law. Because the method of dissolution was simple, and at the discretion of one party, the marriage cannot be treated as in essence merely a union at will and not a union for life.

APTED v. APTED AND BLISS, (1930) P. 247: 99 L.J.P. D.A. 73.

Divorce—Practice—Adultery of the husband petitioner—Statement in petition that he was guilty of one act of adultery—Untrue statement—Discretion of Court to grant decree—Effect of false statements or suppression of facts—Principles guiding exercise of discretion.

The petition stated that the husband (petitioner) was deserted by his wife while he was on active service during the great war, when so deserted was guilty of one isolated act of adultery and later led into cohabitation with a woman other than his wife under an erroneous belief that his wife had procured a divorce and this was repeated by the sworn testimony of the petitioner. In cross-examination all these statements were found to be false but that he was guilty of adultery himself.

Held, that in the circumstances the Court cannot exercise the discretion in the petitioner's favour. It may be that even where the falsehoods of petitioners are exposed, the Court may properly consider whether on a true statement of the facts in the first instance the discretion would have been exercised. The discretion must be a sound judicial discretion. The interest of the community at large in maintaining the sanctions of honest matrimony is a governing consideration; a strong affirmative case is necessary before a Judge is satisfied under the statute in negating their conditional prohibition. It is manifestly contrary to law that a judicial discretion should be exercised in favour of a litigant guilty of misconduct in the matters in question where that course will probably encourage immorality. The petition must state truly the facts on which the discretion is sought. Full force ought to be given to the misconduct of the suitor and if good cause is shown within the meaning of S. 178 for waiver of the prohibition to grant a decree, then the discretion will not be usually refused.

Case-law discussed and principles guiding discretion laid down.

A petitioner in a divorce proceeding who asks for the discretion of the Court being exercised in his favour but purposely obstructs or diverts the course of justice by not doing what he is commanded or required by lawful process to do or by suppressing facts or stating falsehoods is liable not merely to the dismissal of his suit with costs but also to be committed for contempt.

MOTHERSDALE v. CLEVELAND BRIDGE AND ENGINEERING Co., 99 L.J.K.B. 261.

Workmen's compensation—Accident injuring the workman—Partial recovery—Fit for some work—Unemployed—Due to labour conditions and not to accident—Not entitled to full compensation—Judge, if can act on his personal knowledge.

A workman met with an accident as the result of which his right arm was amputated. Full compensation was paid to him for some time based on total incapacity and later it was reduced on the basis of partial incapacity as he was fit for work with one arm. The workman asked for employment at a number of places and had been refused it. The County Judge found using his local knowledge that the failure to obtain employment was largely owing to the bad state of the labour market in the locality and not the result wholly or mainly of the accident.

Held, the Judge was entitled to use his local knowledge and his knowledge as a man of the condition of things in the locality and find what the unemployment is due to on the evidence plus his local knowledge. The state of the local market can be considered to determine the cause for the non-employment and as it was found that the unemployment was due to the labour market and not the result of the accident, the workman was not entitled to full compensation.

CONSETT IRON CO. v. DURHAM COUNTY ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE FOR NO. 5 OR NORTH WEST AREA, 99 L.J.K.B. 277.

Rates and rating—Lessees of coal mines—Collieries lying idle and working at a loss during the year of assessment—No possibility of the properties being let at any rent that year—If liable to rates—Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, S. 1.

During the six months of assessment of the year for which the rate was made, the colliery had been working at a loss. There was no likelihood that it would improve within a year and earn profit and no one would have entered into a tenancy of the said colliery property in the period in question at any rent whatever if he had known of the conditions of trade then prevailing. The only basis on which anyone could be found to take it up is on the assumption that his tenancy would continue for a term of years and that later the conditions of trade would improve.

Held, the words in the section were "rent at which (it) . . . might reasonably be expected to let from year to year" and not the "rent you could expect anybody to give for the year of assessment". It is, therefore, legitimate for the Justices in considering the rent which is to be paid to take a period longer than the year of assessment and to take into account the things that may reasonably be expected to happen during the tenancy for which the rent is to be paid. The cases really set up a person called the "hypothetical tenant" who might reasonably pay the rent which is to be taken as the net annual value.

Staley v. Castleton Overseers, (1864) 5 B. & S. 505: 33 L.J.M.C. 178, doubted and distinguished as a case where the business had ceased and not one in which the business was in operation but resulted in a loss.

HALLIWELL v. VENABLES, 99 L.J.K.B. 353.

Costs—Action for negligence—Court dismissing suit at defendants' instance saying there was no case to go to the jury—Appeal—Remand for new trial—Proper order as to costs—Onus of proving negligence.

• A widow, whose husband had been killed in a motor accident, brought an action for damages against the driver of the car. It was stated that the deceased did not pay anything to be carried in the motor car but was carried at the request of the deceased himself. At the end of the plaintiff's case, and partly at the instance of the defendant's counsel, the trial Judge dismissed the action holding that there was no case to go to the jury. On appeal, it was held that the trial Judge struck too soon and that there was evidence which should have been put to the jury and remanded the case for a new trial.

Held, the mere happening of an accident, unexplained, often is in itself evidence of negligence without going back to find out why exactly the accident happened.

Scott v. London and St. Katherine Docks Co., 3 H. & C. 601: 34 L.J. Ex. at 222, followed.

Per Slessor, L.J.—"If a person undertakes to perform a voluntary act he is liable if he performs it improperly but not if he neglects to perform it. The confidence induced by undertaking any service for another is a sufficient legal consideration to create a duty in the performance of it."

As regards costs, the plaintiff must have the costs of the appeal. But with regard to the costs of the first trial, if the plaintiff succeeds in the new trial, she would have the costs of the first trial, but the defendant is not to have the costs of the first trial in any event.

SPIVACK v. SPIVACK, 99 L.J.P.D.A. 52.

Husband and wife—Wife's petition for maintenance—Nature of evidence—Proof of the fact of marriage—Co-habitation—Further proof, if necessary.

In a claim for maintenance against a husband, the woman (alleged wife) proved that a form of marriage was gone through as prevailed in the community of Jews to which she belonged, that co-habitation followed and that she had children by him. A certificate of its registration was also produced which was vouched by the proper official procedure and accepted by the Russian authorities, who were then the lawful Government of the District in which the alleged marriage was said to have been celebrated.

Held, that in summary magisterial proceedings for maintenance, strict proof of marriage as may probably be necessary in cases of an indictment for bigamy is not necessary. "Where there is evidence of a ceremony of marriage having been gone through, followed by the co-habitation of the parties, everything necessary for the validity of the marriage will be presumed in the absence of decisive evidence to the contrary, even though it may be necessary to presume the grant of a special license."

Piers v. Piers, (1849) 2 H.L.C. 331, followed.

R. v. Naquib, (1917) 1 K.B. 359: 86 L.J.K.B. 709, doubted and distinguished as a case of an indictment for bigamy.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Crime and the Car.—The increase in the volume of crime is mainly attributable to offences against property; and of these the figures with regard to which are called crimes against property with violence, are the most remarkable. This class of offence includes sacrilege, burglary, house-breaking, robbery, etc., and the "violence" is often merely technical; but the heading serves conveniently to distinguish the class of cases from that to which simple larceny, false pretences and fraud belong. Sacrilege and burglary have decreased, but the other forms of crime against property with violence have substantially increased, the incidence of the rise in towns and in country districts, respectively, being astonishing. For this purpose, the year 1911 is compared with 1928, and the figures show that whereas in the Metropolitan Police District this class of offence increased by only 10·6 per cent., from 3,304 to 3,654, it increased in the Home Counties—those parts of Hertfordshire, Essex, Kent and Surrey which are outside the Metropolitan Police District, and Berkshire—by more than four hundred per cent., from 442 to 2,377. This truly alarming increase is ascribed, we doubt not with perfect truth, to the coming of the "motor age," which has enabled the criminally-minded to travel further afield to areas where they are not known and where the police protection to property is necessarily relatively less. Incidentally, the increased mobility of the population owing to the motor-car results in more houses being left temporarily unoccupied and so provides additional opportunity for the would-be thief. We shall hope to refer later to certain other features of the Criminal Statistics, particularly to the disquieting increases in cases of fraud and of obtaining money by false pretences.—L.J., 1930, p. 3.

• Barking Dogs.—Once again the innocent, but noisy, friend of man has brought his master into the Courts. The defendants in a recent action (Gladstone v. Murray Wilson, Times, June 28) consented to a perpetual injunction restraining them from keeping any dogs in their house in Kensington so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff by their barking. The case was not fought out on evidence, so we have no guidance as to how much barking the law permits before declaring that the margin of nuisance has been crossed. On the general question of nuisance by noise, on which lawyers are constantly asked to advise nowadays, there is no better guide than the fine judgment of Warrington, J., in Rushmer v. Polsue and another, (1906) 1 Ch. 234: 75 L.J. Ch. 79, which was affirmed without variation by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. Has the defendant done anything which seriously interferes with the comfort, physically, of the plaintiff and his family in the occupation of his house according to the ordinary notions prevailing among reasonable English men and women? That is the first and last question; and it was the issue in Vanderpant v. Mayfair Hotel, (1930) 1 Ch. 315: 99 L.J. Ch. 84, where after a long hearing, the law in the matter was again clearly repeated. No doubt those "ordinary notions" will vary as time goes on, and we may have to suffer more noise, as with advancing years, our distaste for it increases. It is comforting to think that we have Chancery Judges who, though still young men, have a respect for the comfort of silence.—L.J., 1930, p. 3.

• The Nationality of Married Women.—It would seem that the Imperial Conference when it meets will have a pretty full programme for discussion. There are primarily the questions raised by the Report of the Conference on Dominion Legislation, whether, in brief, the present system shall continue, under which Dominion Legislatures have practically a free hand, subject to the nominal revision of the Imperial Parliament; or whether their legislative independence shall be expressly recognised, subject only to exception in matters of extra-territoriality. And South Africa apparently expects an affirmation of the right to secede; not that she either wants to, or that any compulsion would be attempted against her if she did want to; but to have the academic point of constitutional law settled. It appears, too, from a letter in The Times of August 30, signed by a number of persons interested in the nationality of married women, that the Conference is expected to deal with this subject also. It is, of course, one of the questions raised by the modern tendency in favour of the equality of the sexes, though whether it is a matter to which that principle can be conveniently applied is not clear, and at the present time, owing to the variety of rules recognised by different countries, the question has become very complicated. The signatories to the letter form the "Nationality of Married Women" Pass the Bill Committee, and the Bill referred to was introduced in the House of Commons last February for the purpose of establishing that a married woman shall not on her marriage lose her nationality or acquire a new nationality without her consent.—L.J., 1930, p. 144.

The Right to retain Nationality.—The alternative principles which may govern the nationality of married women are: (1) that marriage shall have no effect; or (2) that the wife shall take the nationality of her husband; or (3) that whether she takes such nationality shall depend on her own election; but these are subject to variation. That marriage shall have no effect was the common law rule in England, but it was changed by the Naturalisation Act of 1870, for the second rule, and this is now in force here. It was the rule in the United States until reversed by the "Cable Act" of 1922, and since then a British woman marrying a United States citizen does not, without express naturalisation, become a citizen of the United States. On the other hand, she loses her British nationality, and is, therefore, stateless, while a woman of the United States who marries a British subject at the same time retains American nationality,—though she can make a formal renunciation of citizenship—and acquires British nationality. These cases of statelessness and double nationality are the result of the present contradictory systems. In general, they are avoided under the French nationality law of 1927, which substantially adopts the third rule, and makes the woman's change of nationality depend on her election. All that the Imperial Conference can attempt is to secure uniformity in British and Dominion law, and the signatories to The Times letter consider it essential that married women shall have the right to determine their own citizenship, corresponding to their present equality of property and political rights. It is too large a question to argue in a note, but the tendency in Europe appears to be to adopt the English rule, and make the wife's nationality follow that of the husband. Apart from the abstract point of liberty, this is probably the convenient rule. At any rate, the most pressing matter is to secure, not that a married woman shall have any particular nationality, but that she shall not by marriage lose her original nationality without gaining another. In other words, that by general agreement, the loss of one nationality should be conditional on the acquisition of the other; and this was one of the suggestions of the League of Nations Codifying Committee which recently dealt with the subject. There is a careful survey of the whole question in a paper read by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones, M.P., before the Grotius Society on November 20, 1929, and printed in the recently published Transactions of the Society (Vol. 15, 1930). Of course, while from the legal point of view it is necessary for each individual to have a fixed nationality, the conception of the importance of Nationalism is quite modern—"an exaggerated and extreme mood," says Mr. Hilaire Belloc, in Survivals and New Arrivals, "from which all the white world suffers to-day."—L.J., 1930, p. 144.

The German Constitution.—Eleven years is not much for the testing of a written Constitution, but only that period has elapsed since Germany's fate in the war led to revolution and the replacing of the Hohenzollern dynasty by the Constitution made at Weimar in February, 1919. "Supreme power emanates from the people," so runs Art. 1 in laying down the fundamental principle that the German Federation is a republic, but Art. 4 has a wider tone, and declares that "the rules of international law, universally recognised, are deemed to be part of German Federal Law, and as such have obligatory force." But though the people may be sovereign, and the source of supreme power, this is meaningless unless a way is provided for declaring its will, and so S. II of the Constitution institutes the Reichstag, which must be elected every four years, and the members of which "are, each of them, representatives of the whole people. They are subject to their conscience alone and are not bound by instructions" (Art. 20). It is an excellent maxim, though in practice it is a hard one for members of Legislatures to observe. The recent elections, which, owing to political considerations, have been held after an interval of two years only, appear to have upset in an unexpected manner the balance of parties, and the result will be for the future to determine. But the hope for democracy is that innate common sense will prevail, even if the multiplication of parties makes stability look impossible. Two points there are of special interest in the 181 Articles of the Constitution. Art. 48 gives emergency powers in case of danger:

"If public order and security are seriously disturbed or endangered within the Federation, the President of the Federation may take all necessary steps for their restoration, intervening, if necessary, by armed force."

Somewhat free use has been made of these powers. There are, indeed, emergency decrees now in operation which the new Reichstag will have to consider. And the Constitution is not fixed and unalterable save in ways as difficult as in the United States. Under Art. 76 it can be amended by legislation, that is, by the Reichstag; though only if two-thirds of the legal total of members are present, and at least two-thirds of those present consent.—L.J., 1930, p. 168.

"Fusion."—The division of the legal profession into two branches appears to be a standing puzzle to part of the lay public, and its meaning is not appreciated by all lawyers. Yet if it was realised that in substance the phenomenon is no more than an instance of the division of labour, the wonderment would cease. The Morning Post has been ventilating the subject this week in an article by "A Solicitor" urging fusion as a remedy for the high costs of litigation, and a reply by Mr. H. Fletcher Moulton pointing out that, even under fusion, the client's case would not be managed from start to finish by the same man. The interviews with the client and the investigation of the details of the case go naturally to different persons from those who advise on its technical aspects and who have charge of it in Court. It might be that all this would fall to the same individual, but that would be rare, and the individual would be a person without much business. As Mr. Moulton says: "There would still be specialisation—still the man who worked up the case, and the other man who conducted it—only the client, instead of having his present free choice among the whole Bar, would be bound to accept as advocate a partner in the firm advising him." But it must not be assumed that the result of fusion would be to re-arrange counsel and solicitors in firms including, say, one counsel to two solicitors, the present division of functions being reproduced in, but confined to, the firm. This is not so with the doctors who fall naturally into the two divisions of general practitioners and specialists—the former usually in partnership; the latter always "on their own."—L.J., 1930, p. 179.

Counsel's Fees.—But the view we have expressed does not mean that there is no remedy for the present high costs of litigation, though it would be a mistake to suppose that under any system litigation can be otherwise than expensive. "A Solicitor" in the Morning Post scores two points against counsel's fees, one in regard to K. C.s and the other in regard to juniors. He objects to a leader who has already accepted a brief at what he must be presumed to regard a satisfactory fee, afterwards requiring it to be increased to level it with his opponent's fee. For such a practice there appears to be no justification, and perhaps it is not so general as "A Solicitor" represents. But his other point, that the junior has a right to two-thirds of the amount of his leader's fee, is a rule on which the Bar has hitherto insisted, and there is probably a good deal to be said for it. The fee really covers the work, often very heavy, of the preparation of the case. This is inadequately remunerated by the comparatively small fees paid for settling the pleadings and advising, and if the two-thirds rule were abolished, the Junior Bar would doubtless look for increased fees in these earlier stages. But in fact—apart from the "luxury fees" paid for the employment of counsel of special eminence, and these are entirely at the option of the client—counsel's fees do not form a large part in the bill of costs, and if substantial reduction is possible, it will have to be found elsewhere.—L.J., 1930, p. 179.

An Empire Court of Appeal.—It appears that the discussions in the Imperial Conference which opened on Wednesday will be largely concerned with economic questions; the last Conference, with its formula devised by the late Lord Balfour of equality of status, is likely to be accepted as having settled the basis of the relations of the different parts of the Empire, whatever qualifications may have to be given to the formula in actual working. And the report of the Conference on Dominion Legislation, and on the effect as regards the Dominions of Merchant Shipping Legislation, can hardly fail to come up for consideration. It seems, also, from replies by Mr. Thomas, the Dominions Secretary, on Monday, to questions by Press representatives, that the question of appeals to the Privy Council will come up in a new form, and one of the matters for discussion will be the setting up of an Empire Appeal Court. The suggestion of such a Court was made in Part VII of the Report just referred to, and it may have been assisted by the possibility of disputes between different parts of the Empire being taken to the permanent Court of International Justice; and however necessary it may be that juridical questions between independent States should be submitted to the permanent Court established in connection with the League of Nations, there would naturally be objection to questions between Great Britain and the Dominions being discussed before the tribunal. They are more suitable for a domestic forum, and if the powers of the Judicial Committee as at present constituted are not wide enough for the purpose, they can be extended. But the adaptation of the existing Empire tribunal would be preferable to setting up an entirely new tribunal. It would seem, however, from the report of what Mr. Thomas said, that a new tribunal may be in contemplation. The proposals, which have not yet taken definite shape, do not appear to involve any interference with the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords. They are, therefore, distinct from the plan for a Court of Final Appeal amalgamating the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee such as Lord Haldane advocated.—L.J., 1930, p. 194.

The Ethics of Punishment.—The October number of The Police Journal contains, in addition to a number of other articles interesting and useful to the lawyer as well as to the police official, a particularly valuable paper by Sir Reginald Craddock, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., on "The Ethics of Punishment," which deserves to be carefully studied by all who have anything to do with the administration of criminal justice. It is generally accepted that the punishment of crime has a fourfold object—retributive, deterrent, preventive and reformative—and the problem constantly confronting Judges and others to whom the power of awarding punishment is entrusted is as to the relative importance to be attached to each of these objects in any particular case. There are those who say that retribution—or vengeance—is not a proper object of punishment at all; but as Sir Reginald points out, it is the only one of the four objects of punishment which really requires proof of guilt; all the other objectives might be attained, although the man punished was innocent of the particular offence charged. And since under any just system retribution must be proportioned to the offence, it prevents unduly heavy sentences being given as a deterrent to others. Sir Reginald Craddock makes a good point when he says that a great deal depends on the prison administration; for no amount of care on the part of the Judge in assessing the proper sentence can avail if the objectives of punishment are not borne in mind by those who are in charge of the prisoner; whilst it is above all necessary that the administration of the criminal law should have the backing of sane public opinion, which may, of course, be a very different thing from public opinion at a particular moment.—L.J., 1930, p. 195.

• Lord Birkenhead as a Judge.—The numerous appreciations of Lord Birkenhead which have appeared in the daily and weekly Press mingle admiration of his brilliant career with surprise that his great talents did not give him a more commanding position in the political world. But first of all he was a lawyer, and for lawyers his distinction in their own field is his best title to fame. It was gratifying, therefore, to read in The Times of last Saturday the tribute paid him by Lord Dunedin. Agreeing with the general opinion of the excellence of his judicial work as Lord Chancellor, Lord Dunedin ascribes it not to depth of legal learning: "He was not a profound lawyer in the sense in which Lord Blackburn, Lord Macnaghten, and Lord Sumner were when they first became members of the Supreme Tribunals of the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee," but to his readiness to learn. No false pride prevented him from asking and informing himself until he got the requisite knowledge, and, says Lord Dunedin, his ability did the rest. Compared with the length of time Lord Dunedin has himself been one of the most esteemed members of the Supreme Tribunals, Lord Birkenhead's judicial career was only transient; but it was long enough to impress his colleagues in these Tribunals with his success in a position for which his brilliance as an advocate seemed hardly to have fitted him. And yet if he was not a Blackburn or Macnaghten, there must have been a basis of sound technical knowledge on which his success was built. As to his power to impress himself on the House of Lords, this was never shown more strongly than in Lady Rhondda's case, (1922, 2 A.C. 339), when her claim to sit in the House of Lords by virtue of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919—which, in the absence of objection by Sir Gordon Hewart as Attorney-General, had been unanimously allowed by the Committee for Privileges,—was, at Lord Birkenhead's instance, rejected on a second hearing by 22 to 4. Of the legal Peers on the Committee, only Lord Haldane and Lord Wrenbury resisted his argument based on the strict terms of the grant of the peerage, and adhered to the plain effect of the statute.—L.J., 1930, p. 214.

Birkenhead.—With the passing of Lord Birkenhead went far and away the most vivid legal personality of our time. Opinions may differ as to whether he was a great lawyer in the sense in which that expression is understood by members of the Bench and Bar; but that he was a great advocate and something greatly more is beyond dispute. It is an error to suppose that the appointments which marked the course of his upward and phenomenal career, were thrust upon him. He achieved and attained them by his own deliberate aim and effort. He was fully aware of his own merit and claims, and would never permit them to be overlooked by the person or persons who had the power of appointment. In every case he was quickly justified by the event, and whether as Solicitor-General, Attorney-General or Chancellor, he excelled others with apparent ease and unsailable efficiency.

His desire to outshine all others in the fight for and acquisition of glittering prizes was only equalled by his extreme loyalty to his friends and institutions. He would excel the other scholars of Wadham, but he was the champion of Wadham against Oxford and all-comers, of Gray's Inn against all; of the Northern Circuit against all other circuits of Britain; and there are many in good places to-day who owe those places to those loyalties and friendships of F. E. Smith. None more dignified than he on the Woolsack; but of a night, in the Hall of Gray's Inn, he could make the fighting speech of an undergraduate and maintain the superiority of his Inn as against the "garnished megalomania" of others and the unfounded toasts of those who, "in their cups," would aver that, in age and distinction, their Inns and Houses could compare with the incomparable House of Gray's.—L.J., 1930, p. 222.

His Insolence in a Great Case.—An eye-witness tells me the story of one of his great cases, not included in the number of those which are known and published. At or about the time when he came up from Liverpool there was in London (says the eye-witness) a County Court Judge under whose tyranny solicitors and members of the Bar had suffered for many years. This judge never hesitated to express his poor opinion of the advocacy of those who appeared before him; he would interrupt on all occasions, relevant or irrelevant, and humble the advocate in the presence of his client.

A firm of solicitors who had endured this tyranny for many years briefed F. E. Smith for the plaintiff in a jury case, in the hope that a blow might be struck for freedom. Mr. Smith had hardly begun the opening of his case to the jury when the Judge intervened by asking him if it was really necessary to go into all these details; whereupon Mr. Smith, with deliberate and unhurried insolence, demanded: "How dare you interfere when I am addressing the Jury?" Further encounters took place in a Court packed with keen observers of the fray; and it was soon obvious that the Judge was not doing well. Finally Mr. Smith advised the Jury not to pay any attention to anything which might fall from the lips of the old man (or old woman) on the Bench; whereat the Judge cried out that Mr. Smith was abominably rude.

Said Mr. Smith: There are two classes of persons who may be so described; those who deliberately intend to be rude; and those who are rude because they cannot help it. I belong to the former class; your Honour to the latter.

A few days later (says my informant) the Judge resigned and the County Courts knew him no more.—L.J., 1930, p. 222.

Mental Deficiency.—A perusal of the sixteenth annual report of the Board of Control recently published brings out the practical possibilities opened up by the Mental Treatment Act in conjunction with the Local Government Act, and the more optimistic reader can at last dare to visualise a treatment of mental illness which will approach more closely to that of physical ailments. When that time arrives there will be no longer the temptation to the so fatal concealment of the beginnings of mental disorder. The section of the report which will capture the interest as strongly as any other is that which deals with the difficulties presented by the problem of mental deficiency, its ascertainment, treatment and control, with its tragic records of disease and criminality traceable to the inadequate supervision of mental defectives. Not once but many times have Magistrates and Judges referred in Court to the unfortunate consequences entailed by the free intermingling of those unfortunates with society generally, and one High Court Judge at least has openly advocated sexual sterilisation, a measure which the Board of Control still thinks merits "careful study and investigation." As a subsequent correspondence in The Times has shown, there is by no means unanimity of opinion with regard to the necessity in cases of insanity for adopting this remedy, even with the consent of the patient himself, but surely experience leaves little room for difference in the case of mental deficiency. As the report prudently points out, it would not be eradicated by this means, but, if Professor Julian Huxley's calculation that preventing all existing mental defectives from reproducing would in the course of four or five generations halve the incidence of mental defect approaches anywhere near to correctness, the case for at least the investigation desired by the Board is overwhelmingly strong.—L.T., 1930, p. 271.

The Persistent Offender.—A certain section of the community will always probably make a livelihood by dishonesty, but the growth of the professional criminal class was acknowledged to be most disquieting. It will be remembered that the last issue of the Criminal Statistics drew attention to this persistence in crime and to what it took to be the proved failure of the system of preventive detention. On this subject, too, Mr. Clynes had something to say in his remarks to the Conference, and he concluded his comments by announcing his intention of appointing a Committee to consider the existing methods of dealing with persistent offenders, including those habitual criminals liable under the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, to sentences of preventive detention. The inquiry, which would be opened as soon as possible, would necessarily, he said, be a difficult one, for the methods of curative treatment might naturally be expected to be as various in character as the predisposing causes.—L.T., 1930, p. 297.

Nationality and the Dominions.—Among the matters before the Imperial Conference which have been referred to Lord Sankey's Committee for examination and report is the important subject of nationality as affected by the existence of the self-governing dominions. Practical necessity ordained that the Imperial Parliament should provide the general rules regarding the admission of aliens to British Citizenship, but practical convenience dictated that there should be a modified naturalization under local Acts. Over a hundred years ago, as Professor Berriedale Keith has noted in his book on the Sovereignty of the British Dominions, recently reviewed in these columns, an urgent need was felt in Upper Canada for machinery whereby American citizens with British ties and interests might, without conforming to the usual elaborate regulations, become loyal Canadian British subjects. The principle of naturalization under local laws was recognised and became permanently operative under the Naturalization Act, 1870, but the two forms of naturalization were markedly different in effect. Naturalization granted here was valid throughout the Empire; colonial naturalization was entirely local.—L.T., 1930, p. 297.

Maintained Wives Living Abroad.—A man named Shelton, summoned at Southend for being in arrears on a maintenance order obtained by his wife, stated that his wages had been greatly reduced since the order was made, but he could not apply for reduction of the order, because she was living in Germany, and the summons could not be, consequently served on her. The justices appear to have dealt with the difficulty by adjourning the wife's summons indefinitely, so long as the husband paid 15s. weekly, instead of the £1 required by the original order. Possibly this method of dealing with the problem may be effective, but of course there is no real legal answer to the wife's demand of £1 a week, save by the proper working of the machinery for the variation or discharge of the order. The Maintenance Orders (Facilities for Enforcement) Act of 1920, provides, very rightly, for the enforcement of an order against a husband who is anywhere within the British Empire. Nothing is said in the relevant statutes, however, as to the election of a woman having the benefit of a maintenance order to reside abroad. The whole theory of separation orders, which do not dissolve the bonds of marriage, is that nothing shall be placed in the way of the reconciliation of the parties, and that these orders should never be regarded as permanent. In resisting Lord Buckmaster's bill for further divorce facilities, the late Archbishop Davidson largely based his arguments on the frequency of reconciliation after separation. Whether reconciliation takes place in any but a trifling percentage of cases after separation orders is, no doubt, a controversial issue, but the possibilities of resumed relations must surely be substantially reduced if the wife receiving the money lives permanently abroad, and it is certainly open to question whether it should continue payable in such circumstances. The suggestion may therefore be made that, in addition to the reasons enabling magistrates to vary or discontinue an order, evidence that the wife who has obtained it has been out of the jurisdiction for three months or upwards should give them the necessary power. It would then be open to the wife to prove that her absence was temporary only. Men against whom maintenance orders are made are as a rule in a humble position, and certainly cannot be expected to send private detectives abroad to watch their wives, who thus are left quite free to cohabit with another man, while drawing maintenance money under a strict condition of chastity.—S.J., 1930, p. 391.

Truth in the Box.—The fact recently touched upon by Horridge, J., that highly respectable witnesses sometimes lie is perhaps more familiar to lawyers than to jurors.

Of all the caustic remarks on the reliability of witnesses, I like best one of the judgments of Maule, J.

"Gentlemen of the jury, if you believe the witnesses for the plaintiff, you will find for the defendant. If you believe the witnesses for the defendant, you will find for the plaintiff. If, like myself, you don't believe any of them, Heaven knows which way you will find. Consider your verdict."

Perhaps the mental attitude of the average witness is best illustrated in the engagingly sophisticated answer of a little girl in an Irish court who was being examined on her knowledge of the nature of an oath.

"What will happen to you if you tell a lie in your evidence?" she was asked.

"I suppose, Sir," she replied, "I would not get my expenses."—S.J., 1930, p. 463.

Citation of Judicial Titles.—We sometimes smile at the mistakes committed by foreigners in their efforts to designate English public men. It may be remembered that Mr. Gladstone, not infrequently, in continental newspapers was transformed into Sir Gladstone or Lord Gladstone, and many other prominent statesmen experienced the like misdescription. But errors of this kind are by no means confined to foreigners; even in the law we have had not a few of them. Some years ago a distinguished counsel appearing in the Court of Appeal referred to a decision of "Lord Justice Field," but was at once corrected by Lord Sterndale, who pointed out that there was a Mr. Justice Field, who afterwards became a peer with the title of Lord Field, but as that Judge was never a member of the Court of Appeal he could not correctly be described as "Lord Justice Field." Further examples of judicial misdescription may be found in the recently published biography of the Earl of Halsbury, an otherwise excellent work. There, Lord Macnaghten—with one or two variations in the text of the spelling—appears in the index as "Lord Justice," a title which was never his, as he was promoted direct to the House of Lords from the Bar. In the same work Lord Lindley is "Lord Justice Lindley" in the index, and it is true that he at one time was correctly so designated, but at the material date he was a Lord of Appeal with the title Lord Lindley. Mistakes of this kind are pardonable in the case of a writer unconnected with the law, and thus unfamiliar with the various judicial titles; they are not so excusable in writers of law books in which similar blunders are occasionally to be found. Even the spelling of the names of the Judges is not invariably orthodox. The late Mr. Justice Channell was once heard to comment on the incorrect spelling of his name, and we observed in an otherwise excellent text book recently issued the precise mis-spelling of which that very learned Judge complained. These may be considered by some people very small matters, but correctitude of citation is considered one of the essential marks of a legal work, and this ought to extend to the titles or names of the Judges whose opinions are quoted.—S.J., 1930, p. 479.

Quare non adhaeret?—What is to be done when an adhesive label refuses to adhere? Under the Copyright Act, 1911, and the Copyright Royalty System (Mechanical Musical Instruments) Regulations, 1912, made thereunder, royalties on gramophone records and similar contrivances are payable by adhesive paper labels (which are receipts for the royalties paid) to be supplied by the owner of the copyrights to the maker of the records on the demand of the latter and tender of the price equal to the amount of the royalty represented thereby, and no record is allowed to be delivered to a purchaser until such a label has been affixed thereto. In Boosey & Co., Ltd. v. Goodson Gramophone Record, Co., Ltd., (1930) 1 Ch. 448, which was described as a friendly action, the facts were that the defendants manufactured gramophone records for the reproduction of musical compositions, the copyright in which belonged to the plaintiffs. At the request of the defendants, and on payment of the proper amount of the royalty, the plaintiffs furnished the defendants with adhesive labels such as they had been accustomed to supply and had proved to be satisfactory. The records manufactured by the defendants, however, were made of celluloid, to which substance, it appeared, the plaintiffs' labels did not take kindly and refused to adhere. In the Court of first instance Mr. Justice Eve decided that the plaintiffs having failed to supply adhesive labels which would adhere to the defendants' records, the latter might be sold without the labels. By way, we suppose, of proving the adhesive quality of the friendliness of the proceedings, the plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeal took a different view of the matter from that adopted by Mr. Justice Eve, and held that, although the labels supplied by the plaintiffs would not adhere to the defendants' contrivances, they were nevertheless adhesive labels and that the defendants would be infringing the plaintiffs' copyright if they sold any of the records in question to which the non-adhering adhesive labels were not adherent. We hope that the defendants will stick to it and take the case to the House of Lords.—S.J., 1930, p. 479.

Breeding Imbeciles with Impunity.—At the Stafford Asizes last week, Mr. Justice McCardie very properly, in our opinion, again called attention to the fact that there are at the present time 400,000 mental defectives in the country, and that “we are breeding imbeciles and idiots every day.” At a later stage of the hearing of the case he added: “I am appalled at the breeding of mental defectives that is going on throughout the country. Unless steps are taken to bring about a greater measure of segregation, or sterilisation, this hideous process of multiplying the mentally unfit will go on unchecked.” Reform in this direction, as in the case of the divorce and betting laws, is undoubtedly long overdue, but no one has apparently the courage to tackle either problem.—S.J., 1930, p. 480.

The Late Sir Binod Mitter.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has sustained a grievous loss by the untimely death of Sir Binod Mitter. Sir Binod was the first Indian lawyer to be appointed under S. 1 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1929, which empowered His Majesty to appoint two persons, either Judges of an Indian High Court or barristers, advocates or vakils of not less than fourteen years’ standing, who had practised in British India. Till the passing of this Act the representation—if we may use this term—of India on the Judicial Committee was far from satisfactory in the sense that those who were skilled in Indian law were very inadequately remunerated. To some extent this has now been remedied, and general satisfaction was expressed when Sir Binod, little more than a year ago, was selected as an eminent Indian jurist to take his seat and assist in the disposal of Indian Appeals. Unhappily, just as his great merits—a consummate knowledge of the various systems of law in India, and a patient and studied judgment—were becoming widely recognised, the “abhorred shears” have come and “slit the thin-spun life”. Eloquent tributes to his memory were paid in the Privy Council this week by Lord Dunedin from the Bench, and by Mr. Upjohn, K.C., in whose chambers Sir Binod was a pupil many years ago, as representing the Bar. As Lord Dunedin well said, Sir Binod was of invaluable assistance to the committee, not only in deciding the particular appeals at the hearing of which he sat, but also in bringing to the knowledge of his English colleagues a knowledge of the exact state of Indian decisions. He will be greatly missed.—S.J., 1930, p. 493.

CONTEMPORARY LEGAL LITERATURE.

It is not infrequently that one finds the Judge remonstrating against the system which constrains him to follow a judicial precedent. Several elements have contributed to that feeling. In India, the Judges often take shelter under the Indian Law Reports Act and refuse to recognise other reports whenever the precedent does not accord with their view. If the accuracy of the report can be questioned, it may be one thing; but to base it on the merest accident of a case not being reported by the Law Reporter of the Government series, is to say the least, to snap the finger at the rule governing precedents. Virtually, it will be introducing the system prevailing in Europe (Continent) where the system of precedent does not ordinarily obtain. Lord Sumner says in Palgrave, Brown & Son, Ltd. v. S.S. Turid, (1922) 1 A.C. 397 at 413, that "even if the case had not been reported at all, it would still have been a decision which when brought to light by any means must be regarded as an authority." As is well put in Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Mir Nazar Ali, (1901) I.L.R. 28 Cal. 289, "A precedent is an authority, as precedent whether it is published in the pages of a Law Report or is kept piled up on the grim shelves of the record room of the Court." An interesting and elaborate survey in the Law Quarterly Review for April and July, 1930, by Mr. T. Ellis Lewis of the growth of the authority of precedents during the Year Books period (1290-1535) shows that at a time when the theory of precedent as now obtains was unknown or only in the embryo, the Bar and the Bench both longed for it. This is a short summary of the articles:—

In the early days during the Norman period judgments were more treated as evidence of custom rather than as judicial precedents. The theory that judicial precedents were recognised by Bracton is based on the fact that in his De Legibus et consuetudinibus Angliæ (c. 1250-1260). Bracton cited some 500 cases and has collected about 2,000 cases in his note book. But the note book was not intended to be cited in Court but only to collect materials for his treatise. In the writer's opinion, Bracton did not regard judicial decisions as binding authorities but merely "as apposite illustrations of the point at issue." He may be said to have laid the foundations of judicial precedent in that he recognised the importance of judicial decisions as a source of law. But he treated them more as persuasive forces to guide judicial discretion and not as binding authorities. The writer refers to the text-writers down to the middle of the 16th century and points out that there is very little citation of cases in them, and even where there is a reference, it is as proving the law and not as binding authority. It may be that from very early times some record was kept of proceedings in Courts of law but no importance was attached to them for the purpose of subsequent cases. The writer refers to the Preface to Plowden Reports, where Plowden says, "Unlike his reports they have not the 'sanction of judgment' and cannot be 'firmly relied upon'." The writer then refers to the following considerations in support of his view that "judicial precedent is a post-Year Book Theory."

(1) The Year Books are mere collections of private notes of cases made in Court by pleaders and apprentices for their own instruction. Some cases are reported differently in different manuscripts and some give contradictory conclusions.

(2) The reports deal largely with the intricate manoeuvres of pleading and the practice of the Court and not with principles of substantive law and many cases turn simply on issues of fact. They served more as a treasure for the mediaeval lawyer providing him with pleas and arguments. The opinions of sergeants and pleaders not engaged in the cases, but who often intervened, all go down in the report and seem to have commanded as much respect as the opinion of the Justices. Even arguments heard out of Court are put down.

(3) The writer picks out some observations of the Judges as supporting his view. Here are some of them.

Bereford, C.J. — "Our judgments are founded, not on precedents, but on reason."

Sharshulle, J. — "No precedent is of such force as that which is right." "Right, reason or justice outweighs all precedents."

Stonor, J. — "No, law is that which is right."

The writer says that in the later Year Books there is hardly any explicit denial of the force of precedent. Even statutes, the writer points out, were interpreted in the light of the Judge's view, at times even to the extent of ignoring them. The writer refers to several annotations of the Year Books during the 16th century and points out that they prove nothing as to the force of precedent in the Year Book period but simply show that the law was usually consistent. Those annotations are anyway important in that they prove that towards the end of the 16th century judicial decisions were acquiring an increasing authority, for on no other grounds can the arduous task undertaken by some Tudor lawyers of incorporating references to previous and later cases in the printed text of the Year Books be explained. Judges were not disposed to be bound by judicial precedents, even their own. They but said "the cases are not alike" or "it is wrong" or "it was never decided," and that put an end to the precedent, for it was not incumbent upon them to say how the cases differed, or why the decision was wrong. These observations apply to Year Books prior to Edward IV, for then citation of cases usually took the form of an appeal to memory. Judges and Counsel gave their recollections of what happened in cases in which they themselves had taken part or which they had heard. The writer says that there are only two cases in the earlier Year Books where Counsel seem to have quoted from some manuscript report which they had with them in Court. But after Edward IV greater care was exercised in citing cases and greater reliance was placed upon them. Even in the earlier Year Books till Henry VI's period, the Judges did pay regard to precedents, but it was out of reverence and such considerations. There are statements here and there which can be quoted in favour of the view that decisions were even then authoritative but there are also several statements where that view was emphatically rejected by the Judges and no inference can therefore be drawn from them that decisions were treated as binding authorities in the modern sense.

The Year Books of Henry VI period differ from those before, in that they gave a fuller account of the arguments, the Judges intervene more frequently and points of law are considered in greater detail. That, the writer says, is due to the fact that the reporters were becoming masters of the art and mainly to the gradual change from oral to written pleadings, a change which began in the middle of the 15th century and became an accomplished fact in the following century. There was yet no marked increase in the cases cited but they were more carefully verified by a detailed examination of the Year Books which were produced in Court.

[We would refer our readers to the discussion of the Year Books by Mr. B. Sitarama Rao in 47 M.L.J. 114 to 118 (Journal) and 49 M.L.J. 152 (Journal).]

There is much justification for the suggestion that the time has arrived when a test case should be taken to the House of Lords on the question of "Landlord's Distress of Hire Purchase Goods." The incidents of a Hire-purchase Agreement have, no doubt, been clarified by the cases in Helby v. Mathews and Lee v. Buller. But the right of a landlord to distrain goods in the possession of his tenant, but under a Hire-purchase Agreement rests on the Distress Amendment Act, 1908, which, while exempting goods of third persons from liability to distraint, expressly declares by S. 4 (1) that "The Act shall not apply to goods comprised in any Hire-purchase Agreement." Mr. R. Proudfoot (Joint author of Jones' and Proudfoot's Notes on Hire-Purchase Law) in two articles contributed to Law Journal for October, 1930, takes up the three cases in (1912) 3 K.B. 225; (1915) 1 K.B. 458 and (1929) 2 K.B. 309 for discussion to show that the time has arrived when the legislature should step in to amend the law in favour of the owners under Hire-Purchase Agreements. The question in all the cases has been whether at the time of the distress, the goods in the possession of the tenant, were comprised in the Hire-purchase Agreement. The result of the three cases the writer summarises as follows:—"It may be said that the general effect of the three cases is that, if after termination of the agreement, resort must still be had to the agreement to vindicate the owner's rights in relation to the hired chattel, then the chattel remains comprised in the Hire-purchase Agreement. If, however, no powers in relation to the chattel remain under the agreement, and the owner is, after termination, left to his remedy at common law, then the chattel ceases to be comprised in the agreement." All the three were cases of furniture hire and provided for the owner entering on the premises and retaking possession. (1912) 3 K.B. 225 further provided that, should the owners retake the said articles by virtue of the terms of the agreement, the hirer shall have the right either (1) to buy the said articles within 28 days, or (2) to resume the hiring on certain conditions. In (1915) 1 K.B. 458 the clause ran thus:—"If the hirer does not duly perform and observe this agreement the same shall ipso facto be determined, and the hirer shall forthwith at his own expense return the said goods to the owners, and the owners shall be entitled to retake possession of the same as being goods wrongfully detained by the hire." The first is a clear case but in the second case, notwithstanding the term that the contract shall ipso facto be determined, the Court of Appeal held that it cannot be said that the goods were not comprised in the agreement as the license in favour of the owner to enter upon and retake possession, and the agreement by the hirer to pay the rent and all expenses incurred in the collection of any arrears thereof, indicated that the agreement was not dead till the possession was taken but on the other hand was alive as there were subsisting rights and obligations under the agreement. In the third case, the clause improved upon the other two and said that on breach the agreement shall "for all purposes absolutely determine,—nor shall either party thereafter have any rights hereunder but such determination shall not discharge any pre-existing liability of the hirer to the owners." It was held that on termination of the agreement by notice, there was no contractual right or obligation subsisting under the agreement, and that the hiring agreement was "by apt words" determined effectively.

The provision appears to be based on something like the reputed ownership theory and directed against a false credit being obtained by a person "from the visible possession of property" to which he is not entitled. S. 4 (1) of the Distress Amendment Act also exempts from the operation of the Act goods under the reputed ownership of the tenant. But when the possession is such as not to involve the inference that they are the property of the tenants, either because of the existence of a trade custom as in (1929) 1 Ch. 134 and 16 M. & W. 282 or otherwise, the doctrine cannot apply. Under the insolvency law a notice demanding possession has itself been held in some cases to be sufficient to get over the reputed ownership (see 47 M. 215; 1 Rang. 153 where English cases are discussed). The writer points out that the clause against Hire-purchase Agreements was put in in the Act of 1908, as then such agreements were looked upon as "deceitful, probably dishonest and certainly immoral." Now that the system has become "notorious," the need for the provision ceases and the later clause in S. 4 (1) excepting "goods in the possession, order or disposition of such tenant by the consent and permission of the true owner, under such circumstances that such tenant is the reputed owner thereof" will be sufficient protection against possible frauds.

In the interest of public health, the legislature has by several statutes laid down that no person shall be or sub-let or allow any person to enter a building in which he knows or has reason to know that a person has been suffering from a dangerous infectious disease until the Health Officer has granted a certificate that such building may be reoccupied. (See 38 and 39 Vict., c. 55, Public Health Act, 1875 (of England), Ss. 128, 129 and Madras City Municipal Act, S. 340) and severe penalties are provided for breach of that rule. All Municipal Acts contain such a provision. The Law Journal for August 9, 1930, contains a note on the contractual liability of the landlord and tenant when a furnished house is let or occupied. Though in the case of a letting of a house there may not be any implied condition that they are reasonably fit for occupation, such an undertaking is implied in the letting of furnished houses, and a breach of it entitles the lessee to repudiate the tenancy and claim damages for any loss he may thereby have incurred. (See Wilson v. Finch Hatton, 2 Ex.D. 336, Smith v. Marrable, (1843) 2 M. & W. 5 and Collins v. Hopkins, (1923) 2 K.B. 617). The note points out that the danger of infection must be real and not merely bred in the imagination. There is no corresponding undertaking by the tenant of a furnished house, that he is a suitable person to occupy them (Humphreys v. Miller, (1917) 2 K.B. 122), and therefore the landlord cannot throw up the contract or even claim damages in the absence of actual deceit and misrepresentation. The note then says that "where infection breaks out among tenants of a furnished house the landlord cannot recover against them any loss which this may entail as regards future lettings. But if on the departure of the infected tenants, the landlord takes steps to have the premises thoroughly cleansed, a duty which is, indeed, imposed upon the outgoing tenants under the Public Health Acts, it seems reasonably clear that he can insist upon any incoming tenants, who are already under agreement, abiding by their contract. There are still many people who would not go in under these circumstances, but if the landlord insists, it will be difficult for them to resist a claim for the full amount of the rent agreed on."

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE INDIAN REGISTRATION ACT, by R. H. Bhalunkar. Second Edition. Price Rs. 3.

This enlarged edition of the Indian Registration Act by the author containing all the information, with adequate notes and comments under each of the various sections, will be found useful by both practitioners and students. There is an earnest attempt to treat the subject in a clear and exhaustive manner and the cases collected, show much discretion and care on the part of the writer. The successive amendments of the Act up to the present time, have been incorporated, and the Introduction gives us a concise though scarcely negligible account of the history of the law of registration in this country.

THE LAW OF TRANSFER IN BRITISH INDIA, by Sir H. S. Gour. Sixth Edition, Three Volumes. Published by Messrs. Butterworth & Co., Ltd. Price Rs. 45.

Since the enactment of the recent amending Acts to the Transfer of Property Act, various commentaries of the amended Act have appeared; and it was naturally to be expected that Sir H. S. Gour would bring out a new edition of his treatise on the subject. Ever since the publication of its first edition Dr. Gour's work has been looked upon as the most exhaustive book on the subject; and succeeding editions have increased the popularity of the work, especially as the well-known commentaries on the Act by Sir Horatio Shephard and Mr. Kenworthy Brown became out of date. While the student may be occasionally embarrassed by the conflicting mass of case-law, the lawyer has always turned to this work as a mine of information on the Act and allied topics. We therefore cordially welcome this edition which is a commentary on the Act as amended. We might perhaps make one observation that as the sections of the original Act would govern the transactions entered into prior to the 1st April, 1930, and they would frequently be coming before the Courts at least for some years to come, the giving of the old and the new sections in parallel columns in the body of the work itself as has been done in some of the commentaries on the Act would not have been without its usefulness. Relegating the altered language of the old Act to the footnotes, as has been adopted by the learned author in the body of his work, would involve some strain on the reader in getting a connected idea of the old sections. We have no doubt that this edition of the work will enjoy the popularity of its preceding ones and find its place among the standard works of reference in an Indian Lawyer's library.

THE LAW RELATING TO INAMS, by K. Raghava Chari, M.A., B.L., Vakil, Cocanada.

The Law Relating to Land Tenures in this country is not generally clearly understood and this book which deals with the problems connected with the Inam tenures is therefore particularly useful. In it, the learned author has dealt comprehensively with the nature of inams and the questions relating to the alienation, resumption, enfranchisement and occupancy rights with respect to them. The book is full of interest and we would draw special attention to the discussion of the question of the right of the Crown in the soil in this country. The decisions on the subject are noticed in their appropriate places and the book does not consist in a mere collection of the points decided in the cases but a treatment to the whole subject in a synthetic form. We would, therefore, recommend the book to students and lawyers alike.

NOTES OF INDIAN CASES.

DAL BAHADUR SINGH v. BIJAI BAHADUR SINGH, L.R.
57 I.A. 14: I.L.R. 52 All. 1: 58 M.L.J. 446 (P.C.).

The question in this case was whether the adoption by a widow was with the authority of her husband. Their Lordships say that "a grave and serious onus rests on any person who seeks to displace the natural succession of property by an act of adoption and that, in such a case, the proof requires strict and almost severe scrutiny, and the longer the time goes back from the date when the power was given to the time when it comes to be examined, the more necessary it is having regard to the fallibility of human memory and the uncertainty of evidence given after the lapse of such time, to see that the evidence is sufficient and strong."

In this case the husband died in 1860. In 1914 the widow purported to exercise the alleged power given by the husband and adopted her brother's grandson and she died in 1915. In those circumstances, the statement by the widow that she had adopted and that she had authority of the husband to make the adoption was held to be not a statement against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the widow and as such was not admissible under section 32, clause (3) of the Indian Evidence Act. Their Lordships explain saying "The principle upon which such statements are regarded as admissible in evidence is that in the ordinary course of affairs a person is not likely to make a statement to his own detriment unless it is true. But this sanction is manifestly wanting in the case of a Hindu widow who, after a life-long enjoyment of her husband's property, desires at the end to pass it on to her own relations and, for this purpose, goes through the form of adopting her brother's grandson, to effectuate which she is bound to allege authority from her husband."

The doubt that crosses one's mind is that even so, it is only a circumstance that goes to the weight of the evidence and not to its admissibility unless the adoption was hedged in with the restriction that she should retain her life estate.

That statement was sought to be made evidence also under section 33 of the Evidence Act as a statement made by a witness in a judicial proceeding. The statement was made in a mutation proceeding where, however, the issue that arose was only as to possession and further the Commissioner had ruled in the case that the reversioner had no right to cross-examine the widow on the alleged authority to adopt, though as a matter of fact she had been cross-examined in effect on the question. Their Lordships hold that to make the statement admissible in evidence, the other side must have had both the right and the opportunity and not merely the opportunity without the right and also that the issues in both judicial proceedings must be substantially the same.

GUDIVADA MANGAMMA v. MADDI MAHALAKSHMAMMA,

This decision sets at rest the conflict in India not only between the various High Courts (see Subramania Aiyar v. Sellammal,¹ *Dalgleish v. Damodar Narain Chowdhry*² and *V. S. T. Thamsundaseen v. S. M. A. R. R. M. Chetty Firm*³, but also between the various Benches of the same High Court (see Raghunathasami Aiyangar v. Gopaul Rao,⁴ *Kesho Prasad Singh v. Shiva Saran Lal*⁵ and *Mahabir Prasad Singh v. Anup Narain Singh*⁶). The effect of the decision is that neither interest accruing after the date of plaint up to the decree nor mesne profits so accruing could be taken into account in estimating the value of the suit for the purposes of Privy Council appeal.

• KAYASTHA COMPANY, LIMITED v. SITA RAM DUBE, I.L.R. 52 All. 11. (F.B.).

We are glad to note that the phantom that was raised by *Sheo Prasad v. Naraini Bai*¹ is effectively laid by this decision. While noticing that case, we pointed out that there is no justification in the language of Art. 182, cl. 5 for importing as an essential condition any bona fide intention of prosecuting the previous application. Bona fides may bring applications which may not otherwise be in accordance with law, within the clause, but absence of bona fides cannot take applications which otherwise satisfy the conditions of the clause out of the clause. In other words, bona fides may assist the decree-holder; the absence of it cannot take away his prima facie rights. Bona fides may be of avail to the decree-holder to give him the benefit of S. 44 of the Act. The question has been elaborately discussed in the various judgments.

KISHAN SARUP v. BRIJRAJ SINGH, I.L.R. 51 A. 932.

RAM SARAN DAS v. BAGHWAN SINGH, I.L.R. 52 A. 71.

On the question of the son's liability for the pre-partition debts of the father after partition the Allahabad High Court seems to be divided against itself. The case first named follows the Madras view, *Subramania Aiyar v. Sabapathy Aiyar*²; on the other hand the second follows the view taken in the earlier case in Gaya Prasad v. Murlidhar,³ viz., that the liability ceases with partition. We think the view taken in the first of these cases is right and in accordance with principle. If the view expressed by Lord Shaw in Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh,⁴ viz., that the liability of the son arose only after death of the father, sale in execution of decrees against father being supported on the basis of the power of the father to sell for antecedent debts, was correct, then of course it followed that with the cessation of that power on partition, the liability of the property allotted to the son at such partition for such debts also ceased. But that view of Lord Shaw has not commanded the support of the Privy Council who have in full Board in *Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad*⁵ reaffirmed the view expressed in the earlier cases of the Privy Council, viz., Girdharas Lall v. Kantoo Lall,⁶ Deen- *dyal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh*⁷ and Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhum Mohun,⁸ that the sons are liable even during the lifetime of the father. With the reaffirming of that view, there would seem to be no justification for holding that the son's liability ceases on partition. But there are various indirect ways in which partition might affect the son's liability, for instance, if a decree has been passed personally against the father and not in his representative capacity, there could no longer be power to execute the decree against the property allotted to the sons though the decree might itself furnish a new cause of action against the sons as held in Periasami v. Seeitharama Chettiar,⁹ provided the decree was passed at a time when the son was joint with the father. Similarly acknowledgments and renewals by the father after partition cannot be availed of by the creditor as against the sons. (Rathna Naidu v. Aiyanaachariar,¹⁰ Peda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatah,¹¹ and Subramania Moopanar v. Subbiah Aiyar.¹² If the partition was with a view to defeat the remedy of the decree-holder, it may not avail to protect the son against the execution but in the absence of fraud, the decree-holder cannot execute the decree against the son, because the power to sell in execution is derived from the father's power to sell in discharge of his debts. (Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhum Mohun.⁸) If the decree is passed against the father in his representative capacity, then, of course, it could be executed against the sons provided that notice is given to the sons in execution. (Kunhi Kannan v. Suppi.¹³) The view taken by the Madras Full Bench assimilates the pious obligation to an ordinary joint family obligation such as under a binding family contract. (Ramachandra Padayachi v. Kondayya Chetty.¹⁴) Mr. Justice Kumaraśwami Sastri suggests that if there should be adequate provision for payment of debts at the partition, then also the son's liability should cease. (Subramania Moopanar v. Subbiah Aiyar.¹²) It is recognised by his Lordship that his view is opposed to that of the Full Bench. It is not a necessarily impossible or illogical view. The liability of the son is not an independent liability. It is a liability ancillary to that of the father. So long as the father is alive the sons can be sued only along with the father and not independently. It may well be held in the circumstances that the liability of the son ceases on his making adequate provision for the payment of the debts although those arrangements miscarry owing to the default of the father or the negligence of the creditor.

MUSSAMMAT JANU v. NARSINGH DAS, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 29.

Although Art. 123 of the Limitation Act is not confined to suits against executors and administrators only as was held in earlier cases (see *Rajah Parthasarathy Appa Rao v. Rajah Venkatadri Appa Rao*¹, affirmed on appeal *Venkatadri Appa Rao v. Parthasarathi Appa Rao*²), it does not follow that every suit by the heir of any person dying intestate for his share will come under that Article. The force of the word "distributive" in Art. 123 cannot be ignored. In the case of a Mahomedan it has been held that, on his death, his co-heirs take the property as tenants-in-common and no person is legally charged with the duty of distributing the estate. In such cases, therefore, Art. 123 has been held inapplicable. (Khadersa Hajee Bappu v. Pathen Veettil Ayissa Ummah.³)

It has been suggested (see *Shirinbai v. Ratanbai*⁴) that the decision of the Privy Council in *Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit*⁵ extends the scope of the applicability of Art. 123. The authority of that decision, however, does not go so far as to overrule impliedly the Full Bench decision of the Madras Court. Nor is there anything in the later Privy Council decision in *Venkatadri Appa Rao v. Parthasarathi Appa Rao*⁶ which affects the aforesaid Full Bench decision. In the case of a suit for a legacy, Art. 123 is certainly applicable and the Privy Council decision cannot be extended to suits for a share of an intestate's estate. A Full Bench of the Allahabad Court has expressly re-affirmed the correctness of the Madras Full Bench decision after an elaborate examination of all the later authorities including the two Privy Council decisions (Rustam Khan v. Mt. Janaki.⁷) The Bombay High Court also holds the Mahomedan co-heirs are not under an obligation to divide the property inter se according to their shares. They can under the law hold and continue to hold it in common till they choose to have a partition. Art. 123 does not penalise them for not enforcing a partition within twelve years of the death of the intestate ancestor, where they have once agreed expressly or impliedly to hold the property as co-owners.

THIRAJ v. THE CROWN, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 55.

The new amendment of Ss. 195 and 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Act of 1923, while abolishing the sanction procedure has made the Court itself prefer a complaint. It provides for a right of first appeal to one higher authority. We agree with the majority view of the learned Judges in this case that an appeal is provided under section 476-B to any person against whom a complaint under section 476 or 476-A has been made and the words "such a complaint" do not limit the right of appeal only to cases where the Court has acted on the application of a party and not suo motu. The narrower interpretation of the dissenting Judge does not seem to be sound. The High Court of Allahabad also has taken the same view in Emperor v. Ram Prasad.¹

MAULU v. THE CROWN, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 115.

As observed by the English Court of Appeal in *R. v. Oliver Taylor*¹ "It has been said over and over again that the mere fact that a man has been convicted many times is not in itself sufficient reason for passing a heavy sentence on him for an offence which is trivial in itself." Notwithstanding section 75 of the Indian Penal Code, a sentence of transportation for life for the offence of stealing Rs. 10-2-6 by picking a pocket in a crowd, is one that the learned Judges could not possibly sustain. The observations in the judgment are a refreshing reminder to the subordinate magistracy to administer the law in this matter not indeed tempered with mercy but with sound commonsense. The elasticity of the provisions of the Penal Code should not be abused. The legislature evidently trusts the Courts to exercise a sound judicial discretion. It is noteworthy that the Criminal Procedure Code explicitly provides that a question of sentence is a question of law even in a trial by Jury (section 418).

NARAYANA SAH v. SANKAR SAH, I.L.R. 53 Mad. 1: 57 M.L.J. 685 (F.B.).

If in the name of some imagined theory of Hindu Law, their Lordships had permitted themselves to answer the reference in a different sense, the result would have been to make the Hindu Law of partition a bundle of absurdities. The so-called theory of Hindu Law is largely a creation of Courts and to make a fetish of it, would be as absurd as inequitable. To illustrate what we say with a concrete example: Let us take it that A and B are two brothers, A having no children and B having a son. If a partition should take place normally between the two branches A would take half and B with his son would take the other half. Now assume that B's son divides himself off from his father and uncle by a unilateral declaration as he is entitled to do under the recent rulings of the Privy Council. If the argument is right he would be entitled to his fourth and the rest unless they declare their intention to be divided simultaneously with him must share the balance equally between them, that is to say the share of the uncle is reduced from half to three-eighths. The communication may be made to the manager so that even without an opportunity being given to him to express his concurrence A's share might be reduced. Are the shares of the members to be dependent upon the accident as to who declares his intention first? What is the principle on which a distinction is to be made between this case and the case of others preferring to continue joint? No exercise of volition is necessary to continue joint—an exercise of volition is necessary only to divide. If nothing is done by them, jointness of status continues as between the other members. Nor is there a status intermediate between one of division in status and of complete division which would preclude the application of the rule during that period. It is not right to say that the Hindu Law did not contemplate partial partition. Partition of a member by relinquishment of his share is referred to by all the writers. Nor are equities ignored at partition. For instance, in allotting a share to the mother, properties which have been presented to her by the father or grandfather are to be taken account of. (Mitakshara, Chaps. I—VII, 2 and Chaps. II—XI, 35.) When partition is sought of property which belonged to the family and was lost but was subsequently recovered by the exertions of a member, he is given a double share in it. These ought to be taken as illustrative.

Further, as pointed out in the judgments under review, recognition of alienation of the shares of co-parceners has made a serious breach in the doctrine. Under the decisions the alienee is entitled to the share as at the date of alienation and any further accretion to the share would go to the benefit of the co-parcener. New births into the family do not affect the alienee. Unauthorised alienations by a co-parcener also introduce occasions for accounting; the properties alienated are debited to the share of the alienor.

Either there is no scope for partial partition under the Hindu Law and all further relationship must be on the footing of re-union or some such rule as that laid down in this case must be recognised. The Courts have not got the right to apply rules which can apply only to normal conditions to the abnormal conditions introduced by partial partition. The rival view is neither in accordance with principle nor with equity but is the result of loose thinking.

BALASUNDARA MUDALIAR v. MAHOMED OOSMAN SAHIB,
I.L.R. 53 M. 29: 57 M.L.J. 154.

Agreement to procure success by prayer might be regarded as either vitiated by impossibility under S. 56 of the Contract Act or as not being proper subject for contract, somewhat like social or moral engagements. The particular conclusion might depend on the temperament of the Judge. Agreement to offer prayer for success is quite another matter. It involves physical labour and so long as offering prayer is not regarded as fraud or chicanery, there does not seem to be any reason why an agreement to remunerate such services should not be enforced. If the fact that the cause is unjust is to vitiate it, many a lawyer must go without remuneration. Success in cases might be lawfully attained without there being any justice in the case. The deity propitiated might well be counted on to see that his intervention does not make the Court deviate from the path of law or justice. The whole trouble comes from thinking that prayer offered to deity in India partakes something of the character of black magic. The doubts of the Chief Justice as to the soundness of the case *Bhagwan Dat Shastri v. Raja Ram*¹ are fully justified.

SUBBAYYA v. ANANDA RAMAYYA, I.L.R. 53 M. 84:
57 M.L.J. 826 (F.B.).

The view taken by the majority in this case is that the marriage expenses of the daughter are equally a charge on the father's share as the share of the sons when the partition takes place during the life-time of the father. After the father dies the sons are liable to marry them. Mitakshara gives for the purpose a 1|4th share to each daughter. That share has no reference to the father's share. In certain contingencies the shares to be so distributed might be more than the father's share which he would have got if he were alive at the partition. Take for instance a case, where there are 6 sons and 9 daughters. The 9 daughters would take 9|60, which is more than the father's share 1|7th. In the case of the maintenance of a deceased co-parcener's widow, the liability of the survivors extends to a 1|3rd of his share or if the property is small to the whole of it. It does not go beyond that share. The same would be the case with the maintenance of the wives of disqualified heirs. Seeing that there is no reference to the father's share in determining the daughter's share, and specially having regard to the fact that in certain contingencies the shares allotted to the daughters might be more than those of the father, one is drawn to the conclusion that it is not a case of the father's moral obligation maturing into a legal obligation on his death. Again one can understand the moral obligation of a man developing into a legal obligation when his self-acquired property descends on another. In the case of joint family property, the surviving co-parcener takes in his own right and there is no scope for the application of the principle. The true principle is that there is the obligation already which when the family is in a joint condition is discharged by the head, but when the head is removed from that position by death or partition, the liability devolves on the next head or pro rata on the persons who take the property as the case may be. It is on this principle the father's debt devolves on the son even during the life-time of the father. The father's position is not like that of an ordinary co-parcener. The ordinary co-parcener's share is not taken by the other co-parceners till his death. In the case of the father, as each son is born, his right is cut down pro tanto and the process may go on till at last it may so happen that his share is insufficient to meet the marriage expenses. One can well visualise the situation if one realises that according to the old theory, self-acquisition stands on the same footing as ancestral property. This is an obligation recognised by the Hindu Law and enforced in many a text by religious and social sanctions.

Payment by one of several mortgagors would have been sufficient to save limitation, if the question depended on S. 20 but S. 21 makes payments by one of the joint contractors ineffective for the purpose. In cases not covered by S. 21, payments by one person may make the others liable in respect of the same obligation though the person making payment is not authorised in that behalf by the others provided he was a person liable to make the payment.

MA YAIT v. THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE, I.L.R. 8 Rang. 8.

By an ordinary settlement, the settlor transferred practically the whole of his property to trustees on trusts as to property comprised in the first three schedules to the settlement to distribute the income in a particular manner and after the youngest of his children attained the age of twenty, to sell the property and distribute the proceeds in equal shares between the children then surviving, the issue of any child who was dead to represent his father's share; and as to property in the fourth schedule, the property was not to be distributed until the death of the youngest child, and it was to be divided then amongst the children living at that date. The eldest son alienated his interest in the corpus before it vested in him and the question for decision was whether it was not the transfer of a mere possibility within the meaning of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. The High Court upheld the alienation on the ground that the interest of the assignor in the corpus was a vested interest, and in that way distinguished the case of a Hindu reversioner to a woman's estate. But the Privy Council definitely reject that ground. They, however, proceed to say that "the contingent interest which the children took . . . was something quite different from a mere possibility of a like nature of an heir-apparent succeeding to the estate, or the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy, and also something quite different from a mere right to sue". In England, their Lordships point out that "it is a well ascertained form of property . . . in respect of which it is quite possible to raise money and to dispose of in any way that the beneficiary chooses." A distinction has been recognised in England between contingent interests and mere expectancies, the former being regarded as a possibility coupled with an interest. (See for a discussion of it Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mallik.¹) This distinction has not so far been definitely adopted in this country in view of the general language of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. Though their Lordships lay down the rule categorically and without any discussion as to whether the policy of the legislation here is not wider (cf. their observations in *Annada Mohan Roy v. Gour Mohan Mullick*²) the pronouncement must be accepted as importing the English rule here.

PANDIT BINDRABAN DINANATH v. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, TO C. T. A. R. A. FIRM, I.L.R. 8 Rang. 187.

In view of the practical unanimity of opinion among the several High Courts to the effect that when an adjudication is annulled under section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the Courts can vest the property, under section 37, in a receiver and continue all the proceedings theretofore pending, the discussion of the vexed question whether under section 43 the Court has no option but to annul an adjudication after the period fixed for discharge has expired becomes largely academic. The point made by the Full Bench in *Palani Goundan v. Official Receiver, Coimbatore*¹ and Jwala Prasad, J., that section 37, clause (2) contemplates an order of annulment being passed and that therefore there cannot be an automatic annulment on the expiry of the period is met by the decision under review. The error underlying the reasoning in *Palani Goundan's case*¹ is the assumption that where the Court has to pass an order, it must also have the power to say 'no' under certain circumstances. When a suit is declared abated, the Court has to pass a formal order dismissing the suit but that does not mean that the Court can refuse to pass that order. The other ground adopted in *Palani Goundan's case*¹, viz., that based on the Privy Council decision in *Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer*², is more difficult to be met. As Curgenvven, J., points out, the Privy Council case was decided when section 148, Civil Procedure Code, had not been enacted and the language to be interpreted in section 549 of the old Civil Procedure Code (now Order 41, Rule 10) was as mandatory as in section 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The discussion in the Rangoon case under review, based on section 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act overlooks this fact that *Badri Narain's case*² did not go on any provision corresponding to section 148, Civil Procedure Code. The Judicial Committee apparently hold that the mandatoriness of the provision is not inconsistent with the power of the Court to extend the period. The other decision in *Ram Krishna Misra, Ex parte*³, which has also been relied on, has been overruled by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in *Gopal Ram v. Magni Ram*⁴. Now that Madras has also fallen in line with the other High Courts, it remains to be seen what view will be taken as a result of these decisions by the Rangoon High Court, when the question next comes before it.

The decisions of the Privy Council in these cases set at rest some points on the question of mesne profits. As early as 1881, it was laid down by the Judicial Committee in *Fakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan v. Official Trustee of Bengal*¹ under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 that where a decree was passed for mesne profits without specifying the period for which it was to be calculated, it was to be understood as meaning for the whole period till possession was delivered to the decreeholder and not merely till the date of suit. The first question in the first case under notice arose with reference to the same point under the Code of 1882 and their Lordships held that the decision would be the same under that Code as well. As the reasons given for the decision in *Fakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan v. Official Trustee of Bengal*¹ hold good even under the Code of 1908, we venture to submit that the decision would be the same even if a decree in those terms passed under the Code of 1908 has to be construed.

The further question that arose in the cases was regarding the calculation of mesne profits where the defendant was not in actual possession, whether it was to be assessed on the basis of the rental or the value of the produce less the necessary charges. This question was by no means clear on the decisions in India as pointed out by the Calcutta High Court in Pramada Nath Roy v. Secretary of State for India.² After the decisions under notice it may be taken as clear that where the defendant has let the properties to tenants and is not himself in actual possession, mesne profits as against him is generally arrived at on the rental basis and not on the basis of the value of the actual produce. It may also be taken as settled by the first decision under notice that a decree for mesne profits against the defendant and his tenants in possession is not one against joint tortfeasors, so as to entitle the decreeholder to recover the value of the actual produce against either at his option.

There is also one other matter which even though it appears from the definition of "mesne profits" in the explanation of section 211 of the Code of 1882 and section 2 (12) of the Code of 1908, is sometimes overlooked. It has sometimes been laid down that what the plaintiff lost is the basis of the assessment of the mesne profits and not what the defendant actually got or could with reasonable diligence have got, so that if the plaintiff had simply let the lands himself to tenants when he was originally in possession, he could recover only on the rental value. Their Lordships have pointed out in these cases that the proper basis is what the defendant got or could have got and not what the plaintiff was getting prior to his dispossession. It is, we believe, on this view that their Lordships overruled the contention in the first case that as the plaintiff himself was a Zemindar and would only have let the lands to tenants and not have cultivated them himself, he was entitled to recover mesne profits only on the basis of the rental value.

In this case, a suit for the possession of immoveable properties and mesne profits was brought before the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 came into force and a decree for possession and a preliminary decree for mesne profits was passed after the coming into force of the Code of 1908; and the learned Judges have held that in such a case, the further proceedings are governed by the new Code and the suit must be held to be still pending to be disposed of by a final decree, after the ascertainment of the mesne profits in the course of the suit itself. In coming to this conclusion, the learned Judges have distinguished the decision of the Privy Council in *Kedarnath Goenka v. Anant Prasad Singh*¹ on the ground that in that case, though the suit was brought under the old Code, the first Court passed its decree for possession and directed the ascertainment of mesne profits when the old Code itself was in force. But what is important in the Privy Council case is that the decree of the Appellate Court which in law superseded that of the first Court was passed after the coming into force of the Code of 1908. If, therefore, the true view is that the decree of the Appellate Court supersedes that of the Lower Court even in cases of affirming decrees, cf. Kristnama Chariar v. Mangammal,² Venkayya v. Sathiraju,³ and Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh,⁴ it may be open to question whether there is much force in the distinction drawn by the learned Judges.

Even assuming that the learned Judges were right in holding that the new Code applied to the proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits, it is somewhat strange that it was assumed before them that when after the passing of the preliminary decree for mesne profits a party to the suit dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record within 90 days, the suit would abate as regards the deceased person. Whatever might have been the understanding of the law before the decision of the Privy Council in Lachmi Narain Marwari v. Balmakund Marwari,⁵ there is ample authority after that decision, for the view that after the passing of a preliminary decree, there can be no question of any abatement of the suit under Order 22 of the Civil Procedure Code. Reference may be made in this connection to the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in *Perumal Pillai v. Perumal Chetty*⁶ which overruled the decisions in *Subbarayudu v. Ramadasu*⁷ and *Natesa Pillay v. Kannammal*⁸, which held that a suit abated if the legal representatives were not brought on the record within the time limited, though the death of a party took place after the preliminary decree. That this is the view even in Calcutta, seems to be clear from Nazir Ahmad v. Tamijaddi,⁹ See also Rahim Bakhsh v. Walaiti Ram,¹⁰ *Peetha Swamigadu v. Ramachandrayya*¹¹ and Debinath v. Bissesar Das.¹² For the above reasons, we venture to doubt whether the concession made by the appellant's counsel was right and the suit should not in any view have been held not to have abated owing to the fact the legal representatives of the deceased parties were not brought on the record within ninety days after their death.

The plaintiff, in this case, sued for a declaration that two gift deeds executed by his father in favour of his other sons would not affect him as the properties gifted were set apart in the partition for the maintenance of the father and his wives during their life-time. The suit was brought in the life-time of the father himself but after six years of the gift deeds and the learned Judges held that the suit was barred under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and that it was not governed by section 23 or Art. 127 or 144 of the Act.¹ It can hardly be doubted that the decision on all the points is fully supported by authority, although, we believe, that it will still be open to the plaintiff to sue for the possession of his share of the properties gifted after the lives of the maintenance holders and Art. 126 of the Limitation Act will not stand in his way. According to the plaintiff the father and his wives had at best only a life-interest for their maintenance and any alienation beyond their lives would be void and not require to be set aside.

Dealing with the contention under Art. 127, the learned Judges observe that the article has only to do with the properties if they are joint family properties at the time of suit and not with properties which once were joint family properties but afterwards ceased to be so by virtue of a partition in the family. This proposition is supported by the decisions referred to by the learned Judges. We do not, however, understand the learned Judges to have laid down that if some of the joint family properties are subjected to a partition and some items are left undivided in the possession of maintenance holders, the members of the family must be deemed as a matter of law to have become divided even in respect of the latter properties. Although the presumption of the Hindu law is that a partition is complete both as regards the members of the family and the properties, see *Anandibai v. Hari Suba Pai*² and *Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyaswamy Aiyar*³, it is rebuttable and it is possible that though with regard to some of the properties, the joint family status may be disrupted, it may still remain with regard to the others. This was clearly brought out in the recent decision of the Privy Council in *Konammal v. Annadana*³, where their Lordships held that though the members divided the partible properties, the impartible estate continued to be joint family property with its incident of survivorship.

THE CROWN v. SUKH DEV, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 220.

An admittedly novel application by the Crown to force a counsel on an accused without his consent and against his wishes, so as to represent him during his absence from Court was rightly rejected by their Lordships as opposed to law. The difficulties in the way of the Crown in proceeding with a trial where one of the accused is unable to be present owing to illness caused by a voluntary act, such as a hunger-strike, are no doubt unprovided for by the Code of Criminal Procedure as it exists but that is no reason why the power applied for by the application should be upheld as existing in the Courts. As pointed out by Shadi Lal, J., even S. 561-A which provides for the inherent jurisdiction of the Court cannot be invoked for the purpose of doing an act which would conflict with any of the provisions of the law or the general principles of criminal jurisprudence. Nor is there anything in the English practice to justify such a procedure. The decision in *Reg v. Yscuado*¹ is indeed an authority to the contrary. It may be re-called that a bill was introduced to provide for such a situation but so far the Legislature has not been persuaded to accept it. The decision is noteworthy as one more landmark, in the judiciary vigilantly resisting the claims of the executive to encroach upon the liberty of the subject except under due process of law.

KOI SAHU v. ATUL KRISHNA GHOSH, I.L.R. 9 Pat. 118.

The point discussed in this case is one that arises fairly often, viz., whether a puisne mortgagee or a purchaser of the equity of redemption impleaded as a party in a mortgagee's action is bound to set up any mortgage right of his in priority to the plaintiff's mortgage, on pain of being barred if he fails to do so by the rule of constructive res judicata from enforcing his rights in a later action. The two Privy Council decisions that lay down the rule on this question are those in *Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh*² and in Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein.³ It is only when the pleadings properly raise the question of the priority of the respective mortgages that a party properly added as having a right to redeem the plaintiff mortgage is called upon to set up a paramount claim of a superior right. Where the plaintiff does not clearly and explicitly deny the prior rights of the defendant, it is not incumbent on the latter to put in issue his rights as prior mortgagee.

While it is true that the application of the rule of res judicata by the Courts in India should not be influenced by technical considerations of form but by matter of substance (*Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prasad*⁴ and *Kalipada De v. Dwijapada Das*⁵) it must be remembered that this is subject to the safeguard that the liberal application of the rule is only to be "within the limits allowed by law." In matters of constructive res judicata under Explanation IV to S. 11, Civil Procedure Code, it is for the party who relies on it to prove strictly the necessary elements for the application of the rule. The question raised in the judgment under notice is discussed even more fully and clearly in a later judgment of the Patna Court itself in Sadu Behera v. Dibakar Tarai.⁶ Das, J., after discussing the question both on principle and authority has formulated the rules in a series of propositions which may be taken as setting out concisely the general effect of the authorities on the point.

KING-EMPEROR v. RAM TAHAL SINGH, I.L.R. 9 Pat. 169.

The construction of the rule that found favour with the Court in this case is not the only one that is possible. There is very much to be said in favour of the opposite view. A licensed motor vehicle which the rules prohibit from carrying more than four passengers was allowed to carry five friends of the owner gratuitously and not for hire in the public highway. The judgment holds that an offence has been committed inasmuch as the restriction was held to be operative not only when the vehicle is actually plying for hire but also during the entire period for which the license was granted. In other words it was held that it was not open to the owner of the motor vehicle during the time for which the permit was granted to free that vehicle from the conditions of the permit. Reliance was placed upon the decision in Hawkins v. Edwards,⁷ but the case is not exactly similar and it may be permissible to doubt the correctness of that decision itself. It is difficult to see why the owner should be deprived of the use of his vehicle on other occasions when it is not plying for hire like any other owner unless the language of the rule is clear. The recent decision of the Bombay Court in *Ganesh Ramchandra Rajwade v. Emperor*⁸ supports this view.

* FIRM OF MOHAN LAL HARDEO DAS v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR AND ORISSA, I.L.R. 9 Pat. 172.

An application under S. 66, cl. (2) of the Income-tax Act has to be made within one month of "the passing of an order" under S. 31 or 32 of the Act. It was held in this decision that the application should be made within thirty days of the actual date of the recording of the order by the officer irrespective of the question whether the order was pronounced after notice to the parties or when it was communicated if no date was fixed for the passing of the order. We think the conclusion is not correct. There is no discussion of the authorities bearing on the question in the judgment under notice but it is said the language is plain and the literal meaning should be given to the actual language without any reference to question of hardship. The attention of the learned Judges, it would appear, has not been drawn to decisions of other Courts on analogous provisions of other Acts as to when an order is "made" or "passed." It has been held in Madras and Bombay that there can be no valid order unless it is made after notice to the parties affected by it or it is communicated to them in the absence of such notice. As observed by Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao in a recent decision in *Swaminatha v. Lakshmanan Chettiar*¹ the very word "order" by necessary implication, means in law that the party affected has had reasonable notice of it. The same principles had been laid in earlier cases to none of which reference is made in the judgment: Annamalai Chietti v. Cloete,² Seshama v. Sankara,³ *Secretary of State for India in Council v. Gopisetti Narayanaswami Naidu*⁴ and Abdul Ali v. Mirja Khan.⁵ There is a full discussion of the question in *Swaminatha v. Lakshmanan Chettiar*¹ referred to above. Where no notice of the day fixed for making the order is given to the parties, the order can be deemed to be made only when it is communicated to the parties affected by it or, if they prevented its communication to them wilfully or otherwise, when it would have been communicated to them in the usual course.

The second question raised and decided in this case is whether the time taken for obtaining copies of an order under S. 66, cl. (2), refusing to make a reference to the High Court can be excluded in calculating the period of six months within which the application to the High Court should be made under S. 66;

1. (1929) I.L.R. 53 M. 491.

2. (1883) I.L.R. 6 M. 189.

3. (1888) I.L.R. 12 M. 1.

4. (1910) I.L.R. 34 M. 151.

5. (1903) I.L.R. 28 B. 8.

cl. (3). The learned Judges hold that S. 12 of the Limitation Act will, by virtue of the amended S. 29 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), apply to such applications and the time can be excluded. The difficulty, however, consists in applying the language of S. 12, cl. (2) as it applies only to cases of appeals, applications for leave to appeal and applications for review. The judgment under notice, while appreciating the difficulty, proceeds to hold that S. 29 should be liberally construed and their Lordships hold that the time taken in obtaining copies can be deducted. This conclusion, however, does not seem to be correct as there is no warrant in enlarging the scope of S. 12 to cases which do not come within its ambit. Nor is there any real hardship as the period of six months provided for in S. 66, cl. (3) is sufficiently long to enable the affected party to obtain all the necessary papers to satisfy himself as to the necessity of an application. The reference in S. 29 of the Limitation Act to applications under special or local law does not justify the inference drawn by the Court that S. 12 was intended to be applicable to all cases of applications under special or local law. Applications are mentioned in S. 29 merely because some of the sections of the Limitation Act which are made applicable other than S. 12 itself, are made to apply and also because some kinds of applications also can get the benefit of the deduction of time allowed by S. 12 of the Act.

NIRMAN BAHADUR v. FATEH BAHADUR, I.L.R. 52 All. 178.

The judgment of Mr. Justice Mukerji in this case would seem to go too far in saying that because the compromise with the widow proceeded on the footing that the deceased husband was undivided with the rest, the compromise must necessarily not be binding on the reversioner because then ex concessio, there is no widow's estate and no reversioner. If the compromise, for instance, simply recorded that the husband died undivided, and the widow is given maintenance, then obviously, the reversionary estate would get nothing by the compromise and the compromise would fail for that reason. It wipes out the reversionary estate for no consideration whatever. Then it might rightly be said that the reversionary estate is completely extinguished. Cf. *Anrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh*¹. The same would be the case if the widow got something absolutely. One condition laid down by the Privy Council in *Ramsumran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari*² is that the compromise must be for the benefit of the estate and not merely for the personal advantage of the limited owner. Their Lordships' observations in the same case with reference to *Inrit Kunwar v. Roop Narain Singh*³ have a bearing on this question. Their Lordships say "in a dispute between a person claiming to be an adopted son of the previous owner and the widow and her daughters who would have titles after her, the widow gave up her daughters' rights in consideration of her own remaining practically unimpaired. Such a compromise could obviously not stand; indeed it is not a compromise at all." But the estate of the husband might consist of this property and other property his self-acquisition. The litigation might be disastrous to her other estate. She might find the compromise really beneficial to her other estate, that is to say, including the reversionary estate. In certain circumstances, exonerating the estate from liability from costs in itself might be a benefit conferred on the estate sufficient to justify the compromise. If the compromise proceeds as it should proceed, if it is a true compromise "on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties," the agreement acknowledging and defining what that title is, the compromise cannot be characterised as wiping out the reversionary estate merely because it acknowledges the title of the members of the family in a portion of the subject-matter of the litigation on the assumption that the family is undivided. The whole question is, we should think, 'Did she represent the estate or did she merely act for her own advantage?' What she got as a result of the compromise and for whom is a very important factor in the proper determination of this question. What title she acknowledged in the other side might have a material bearing on this question. But if she acted on behalf of the estate and got some benefit for it—what title exactly she acknowledged in the other side would not seem to be material. A further question that arose in the case was one of limitation. More than six years had elapsed from the date of the compromise. The suit was by the daughter and daughter's son. The daughter's suit was apparently barred; the question was whether the daughter's son's would be barred. It is difficult to appreciate the distinction on principle between a case like the present and a case of alienation. No doubt Art. 125 starts limitation from the date of alienation, while Art. 120 makes it start on the accruing of the cause of action. But the ratio of the Full Bench decisions in *Varamma v. Gopaladasayya*⁴ and *Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pargash Ojha*⁵ on Art. 125 is that there is only one cause of action for the whole body and the action brought is a representative action. That principle is equally applicable to suits brought to declare compromise decrees not binding.

MUHAMMAD SHAFI v. MUHAMMAD SAID, I.L.R. 52 All. 248.

The statement of the rule as to estoppel in this case may be correct enough with reference to the facts of the case but its accuracy may be doubted if applied to all cases coming within section 115. That section, it must be borne in mind, covers a number of situations, as the section itself indicates, five of them:

- (1) that caused by declaration,
- (2) that caused by act,
- (3) that caused by omission,
- (4) that causing a belief that a thing is true, and
- (5) that permitting a belief that a thing is true.

4. (1918) I.L.R. 41 M. 659: 35 M.L.J. 57 (F.B.).

• A feature common to all estoppel is that the other person must have acted upon the belief. If a person knows the truth, it is of course impossible to say, whatever the circumstances under which the estoppel is claimed to arise, that he acted upon the belief of the truth of the representation (*Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose*¹).

But the proposition stated in the case is that "the party relying must show that it was not reasonably possible for him to know the true state of affairs by pursuing inquiries reasonably and with diligence. Where truth is accessible to a party the plea of estoppel upon representation fails." That is far wider. In *Carr v. London and North Western Railway Company*² Brett, J., as he then was, states the rule as four different propositions.

(I) If a man by his words or conduct wilfully endeavours to cause another to believe in a certain state of things which the first knows to be false and if the second believes in such state of things and acts upon his belief he who knowingly made the false statement is estopped from avowing afterwards that such a state of things.

(II) If a person either in express terms or by conduct makes a representation to another of the existence of a certain state of facts which he intends to be acted upon in a certain way and it be acted upon in that way in the belief of the existence of such a state of facts to the damage of him who so believes and acts the just is estopped from denying the existence of such a state of facts.

(III) If a man, whatever his real meaning may be, so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take his conduct to mean a certain representation of facts and that it was a true representation and that the latter has intended to act upon it in a particular way and he with such belief does act in that way to his damage the first is estopped from denying that the facts were as represented.

(IV) If in the transaction itself which is in dispute, one has led another into the belief of a certain state of facts by conduct of culpable negligence calculated to have that result and such culpable negligence has been the proximate cause of leading and has led the other to act by mistake upon such belief, to his prejudice the second cannot be heard afterwards, as against the first, to show that the state of facts referred to did not exist. As regards the third of the propositions, in the particular case, his Lordship held that the plaintiff's servants could not be taken to have been misled as they failed to act with reasonable care and attention. The meaning of that is if even on the representations made, any man acting reasonably would not have acted in the particular manner, there is no estoppel. The fact that the plaintiff acted is not sufficient. The representation must be such that a man acting with reasonable care would have so acted. That does not go anything near the proposition as stated. As regards the last case, the very reference to negligence as proximate cause ("real" as some other case would call it) leads to the further inference—that where the particular result would not have followed if the plaintiff had acted with due diligence—the negligence of the defendant cannot be said to be the proximate cause and the plaintiff must fail. As regards the law of contract, the rule laid down by the Contract Act in the case of fraud and misrepresentation is—that if the particular representation did not cause the consent, the contract is good notwithstanding. In the case of fraudulent misrepresentation, if the consent was caused by it the contract is vitiated. If, on the other hand, the consent is caused only by innocent misrepresentation or by silence amounting to fraud under section 17, then if the other party had the means of discovering the truth with ordinary diligence the contract is not affected. If that principle is to be applied to estoppel, in the first of the cases referred to by Mr. Justice Brett, means of discovery of truth with reasonable diligence is no defence, while in the second case, it would be. In this connection, it may be noticed that in one of the cases really coming under estoppel, vis., section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, the statute makes express provision that the transferee must have taken "reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer and also acted in good faith." In connection with section 43, Transfer of Property Act, which is another statutory application of the rule of estoppel enunciated in section 115, Evidence Act, also it has been held that the transferee should allege and prove that he took the transfer believing in good faith and after one enquiry though the authorities cited do not go so far. (*Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Salub.*³)

The ordinary rule as to misrepresentation is thus stated by Baggallay, L.J., in *Redgrave v. Hurd*⁴. "The person who has made the misrepresentation cannot be heard to say to the party to whom he has made that representation, 'You chose to believe me when you might have doubted me, and gone further.' The representation once made relieves the party from an investigation, even if opportunity is afforded. I do not mean to say that there may not be certain circumstances of suspicion, which might put a person upon enquiry, and make it his duty to inquire, but under ordinary circumstances, the mere fact that he does not avail himself of the opportunity of testing the accuracy of the representation made to him will not enable the opposing party to succeed on that ground." These observations were made with reference to false misrepresentation in connection with a contract which was said to vitiate the contract. But there is no reason why a different rule should apply to estoppels. As between fraudulent misrepresentation and innocent misrepresentation, this difference there is as noted by Kay, L.J., in *Low v. Bouverie*⁵. "If there was fraud, and the statement was intended to mislead, its ambiguity would not be a defence; but where no fraud is alleged, it is essential to show that the statement was of such a nature that it would have misled any reasonable man, and that the plaintiff was in fact misled by it."

The authorities do not seem to justify the broad statement extracted above; the failure to inquire only in certain circumstances would prevent the estoppel from arising. In the case itself, the admission of title was equivocal and uncertain, and the various documents of which the person relying upon estoppel had notice gave varying descriptions which must have put him upon notice and failure to inquire was legitimately taken as leading to the inference that he did not act upon it.

EMPEROR v. KANWER SEN, I.L.R. 52 A. 263 (F.B.).

The cases where costs have been allowed against the Crown were thus classified by their Lordships in *Johnson v. The King*⁶.

(1) Where the Crown is treated as an ordinary litigant under the authority of local statutes as is generally the case in self-governing Colonies.

4. (1881) 20 Ch. D. 1 at 23.

5. (1891) 3 Ch. 82 at 113.

6. (1904) A.C. 817.

(2) Where the question arose under a petition of right or some proceedings analogous to a petition of right.

(3) Exceptional cases where justice seemed to require that the Crown should pay costs or where the Crown was not unwilling to be treated as a litigant.

Their Lordships finally laid down the rule that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs unless the case is governed by a local statute or there are exceptional circumstances justifying a departure from the ordinary rule. As the subject of costs is provided in the Criminal Procedure Code, there is no scope for resort to the reserve of power indicated in the last few words. (See *Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Narayana Mudaliar*¹.) The only question is whether section 526 provides for payment of costs to the Crown. It was obviously intended for the purpose and the only question is whether the language is apt for the purpose. The question argued was whether the Local Government is a person opposing the application. The section does not speak at all of the Local Government but only of the Public Prosecutor and costs apparently are to be directed to be paid to the Public Prosecutor. Unless the Court directs notice to the Local Government it is difficult to see where the Local Government as such comes in. The question is considered and the Local Government is held to be a person within the meaning of section 526.

59 M.L.J. 289 (P.C.).

The judgment is very meagre. It affirms the decision of the Madras High Court in Arunachallam Chettiar v. Mangalam.¹ In it, their Lordships approve of the decisions in Madras that have held that a custom exempting the tenant from liability from rent when he leaves the land fallow is provable and is not inconsistent with section 4 of the Madras Estates Land Act. Their Lordships had not to consider the exact scope of this custom but they do not seem to see any objection to a custom excusing the tenant from payment even though the tenant does not choose to cultivate out of mere caprice or negligence. That question has been the subject of numerous decisions here. Their Lordships had not to consider them.

Their Lordships also approve of the decision of the High Court that if the tenant cultivates wet land with dry crops when there is sufficient water for wet crops, he is liable for wet sarasari, but if he does so for want of water, then he is not liable for wet sarasari, but only for dry rates. Whether it is waram of the dry crop or the cash dry rate, for which he is liable, their Lordships do not decide for want of materials. The landlord is not entitled, their Lordships also hold to have experimental harvesting, that is to say, to harvest a portion himself and charge the tenant for the whole on the basis of the harvest of the portion.

NARAYANASWAMI AIYAR v. RAMA AIYAR, I.L.R. 53 M. 692 (P.C.).

In this case their Lordships affirm the judgment of the Madras High Court in Rama Aiyar v. Narayanaswami Aiyar,² but on the short ground that there cannot be a valid surrender by a widow in favour of the nearest male reversioners (here the daughter's sons) without the consent of the intermediate female reversioner (the daughter). Their Lordships leave the question whether the consent of the daughters would have validated the surrender open.

: 502 GANESHI LAL v. CHARAN SINGH, L.R. 57 I.A. 189: I.L.R. 52 All. 358: 59 M.L.J. 177 (P.C.) 28 J.L.M. 22

Here the question was as to the right of contribution under S. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. There were two sets of properties K and M, both under mortgage. K was sold to S reserving a portion of the purchase money for the discharge of the mortgage. Property M was subsequently sold in execution of a decree subject to the mortgage and purchased by A. Property K was sold in execution of another decree and purchased by B subject again to the mortgage and the purchaser subsequently transferred his interest to S. S then paid the mortgage and brought a suit for contribution against A. A contended that as plaintiff was bound under his contract to pay up the mortgage he could not claim contribution. Their Lordships held agreeing with the High Court that S. 82 applied and the defendant was not party to the contract and he being a purchaser subject to the mortgage the benefit of the contract had not also passed to him in law or in equity. Their Lordships do not consider in what cases the benefit of the contract would in the absence of a specific assignment of the right, pass to the subsequent purchaser, whether for instance if he purchased free of incumbrances it would pass.

MT. NAWASI BEGAM v. MT. DILAFROZ BEGAM, L.R. 57 I.A. 181: I.L.R. 52 All. 272: 59 M.L.J. 262 (P.C.).

The plaintiff's predecessor-in-title had sued as the heir of a deceased Muhammadan for his share of the properties and had got a decree first subject to payment of the defendant's dower, but having failed to make the payment, did not recover possession but now sued to recover the share unconditionally on the ground that the widow had been fully paid up out of the usufruct. The suit had been made possible by Maina Bibi v. Chaudhri Zakil Ahmad,¹ where in similar circumstances the suit was held not barred by res judicata and maintainable. The point in this case was the further point whether the widow could set up a claim to interest which she did not set up in the previous litigation. Their Lordships held agreeing with the High Court that the claim might and ought to have been set up in the previous suit and was consequently barred. Similar questions have arisen in connection with mortgage suits when the view prevailed, that a second suit for redemption lay as to the binding nature of the conclusions of the previous suit as to the terms on which redemption could be had and have been similarly decided. The right on which the defendant held, and the extent of such right having been already determined, provided a second suit lay, it was inevitable that the Court should hold that the conclusion should be binding in the subsequent suit. The previous suit had been decreed and not dismissed so that there was no impediment to the Court holding the conclusion res judicata. In Mt. Maina Bibi v. Chaudhri Vakil Ahmad,¹ the previous suit had been dismissed but the dismissal was on the ground of non-compliance with the conditions imposed by the decree, viz., payment of the amount found due within six months. Even so their Lordships held that the conclusion in the previous suit as to the precise nature of the defendant's holding and her rights in connection with it were res judicata.

SUBBU CHETTY v. ARUNACHALAM CHETTIAR, I.L.R. 53 M. 270: 58 M.L.J. 420 (F.B.).

This is a very remarkable illustration of how some obiter of the Privy Council becomes the starting point for a whole mass of case-law in reversal of the previous consensus of authority which on a fuller examination or in the light of the later rulings of that august body itself is found to be not justified. One cannot help very much wishing that Courts resisted the temptation as the Bombay High Court usually does of giving effect to such obiter. Such obiter of Lord Macnaughton in the course of the hearing in Khvaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begam,² led Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mr. Justice Mookherjee in *Debnarayan Dutt v. Chumilal Ghose*³ to take a liberal view as to the right of strangers to the contract to sue to enforce it on the ground that it was for their benefit and thereafter there was a perfect tangle of case-law some in favour and some against that position. The whole question was re-examined in this case and the law has been put on the footing on which it was before the new current started. It is laid down in this case that as a rule a stranger to a contract cannot sue except (i) where the promisee is a trustee for the plaintiff, (ii) where there is a charge in favour of the plaintiff, (iii) where the contract is a term in a marriage settlement or a family arrangement, and (iv) or lastly where the promisee enters into relations with the third party or is estopped from denying his right.

SAHU RADHAKRISHNA v. TEJ SAROOP, I.L.R. 52 All. 363 (F.B.).

This case is yet another illustration of what we have remarked when dealing with *Subbu Chetty v. Arunachalam Chettiar*¹. A remark of the Privy Council in *Ganesh Lal Pandit v. Khetramohan Mahapatra*² has necessitated two references to the Full Bench one in Madras, *Ratnasabapathy Chettiar v. Devasigamony Pillai*³, another in Allahabad, the case under review.

It is held in both these cases that the Article of Limitation applicable to a suit to enforce the personal covenant in a registered mortgage is the six years' rule Art. 116 and not the three years' rule.

... GOPICHAND v. THE CROWN, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 460.

R. Krishnasawmy Aiyangar, Advocate, Cuddalore, writes:—

The decision in *Gopichand v. The Crown*¹ is one of considerable importance to the legal profession. Their Lordships clearly lay down for the guidance of the practitioners and the Courts how the provisions of S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and S. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act have to be applied when circumstances warranting their application crop up during enquiry or trial before Courts. I have come across several instances where the rule is not correctly observed by Judges and lawyers. The case on hand is a flagrant instance of the kind.

The Code provides that statements made by a witness before the investigating officer can be used for the purpose of contradicting him in the manner provided by S. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act. If it is intended to contradict him by the writing his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be so used.

After getting a particular answer, ask the witness first whether he made such and such statement before the police officer. If he says, yes, good. If he denies or states that he does not remember, put to the witness the relevant portion of the record which is alleged to be contrary to his statement in Court and thus give him an opportunity to reconcile the same, if he can. It is only then that the record of the previous statement becomes admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness and can then be proved in any manner permitted by law.

The policy of the law thus enumerated can best subserve the intention in practice if the investigating officer is examined last and not as the first witness as is not unoften done by prosecutors. The opportunity of proving specific previous statements denied by the witness is lost unless the Court permits the officer to be recalled. Of course, if the officer is not called by the prosecution, the only remedy is to get him called as a Court witness or summon him for the defence, either of which causes will considerably handicap the defence.

Failure of justice will be avoided if two things are accomplished: (1) Strict adherence to the provisions of the two sections mentioned above by putting questions in a suitable form and marking the portions as exhibits. (2) The Crown examining the investigating officer as the last witness to enable the policy of the law to be worked out.

[In the above case, the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined by the counsel for the accused as to the statements made by them in writing before the Head Constable during the investigation and also before the committing magistrate. To some questions the witnesses stated either that they did not make the statements or that they did not remember having made them. The cross-examiner left the witnesses at that without putting to them the specific portions of the statements by which he intended to contradict them but instead put to the investigating officer, when he appeared as a witness, the question whether those statements were made by the witnesses. The case under notice points out that under S. 145 of the Evidence Act, the witness's attention must be specifically drawn to the alleged contradiction before it can be used against him and that S. 155, cl. (3) does not make the proof through the investigating officer sufficient to let it in for the purpose of contradiction.—Ed.]

J. M. CASEY v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, I.L.R. 9 Pat. 185.

The facts of the case were peculiar and their Lordships rightly held that the income was "agricultural income" as defined by S. (2) (1) (b) of the Income-tax Act and hence exempt from tax. The mere use of machinery does not by itself suffice to convert every process employed as an industrial process. Even for purposes of agriculture and as incident to agricultural processes, machinery may have use and scope for operation. The decision in *Killing Valley Tea Company, Ltd. v. Secretary of State for India in Council*¹ was rightly distinguished on the findings of fact.

ATUL KRISHNA GHOSH v. BRINDABAN NAIK, I.L.R. 9 Pat. 306.

The soundness of this decision is open to doubt. A previous order directing execution to proceed based upon an express or implied adjudication that the execution petition is not barred by limitation is none the less binding on the parties as res judicata whether in a later and fresh execution petition or in later stages of the same execution petition still pending. The distinction sought to be drawn as to the order being res judicata only in a new petition subsequently filed and not in the course of the same petition in later proceedings is unsound and really against authority. The decision in *Mungul Pershad v. Grija Kant Lahiri*² and *Rajah of Ramnad v. Velusami Thevar*³ are direct authorities and cannot be distinguished merely on the ground that the question of res judicata arose only later on in a new proceeding. In *Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari*⁴ it is pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock that "the binding force of such a judgment (or order) does not depend upon S. 13 of Act X of 1877 but upon general principle of law." In fact, the facts in the case show that it was in a later stage of the same execution proceeding that their Lordships hold the previous order was res judicata. Their Lordships point out at page 275 that the application for execution upon which the previous order was pronounced was not dismissed or finally disposed off. Any doubt on this point is set at rest by the principle of the decision of the Privy Council in *Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal*⁵. No reference is made in this judgment under review to either of the two Privy Council decisions. The earlier decision of the Patna Court in *Maharajah Kisho Prasad Singh Bahadur v. Harbans Lal*⁶ was decided before the last Privy Council decision referred to. The decision in the case leads to an obvious anomaly for which there is no justification either in principle or authority.

MEHRBAN KHAN v. MAKHNA, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 251: 58 M.L.J. 714 (P.C.).

Provisions in a mortgage-deed which are a clog on the equity of redemption are totally void not only against the mortgagor alone but also against assigns from him. They are, as pointed out by Lord Tomlin, provisions which, when forming part of the actual mortgage contract, have under the general law no validity at all. The decisions in Rahmat Ali v. Shadi

*Ram*⁷ and *Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand*⁸ are impliedly overruled as being opposed to principle. The present decision is a direct authority of the highest Court that even against assignments such provisions have no more binding force than they have against the mortgagor personally.

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, DELHI v. MIST. CHAMBELI, I.L.R. 11 Lah. 276.

Permission was granted by a Municipality to the construction of a building but nevertheless subject to certain conditions which were tacked on. It was held that the conditions were ultra vires, as no rules had been made as contemplated by the Act. In such a case the conditions were held to be not binding and they were allowed to be disregarded as non-existing and the permission granted was treated as an absolute permission. The learned Judges observe that the municipality can either grant or refuse permission absolutely but cannot add conditions which are not authorised, and that such a conditional permission must be regarded as an absolute permission altogether freed from the invalid conditions. It is a nice question as to whether such a conditional permission should be treated as a refusal except on the conditions being observed or as a permission tried to be fettered by illegal conditions. In the particular case the order was construed as coming under the latter category. The question will mainly depend upon the form of the particular order and the true scope of the enactment under which it is passed.

SUBHAN MOCHI v. BABU RAM SINGH, I.L.R. 52 All. 329:

In *Radhakrishna Aiyar v. Swaminatha Aiyar*¹ Lord Buckmaster, considering the scope of S. 109, cl. (c), Civil Procedure Code, says, "it is plain that there may be certain cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute; there are questions as, for example, those relating to religious rites and ceremonies, to caste and family rights, or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance". The case under review involved the right of the Muhammadans to take procession and it was held to be a question of great public importance to the Muhammadan community and so leave was granted under that clause.

NANNU MAL v. RAM CHARAN LAL, I.L.R. 52 All. 331.

The question involved in this case is one on which there has been considerable divergence of opinion. The question is this: a first mortgagee brings a suit on his mortgage without impleading the second mortgagee, obtains a decree, sells the property, purchases it himself and gets into possession. The second mortgagee then brings a suit to redeem the first mortgage. What are the terms on which he is to redeem the first mortgage—is it to be on the footing of the mortgage or that of the decree. Is possession to affect the interest he should get? On principle it would seem that when the second mortgagee repudiates the previous proceedings he cannot take advantage of them for the purpose of cutting down interest. This was the view taken by the Privy Council in *Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahoor Fatima*². But once he takes possession, the position becomes a bit complicated. If he wants interest, he can claim that only in the capacity of mortgagee. Then he is bound to account for the profits. In *Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahoor Fatima*² the Privy Council disallowed interest as it was not shown that it was less than the interest. The Calcutta Courts have been taking the view that the prior mortgagee having taken the decree, in other words having elected to take the smaller interest could not claim the higher interest. As pointed out in *Thenappa Chettiar v. Marimuthu Nadan*³ this view can possibly be justified only when he had notice of the subsequent mortgage and yet did not choose to make the mortgagee a party. When he was not aware of the subsequent mortgage the principle cannot apply. But as the Privy Council point out, it being the duty of the mortgagee to find out the mortgages on the register, his failure to do so is to put him on notice (*Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedari Lal*⁴). If so, in all cases, it might follow that the prior mortgagee is not entitled to the rate of interest provided in the mortgage. It cannot be that. If the mortgagee agrees with the mortgagor to take a lower rate of interest, undoubtedly the benefit of such agreement would go to the second mortgagee also though he is not a party to the agreement. The same rule would apply, it has been held, to the case of a sale to the mortgagee, who takes possession of the property and enjoys the profits. (*Syed Ibrahim Sahib v. Arumugathayee*⁵.) He must be content with the profits the sale gives him. Even if the profits came to more, the second mortgagee could not complain for he would not have been entitled to claim the profits if the mortgagee parted with them in favour of an utter stranger. The reduction of interest by reason of the decree is not on the same footing as reduction of interest as a result of an agreement between the mortgagor and the previous mortgagee. In the absence of any such agreement, the true position would seem to be that the mortgagee, who has taken possession of the property is bound, if he so chooses, to account for the profits at the same time being entitled to the interest provided in his document. Mr. Justice Mukerjee puts the position thus (*Satnargin Tewari v. Chowdhuri Sheobaran Singh*⁶): "No doubt, the defendants are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancers and thus to claim interest on the foot of the mortgages they have discharged; but they cannot be justly allowed at the same time to retain the profits of properties. It is only their mortgagee-character which can support their claim for interest, and it is only the status of full owners that can justify the enjoyment of profits by them. They cannot simultaneously enforce their rights in both capacities." Applying the same argument, when a second mortgagee repudiates the binding nature of the first mortgagee's sale, it is not open to him, it may fairly be contended, to repudiate the sale and at the same time claim the benefit of the reduction of interest effected by the decree.

M. B. SINGH & Co. v. SIRCAR & Co., I.L.R. 52 All. 459.

Three questions arose in this case: Is payment by a cheque payment within the meaning of section 20, Limitation Act? Secondly, is it necessary that it should appear in writing that the payment is towards principal? Thirdly, is the cheque a sufficient compliance with the requirement as to writing imposed by the section? A cheque may be taken in payment or it may be taken as payment only on realisation. In the former case, their Lordships would say it would be payment within the meaning of section 20 and the cheque would also satisfy the requirement of writing under section 20. It is much easier to regard an endorsement as payment without violence to the language of the section than a cheque—the more so when the endorsement purports to be in payment towards the debt. The section does not require that the writing should state that the payment is in part payment. All that it requires is that the payment should appear in writing. That the payment is part payment can be shown aliunde. *Mackenzie v. Thiruwengadathan*¹ takes a different view on both these questions and it is approved on the latter point in *Manickam Pillai v. Ratnasami Nadar*². We must confess we prefer the view taken in this case which has the support of *Kedar Nath Mitra v. Dinabhandhu Saha*³ and Curlender v. Abdul Hamid.⁴

TIKA RAM v. MOTI LAL, I.L.R. 52 All. 464.

The question in this case was as to whether a recital in a sale-deed as to the ownership of the adjacent land can be used as evidence under section 32, clause (3) and section 13, clause (b), Evidence Act. Their Lordships hold that it is admissible under the former section as the statement would be against the proprietary interest of the vendor and that it might also in certain circumstances, e.g., where if the adjacent land formed a part of the land conveyed, in the natural course of things, it would also have been conveyed, come within section 13 (b). We should think that it is going too far to say that the statement by A that the adjoining land is B's, should be regarded as being against his proprietary interest when there is no claim on his part to such proprietary interest and the only question is whether it is B's or C's. If the case involved the question whether it is A's or B's, or whether it is A's or C's, it might be used against A to show that it did not belong to him because then really it would be against his proprietary interest. Otherwise, any statement which involved the recognition of the title of a stranger to any property (it is difficult to see why one should stop at adjacent land) would be evidence, because it involves the admission that it does not belong to the party making the statement. The Madras High Court has consistently been holding that such recitals in the documents of strangers are not evidence, we think rightly.

NARSI TOKERSEY & CO. v. SACHINDRANATH GAJANAN,
I.L.R. 54 Bom. 75.

Notwithstanding the circumstance that S. 3 of the Guardian and Wards Act saves the powers of the High Courts in the matter of the appointment of guardians for minors, it is difficult to see how a guardian can be appointed under those powers for the property of a minor who is a member of a Hindu Mitakshara joint family and who has no separate properties of his own. The reason assigned by the Privy Council in *Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh*¹ for the absence of power in the court to appoint a guardian under the Minors Act to the property of a minor member of a joint family is that such a minor has no individual property in it and by any such appointment the powers of the manager of the joint family cannot be displaced. The same reasons against the appointment of a guardian would seem to exist even in the case of an appointment by the High Court to the property of a junior member of the joint family. No doubt it has been pointed out in *In re Jagannath Ramji*² that under the practice of the Chancery Court, it was not necessary that a minor should have property before a guardian could be appointed to him. But the cases referred to in *In re Spence*³ and *In re Fynn*⁴ are those relating to the custody of a minor and really bear upon the appointment of a guardian for the person of a minor and the argument in one of the cases was that in such a case the only procedure available was a writ of habeas corpus which was available only at law and not in Equity and this argument was negatived. It may be noticed in this connection that in this country it has been recognised that a guardian for the person of a minor can be appointed, though he happens to be a junior member of a joint family. Jambagathachi v. Rajaman-narswami Nadalwar.⁵ Again, it is not clear that if the manager of a joint family is also appointed guardian of the properties of a minor member, his powers as manager are displaced by such appointment. It must, however, be mentioned that *In re Manilal Hurgovan*⁶ which held that a guardian can be appointed for the property of a minor member of a joint family where he has only joint family properties has been followed not only in the case under notice, but also by a single Judge of a Calcutta High Court in Hari Narain Das In re.¹

SHIDDAPPA IRAPPA v. REVAPPA SOMAPPA, I.L.R. 54 Bom. 96.

In this case, an infant brought a suit represented by a next friend and was partially successful in the first Court. He preferred an appeal against the decree and when the appeal was pending, the next friend died and no new next friend was appointed, but the appeal came on for hearing and was decided in favour of the minor appellant. In the execution taken of the appellate decree by the minor, the objection was taken by the other side that the decree was a nullity for the above reasons; and the learned Judge has held that a suit by a minor without a next friend was only an irregularity and that the defendant waived it as he objected to the rehearing of the appeal subsequently, at the instance of the minor through another next friend.

Quite apart from the question of waiver on which the learned Judge has rested his judgment, it may be pointed out that where a suit is brought by a minor without a next friend and decided, the decision is not liable to attack at the instance of any other party to the suit, but only on the part of the minor. This was decided as early as 1822 in England in Bird v. Pegg,² where an action was brought against an infant not represented by a guardian and the infant appeared by an attorney and was successful and on a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment on the ground that the infant was not represented by a guardian the original judgment in favour of the infant was affirmed. There the distinction was pointed out between cases where the judgment was against the infant without a guardian and cases where judgment was in his favour. This decision was followed in India as early as 1866 in Mahomed Hatum v. Musammat Jumeera Bibee,³ which was the case of a minor plaintiff without a next friend. In this view, the appellate decree in the case under notice is not open to attack by the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff minor was not represented by a next friend in appeal, after the original next friend died. These considerations were apparently not kept in view in *Maung San Bwin v. Maung Nyi by his mother and guardian ad litem Pu Ma and one*¹; and some of the observations in it may, therefore, require reconsideration.

Again, the need for a next friend in the suit of a minor has been rested on the reason that the defendant should have somebody to look to for his costs in the event of his success. Ex parte Brocklebank, In re Brocklebank.² Consequently where a suit is brought by a minor without a next friend, the defendant can apply that the plaint may be taken off the file with his costs to be paid by the pleader of the minor plaintiff or any other person by whom the plaint was presented under Order 32, R. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. If, however, the defendant does not take advantage of this provision and allows the suit to proceed to judgment, he waives the irregularity, if any, and can no longer object to it, as pointed out in *Kamalakshi v. Ramasami Chetti*³, which followed *Ex parte Brocklebank, In re Brocklebank*² and which in its turn has been followed in the case under notice.

It may perhaps be added that even if the appellant was an adult and he died pending the appeal and his legal representatives were not brought on the record, if the appeal was decided in favour of the appellant, the decision would not be a nullity and could not be attacked by the unsuccessful respondent in the appeal on that ground. This was laid down in *Vellayan Chetty v. Mahalinga Aiyar*⁴ which was followed in *Suryanarayana v. Joga Rao*⁵ after a review of the authorities. The matter would, of course, be different if the appeal was decided against the deceased appellant as no decision could be given against a person without hearing him and the legal representative could, in such a case, treat the decision as a nullity and claim a rehearing of the appeal. On all these grounds, we submit, if we may say so with respect, that the learned Judge in the case under notice could not have come to a different conclusion.

GOVIND NARAYAN v. RANGNATH GOPAL, I.L.R. 54 Bom. 226.

It is perhaps interesting to notice the conflict of decisions on the question whether Art. 116 of the Indian Limitation Act applies only to registration of documents under the Indian Registration Act or includes registration under other enactments as well, such as the registration of the memorandum of association under the Indian Companies Act. The starting point was in *Ripon Press and Sugar Mill Co., Ltd. v. Nama Venkatarama Chetti*¹ where Sir John Wallis, C.J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., held that it was not restricted to registration under the Indian Registration Act alone but applied to registration under other Acts, such as the Indian Companies Act and the Copyright Act. This view was referred to with approval in *In the matter of the Union Bank, Allahabad, Ltd.*² by the Allahabad High Court. Then came the decision of the Madras Full Bench in *Ramaseshayya v. Sri Tripurasundari Cotton Press, Bezwada*³ where Coutts Trotter, C.J., said that Sir John Wallis, C.J., had put "an intolerable strain on the word registered" by including under that term registration under the Companies Act. After this was the decision of the Bombay High Court in *Maneklal Mansukhbhai v. The Suryapur Mills Co., Ltd.*⁴ where Sir Amberson Marten, C.J., doubted whether the wide meaning given to the word by Sir John Wallis, C.J., was correct, while Crump, J., was clear that such wide meaning ought not to be given to the word "registered." Now, we have the decision under notice where Sir Amberson Marten himself prefers the wide meaning given to the word by Sir John Wallis as including registration under the Indian Companies Act as well.

It is often very material to know under which of the two types—that covered by *Lee v. Butler*¹ or that dealt with in Helby v. Matthews,² a hire purchase agreement falls. In the first case the property in the article passes to the hirer, with all its consequences; in the latter case, no property passes to him and the owner retains full control over his goods. It is the substance of the transaction that has to be looked at to decide the question and the parties cannot “by calling it a hiring or by any mere juggling with words, escape from the consequences of the contract into which they entered”. In England, the distinction between these two cases has now been well recognised but as the system is yet in its infancy in this country, the contracts are often loosely expressed with the result that the contrary of what was intended by the parties is often contained in the document. (See Cole v. Nanalal Morarji.³) The distinction between the two cases is clearly stated by Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., in Auto Supply Co., Ltd. v. Raghunatha Chetty.⁴ It is only the contracts in the form of *Helby v. Matthews*² that are technically called Hire-purchase Agreements. •

The case under notice proceeds on the basis that the contract fell within the principle of *Helby v. Matthews*² and that there was no sale but only a hire of the lorry and an incomplete agreement to purchase. The main question was if the “seizure clause” in the contract by which the owner was empowered to seize the lorry on default being committed in payment of any instalments and to retain the money already paid for its hire, was or was not a penalty within the meaning of S. 74 of the Contract Act. Cunliffe, J., holds that it is not a penalty. The very question was raised in *Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Raja Prosad*⁵ where it was held following *Manian Pattar v. The Madras Railway Co*⁶ that the provision for the forfeiture of the advance was not in the nature of a penalty. (See also Mathura Nath Choudhury v. Sreejukta Bageswari Ram.⁷) In *Auto Supply Co., Ltd. v. Raghunatha Chetty*⁴ the nature of the seizure clause came up for decision though the question was not argued as one under S. 74 of the Contract Act. The learned Judges held that "the sum stipulated for to be paid on delivery, apart from the monthly rent stipulated to be paid cannot be claimed back by the hirer even where there is no express provision in the agreement that when the agreement is terminated by the choice of the hirer or by his default, all sums paid by him up to date are to be retained by the owners without giving credit to him for a farthing." The decision mainly rests on the ground that it is a necessary condition in the hire purchase system "for the express purpose of acting as a deterrent to hirers throwing back road-depreciated cars on the hands of the owners". Dunstan also points out that most of the terms in a hire purchase agreement are to protect the interests of the owner and that "this protection is necessary owing to the fact that the hirer obtains power over goods of much greater value than his deposit or yearly instalments warrant." (Dunstan's Hire Purchase Agreements, p. 67.)

The first payment is more in the nature of earnest money and a guarantee for the fulfilment of the contract and it is now settled that where a reasonable amount is deposited with the seller on a contract for sale as security for the completion of the sale, the advance cannot be recovered (see *Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi*⁸, *Kunwar Chiranjit Singh v. Rai Bahadur Har Swarup*⁹ and *Abas Ali v. Kodhusao*¹⁰). It will have to be set off against actual damage, when a claim is made for damages occasioned by the breach. (See *The President, Vellore Taluk Board v. Gopalasami Naidu*¹¹ and *Bhai Panna Singh v. Firm Bhai Arjan Singh*¹²). It may be that in the case of an ordinary contract to sell goods where an advance is paid at or about the time of the contract it cannot be presumed to be money paid as security for the performance of the contract. (*Rattamma v. Krishnamurthi*¹³ but see *Ram Kumar Das v. Nanda Kumar Shaha*¹⁴). But the considerations adverted to in *The Auto Supply Co., Ltd. v. Raghunatha Chetty*⁴ and by Dunstan in his book show that even where there is no provision for forfeiture in a hire purchase agreement, it will be more in accordance with the nature of the contract to imply one even when the amount originally paid is a substantial sum.

Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., refers also to the analogy suggested in the case under review by Cunliffe, J., namely, that of a tenant who has broken some restrictive covenant in his lease entitling the lessor to re-enter. It cannot be said that the tenant can resist forfeiture and claim payment of the back rent from his landlord. (See *Kammaram Nambiar v. Chindan Nambiar*¹⁵.)

The argument based on S. 74 has been urged in several cases where there has been a clause for forfeiture. For example in *Krishna Shetti v. Gilbert Pinto*¹⁶ it was relied on to claim relief against forfeiture of a lease and in *Natesa Aiyar v. Apparu Padayachi*¹⁷ to be relieved against forfeiture of a deposit made to secure the performance of a contract, but it has always been negatived. Viewed in any light the decision of the case under review seems to be unexceptionable but the observations at page 243 that the "penalty" must be a "separate or an extraneous payment" may be open to doubt.

No doubt generally "penalty" consists of some "specific extraneous payment" to be furnished by the party responsible for the breach (see *Rajagopala Padayachi v. Varadaraja Padayachi*¹⁸ and *Natesa Aiyar v. Apparu Padayachi*¹⁷), but there may be cases like *Steedman v. Drinkle*¹⁹ and In re Dagenham (Thomes) Dock Co.,²⁰ where the Court has relieved against forfeiture on the ground that the extent of the loss by forfeiture was out of all proportion to the amount payable under the contract though there was no "separate payment" to be made. The learned Judge relies on the words "not exceeding the amount so named, or as the case may be, the penalty stipulated for" in S. 74. They may well apply to a case like *The Municipal Board of Allahabad v. Tikandar Jang*²⁰ where default is committed in payment of the full earnest money and the vendor sues to recover the balance of the earnest money. It may here be stated that *The Municipal Board of Allahabad v. Tikandar Jang*²⁰ has not been 28th April, 1930.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 11, Expl. IV—"Might and ought"—Ground of attack available but not raised in a prior suit—Subsequent suit on such ground, if available—Court dismissing prior suit giving permission to file a separate suit—Separate suit filed accordingly—If barred by res judicata.

The plaintiff's father and defendant were carrying on business in partnership and at the time of dissolution the defendant gave a list of outstandings to the plaintiff's father as and for his share of the outstandings. The father first filed a suit against a constituent as the 1st defendant and the present defendant as 2nd defendant for a decree in respect of the amount due from him alleging that if the Court thought it was not just to give a decree against the constituent 1st defendant, it should give a decree against the present defendant. The Court held that the alleged constituent had no dealings with the firm and dismissed the suit against him and there being no definite allegation in that plaint that the present defendant agreed to make good the amount in case it was not recovered from the 1st defendant, the Court dismissed the suit against the present defendant also observing that the plaintiff can make the necessary allegations and file a separate suit. Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit which the defendant contended was barred by res judicata.

Held, (i) that plaintiff's father might and ought to have made the agreement alleged in the second suit a ground of attack in the first suit also and not having done so, the plaintiff was barred by res judicata. I.L.R. 46 Mad. 135 and Explanation IV to S. 11 relied on.

(ii) that in the prior suit, the Court had no power to give liberty to file a separate suit on the same cause of action and notwithstanding such liberty, the second suit was barred by res judicata. I.L.R. 47 All. 158; 48 M.L.J. 64 (P.C.) followed.

A Court should not refuse to issue a commission to a witness resident beyond 200 miles of the Court-house on the mere ground of delay in making the application for the issue of commission.

If, without prejudice to the trial proceeding on the day fixed for the same, the party undertakes to get the evidence taken on commission, he should be allowed to do so, but if he fails to get the evidence so taken, his application may be dismissed.

Hindu Law—Wife—Maintenance—Acts of cruelty not found—Court, if can act on presumption from the mere separate living of the wife.

Where in a suit for separate maintenance by a young Hindu woman against her husband, the Courts below disbelieved the evidence about the refusal of cruelty alleged against the husband but decreed separate maintenance acting on the presumption that a Hindu wife would not go out of her husband's protection unless there were very strong reasons compelling her to do so,

Held, (i) that under the Hindu Law, in order to entitle a wife to separate maintenance, definite acts of cruelty must be alleged and found, (ii) that Courts were not entitled to act on the presumption that a wife would not leave her husband's protection unless she were compelled to do so, and (iii) that the decree awarding separate maintenance should be set aside. 55 M.L.J. 242 (P.C.) followed.

Where, in a suit for partition of the plaintiff's one-sixth share, dismissed by the High Court, the petitioner applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and contended that the decree "involved" a claim relating to the entire family properties which were more than Rs. 10,000 in value,

Held, that it was the value of the share of the petitioner in the properties—not the value of the entire family properties—that should be taken into consideration for the purpose of valuation under S. 110 (2), Civil Procedure Code, as the decree affects only his share.

Hindu Law—Debts—Father executing promissory note—Death of executant leaving his undivided father, brothers and sons—Suit on promissory note—Debt neither binding on family nor tainted with illegality—Liability of sons.

A Hindu father executed a promissory note and died subsequently, leaving behind him his undivided father, two brothers and three sons. In a suit filed on the promissory note after the death of the grandfather it was found that the debt was not contracted for a binding purpose. At the same time it was held that it was not tainted by illegality or immorality.

Held, that the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree against the separate assets of the deceased executant and also against the enhanced share of the sons in the family properties to the extent that it was augmented as a result of the death of the father. That is, the one-sixteenth share in the family properties which the father would have got if a partition had been effected during his lifetime and which devolved on his sons by reason of his death will be liable for the debt contracted by the father.

Where in a suit on a simple mortgage the plaintiff impleaded amongst others the mortgagor's mother and paternal uncle's wife on the ground that they claimed rights of residence in one of the items of property mortgaged but failed to pray for a declaration as to the non-existence of such rights, and the ladies, without raising the question of misjoinder of parties and causes of action, pleaded that they were entitled to the said rights of residence and an issue having been framed on the question the Trial Court held that the rights of residence could not prevail as against the encumbrancers for value who had advanced monies for purposes binding on the joint family and passed the usual mortgage-decree, and the ladies having preferred an appeal.

Held, (1) that the plea of misjoinder of parties and causes of action could not be raised for the first time in appeal; (2) that in the absence of a specific prayer in the plaint for a declaration that the ladies had no rights of residence such a relief could not be granted; (3) that the proper course was to strike off the names of the persons who had unsuccessfully asserted their rights of residence and that the decree in their favour for redemption was misconceived; and (4) that the question relating to the rights of residence should be gone into in execution proceedings.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 92—Provision in a scheme enabling the Court to appoint trustees for vacancy arising—Whether ultra vires—Whether an appeal or revision lies against such appointment.

A clause in a scheme decree under S. 92, Civil Procedure Code, giving the Court power to appoint persons in order to fill up a vacancy among trustees of a charity is not ultra vires within the meaning of the Full Bench decision in 51 M. 31.

Any such appointment by the Court under the scheme clause is not in execution covered by S. 47, C. P. Code. Hence neither an appeal nor a revision lies against an appointment made under that clause.

Where a building was used as a Secondary School, which though open to the public, was run as a proprietary concern by the Head-master of the School, and the question was raised whether the site on which the building was erected was liable to be assessed by the Municipality to property tax, Held, (1) that the site, having been used for a public purpose, was exempt from assessment to property tax because of S. 63 (1) (a) of the Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1864). Meaning of the expression “public purpose” discussed.

(2) that the site was also exempted from assessment to tax under S. 83 (a) of Act V of 1920, because the site was used for educational purposes. The words “which are open to the public and from which income is derived” in that clause qualify only.

Ex parte order under S. 144—Application for setting aside—Pro-

Court.*

When an ex parte order under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is called in question the normal procedure should be for evidence to be recorded in the usual way by examination and cross-examination of witnesses in open Court. The proceeding being a judicial one it is desirable, wherever possible, to adopt the normal procedure.

In deciding the question whether an order under S. 144 was justified or not the test is to find out whether the act, be it lawful or unlawful, was likely to lead to a breach of the public tranquillity. The likelihood or tendency should be a reasonable or proximate one and must not be merely speculative or distant. Where there are special facts relating to a particular locality, as to which the local authority is the best judge, the opinion of that authority will not be easily disturbed; but where there are no special circumstances and the matter is one of general impression, the absence of any near or reasonable connection between the prohibited act and the supposed danger to public tranquillity will be a ground upon which the High Court is bound to act.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 144 and 439.—Order under S. 144—High Court's powers of revision.

The powers of the High Court in revision under S. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, are general and their generality cannot be cut down by any decision.

Where the elements essential to action under S. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, are shown to exist on materials legally before the Magistrate, the High Court will, in exercising its powers, respect the opinion of the local authorities, both as to the gravity of the danger and as to the steps necessary to maintain the peace. Where, however, they do not exist, the order cannot be upheld merely because the local Magistrate has chosen to say that they do exist. If the grounds for action as stated in the order are either unfounded in fact or insufficient in law, or if it is shown that the order violates the conditions laid down in the section it is the duty of the High Court to interfere.

No order can be passed against the public without the limitation as to place, namely, that it must be one whether publicly or privately owned, which, at the time when the prohibition operates, the public frequent or visit. Where the order prohibited the members of the public from putting up a certain kind of flags in their private houses, which the public as such neither frequented nor visited, and the evidence did not show the existence of any emergency of apprehended danger,

Held, in revision, that the order under S. 144 should be set aside.

A complaint was filed for criminal misappropriation of three specified sums on two specified days against the petitioner, who was then convicted. Again another complaint was filed against the petitioner for misappropriation of another sum between the two dates covered by the previous charge.

Held, there is no rule that separate charges in respect of separate amounts misappropriated shall not be resorted to and that if an accused has misappropriated several sums within a year they all should be added together into one gross sum and tried as one charge. Where the question is one of a gross sum misappropriated between two dates, there can be no second complaint for a sum misappropriated between the two dates, as the previous complaint must be deemed to have taken in this item also. In order to constitute res judicata between co-defendants, the following conditions should be satisfied, viz., (1) there should have been active contest between the co-defendants, (2) some question must have arisen for adjudication between the co-defendants inter se, and (3) there should have been an adjudication of that question in the prior litigation.

With reference to the course of drainage of flood water over certain fields, there was a prior litigation between A, B, C and D in which A was plaintiff and B, C and D were defendants. A prayed for an injunction against B and C alone but not against

N. R. C.

D to remove the bunds which B had erected in his land S. No. 115 and C in his lands Nos. 116 and 117, and no prayer was asked for against D who, however, filed a written statement that the bunds in Nos. 115, 116 and 117 should be removed and that the plaintiff should be given a decree as prayed for, and engaged a pleader both in the suit and in the appeal and more than once maintained before the Courts that his case and plaintiff's (A's) case were the same, and ultimately it was found in appeal that the course of the water was through S. Nos. 115, 116 and the 8 (D's land) and injunctions were granted for the removal of the bunds in these three survey numbers and for restraining the owners (B, C and D) of these fields from raising any bunds in future but no such decree was made in respect of Survey No. 117 also belonging to C; in a subsequent suit brought by D against C for a mandatory injunction to remove the bund in S. No. 117 and for a perpetual injunction restraining C from ever erecting any bund in S. No. 117, C contended that the prior decision was res judicata which contention was upheld by the High Court on the ground that as the prayer in respect of bunds in S. No. 117 was asked for and not granted in the prior suit, Explanation V to S. 11 applied and it must be deemed to have been refused so that the present suit for the same relief was barred by res judicata. On appeal, the Sub-Court held that preventive relief was always at the discretion of the Court and the failure or omission to grant an injunction, which was only a preventive relief cannot operate as res judicata.

Held, (i) that the prior decision was a decision on the merits; (ii) that there was no need to invoke the aid of Explanation V to S. 11; (iii) that the case satisfied all the requirements necessary in order to constitute res judicata between the co-defendants C and D, and (iv) that the decision in the prior suit operated as res judicata.

Two brothers who were the grandsons by the daughter of the last male owner joined in the execution of a sale-deed by their mother of the properties belonging to the last male owner for no legal necessity. At the time of the execution of sale the elder brother had barely attained majority and the younger was a minor and as such represented by his brother. Subsequently after the death of the mother, the minor son also died and his sons along with their paternal uncle executed another sale-deed in favour of the plaintiffs who brought the suit claiming title to those properties. The question was whether the elder brother who was an immature youth at the time when he consented to the sale of the properties by his mother could be considered to have exercised such an intelligent choice as would constitute an election on his part to abide by the sale.

Held, that he elected to abide by the sale effected by the mother and by reason of the doctrine of election he would be debarred from disputing it to the extent of his share in the properties, although the evidence in the case did not warrant the application of the doctrine of estoppel under S. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Indian Contract Act (I of 1872), S. 17, Explanation—Vendor and purchaser—Duty to speak—Extent and nature of—Silence—Equal means of knowledge—Misleading representation.

The brother of an insolvent purchased five decrees belonging to the insolvent for a lump sum far below their face value from the Official Assignee. One of the decrees for a large sum was secured and recoverable in full. It was found that the Official Assignee, despite his own private inquiries, was not aware of such security, that the purchaser's solicitor who negotiated the purchase and was aware of the same, did not disclose it but represented to the Assignee that the decrees were "unrealisable," "worth practically nothing." The latter now sought to set aside the sale.

Held, the purchaser occupied no fiduciary position and was under no antecedent obligation to disclose facts which might have influenced his own judgment when bargaining for his own interest. No fraud can be implied from his mere silence as to such facts. But if he makes some communication which, without the addition of certain other facts, would be necessarily misleading and he did so intentionally, that is fraud.

Hindu Law—Minor—Agreement to sell—Subsequent transferee with notice of the agreement—Suit for specific performance—Whether enforceable against him.

The plaintiff brought a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell immoveable lands or for the return of the earnest money paid by him and damages in the alternative. The agreement to sell was executed by both the first and the second defendant, the former acting in his individual capacity and the latter, being a minor at the date of the agreement, represented by his mother as guardian. Subsequently the same properties were purchased for price by another person with knowledge of the agreement. On the question whether the plaintiff can enforce specific performance against the minor,

Held, that the agreement to sell was not specifically enforceable against the minor or the subsequent transferee with notice of the agreement in respect of the undivided minor's share in the immoveable properties.

Two brothers who were the grandsons by the daughter of the last male owner joined in the execution of a sale-deed by their mother of the properties belonging to the last male owner for no legal necessity. At the time of the execution of sale the elder brother had barely attained majority and the younger was a minor and as such represented by his brother. Subsequently after the death of the mother, the minor son also died and his sons along with their paternal uncle executed another sale-deed in favour of the plaintiffs who brought the suit claiming title to those properties. The question was whether the elder brother who was an immature youth at the time when he consented to the sale of the properties by his mother could be considered to have exercised such an intelligent choice as would constitute an election on his part to abide by the sale.

Held, that he elected to abide by the sale effected by the mother and by reason of the doctrine of election he would be debarred from disputing it to the extent of his share in the properties, although the evidence in the case did not warrant the application of the doctrine of estoppel under S. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Indian Contract Act (I of 1872), S. 17, Explanation—Vendor and purchaser—Duty to speak—Extent and nature of—Silence—Equal means of knowledge—Misleading representation.

The brother of an insolvent purchased five decrees belonging to the insolvent for a lump sum far below their face value from the Official Assignee. One of the decrees for a large sum was secured and recoverable in full. It was found that the Official Assignee, despite his own private inquiries, was not aware of such security, that the purchaser's solicitor who negotiated the purchase and was aware of the same, did not disclose it but represented to the Assignee that the decrees were "unrealisable," "worth practically nothing." The latter now sought to set aside the sale.

Held, the purchaser occupied no fiduciary position and was under no antecedent obligation to disclose facts which might have influenced his own judgment when bargaining for his own interest. No fraud can be implied from his mere silence as to such facts. But if he makes some communication which, without the addition of certain other facts, would be necessarily misleading and he did so intentionally, that is fraud.

Observations of the Earl of Selborne in Coaks v. Boswell, (1886) 11 A.C. 232 at 235, relied on.

Equal means of knowledge is immaterial where there is an express representation, or anything calculated to deceive or to lull suspicion upon a particular point.

The Indian Registration Act, S. 28—What would constitute fraud on the law—Suit by a ward to set aside a sale by a guardian which is not void—Applicability of S. 44 of the Limitation Act.

In order to constitute fraud on the law of Registration in violation of the provisions of S. 28 of the Indian Registration Act collusion between the parties to the transaction should be proved and that as a test of whether the parties had an intention to practise such a fraud it has primarily to be considered whether there was a property which could be conveyed by the party executant, or as to which a genuine belief existed that he could convey it. The facts that the property included in the document is very small and the primary intention was to register the document in a particular registration office will not constitute acts of fraud.

The whole case-law reviewed and discussed.

If a sale is void owing to a fraudulent registration there will be no need to set it aside. If the sale is not void, then the suit will be to set aside the sale and the Art. 44 of the Limitation Act will apply when a ward sues to set aside the sale by a guardian.

Trust—Investment of charity funds with co-trustee—Liberty to co-trustee to use the moneys—Adjudication—Tracing—Limits of the doctrine of—Money paid by settlement of account.

The facts of the case are set out in the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Waller reported in 58 M.L.J. 36.

Held, affirming the Trial Court—

Where a trustee is authorised by the terms of the trust to invest the trust moneys in his own business and is directed to pay interest thereon, the trust is not entitled to follow up the money into the assets of the trustee after he becomes an insolvent. All that the trust is entitled to in such a case is to rank as an ordinary creditor of the trustee.

Official Assignee of Madras v. Krishnaji Bhat, (1930) M.W. N. 362, not followed.

Where the trust moneys cannot be traced into the business assets of the trustee, as where the assets available at the time of the claim are distinctly shown to be derived from a source different from the trust funds and so cannot be said to represent any portion of the trust money, the doctrine of tracing is not applicable.

Official Assignee of Madras v. Devakotta, etc., Sangam, 52 M. 919; 57 M.L.J. 99, referred to.

Quaere: Whether there can be a tracing order in respect of trust moneys if the trustee did not receive the trust moneys in specie but only got them by a settlement of account, in other words, if a paper adjustment can be treated as a passing of money of the cesti que trust into the hands of the trustee, so as to attract the doctrine of tracing.

Where in a patta and muchilika exchanged between a landholder and a ryot there was no provision as to the rate of rent payable by the ryot when he raised wet crops on his holding with the aid of Government water, but it appeared that ever since the patta was granted the ryot was paying rent only at the lower rate even if he raised wet crops with the aid of Government water,

Held, (1) that the landholder was not entitled to claim rent at a higher rate; the conduct of the parties could, under those circumstances, be relied on either as indicating the contract between the parties or as raising the presumption under Ss. 27 and 28 of the Madras Estates Land Act; that the amount paid in the previous years was fair and equitable: 28 I.C. 891, relied on;

(2) in such cases the patta and muchilika need not necessarily be the only evidence of the contract between the parties; and

(3) that S. 25 of the Madras Estates Land Act which permits the Collector to fix a fair and equitable rent is inapplicable to a case where there is a contract, express or implied, between the parties.

The plaintiff purchased in a Court auction two srotriendhar villages belonging to a Zamindar, but did not have them registered in his name as required by the Madras Act (I of 1876), nor was the peishkush proportionately fixed under the Act. The Zamindar continued to be the registered holder of the two villages. In suits brought by the plaintiff for recovery of Jodi from the srotriendars, they sought to deduct the amount of peishkush that they had paid to Government to raise an attachment effected by the Government for arrears of peishkush due from the Zamin-dar, from the amounts of Jodi claimed by the plaintiff, and the srotriendars relied on the provisions of S. 35 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act which enabled a tenant to claim certain deductions as against the landholder and on S. 70 of the Indian Contract Act.

Held, (1) that it is doubtful whether a srotriendardar is a tenant within the meaning of S. 35 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. The defaulter under that section is a registered holder and not the real owner: 33 M. 41; 39 M. 795, followed;

(2) that it is always a question of fact whether a person was doing anything for another within the meaning of S. 70 of the Indian Contract Act: 33 M. 15; 33 M. 235; 27 L.W. 406, followed;

(3) in order to show that the other person "enjoyed" the benefit thereof under S. 70, it is necessary that the other person, though benefited, had the option to refuse or accept the benefit: 33 M. 15; 25 I.C. 783; 28 I.C. 456; 45 I.C. 786; 43 M.L.J. 271, followed;

The plaintiff brought a suit for accounts against the defendant as her agent in respect of a particular business but the Trial Court found they were partners and gave the plaintiff a decree for accounts on that basis.

Held, the finding was inconsistent with the case both of the plaintiff and the defendant. Though in view of Issue No. 4 raising the question of the terms of the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, there was no surprise to the defendant, still the suit based, as it was, on a specific legal relation of agency cannot be converted into one based on an entirely different relation—that of partnership. The leading principles are stated in 50 Cal. 292; 17 C.W.N. 427; 22 C.W.N. 104.

The principle that no suit for accounts can be maintained by one partner against another without a prayer for dissolution of partnership has no doubt been considerably relaxed in England. (Lindley on Partnership, 9th Ed., pp. 568-9; 22 Halsbury's Laws of England, p. 138); but the plaintiff suing only for accounts has got to allege special grounds for seeking that relief only and the defendant should have an opportunity of showing his case against. 9 A. 120; 33 M.L.J. 509; 32 M. 76 referred to.

The measurements of the property in the title-deed were believed by the defendant to be correct at the time when he entered into the contract. But on actual measurement taken later, there happened to be a difference.

Held, that in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation by the party to whom performance would become due under the contract, a mistake on the part of the defendant solely could not be a ground for resisting an action for specific performance.

Usufructuary mortgage—Assignment by mortgagee to previous lessee of mortgagor—Rights of parties.

A, the owner of two properties usufructuarily mortgaged in 1912 his two properties to B, but continued in possession of the same under a rental agreement in lieu of interest. In 1917 A leased one of the items to C on a much higher rent. In 1918 C got an assignment from B of all the rights under the mortgage and the rental agreement and refused to pay any more rent to A on foot of his lease.

On a question arising in a suit by A against C for rent, Held, reversing the decision of the Trial Judge, that C continued to be liable under his original lease, until, by an agreement of parties his original position as tenant was transformed into one of usufructuary mortgagee.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), Ss. 7 and 52 (2) (b)—Hindu father—Insolvency—Rights of Official Assignee,

A Hindu father was adjudicated an insolvent in 1919. His sons filed a suit for partition in 1922. In 1924 the Official Assignee took out an application in the Insolvency Court, inter alia, for a declaration that the debts proved in the insolvency were binding on the sons.

Held, (i) The Insolvency Court has jurisdiction under S. 7 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act to give such a declaration.

52 M. 717; 57 M.L.J. 145 followed.

(ii) Though by reason of the suit for partition the power of the father to sell the sons' properties for the discharge of his debts was at an end (vide 51 M. 417; 55 M.L.J. 175), the right of the father under the Hindu Law to call on his sons to make provision in a partition for the discharge of his debts was a power within the meaning of S. 52 (2) (b) and vested in the Official Assignee.

49 M. 849 (F.B.); 50 M. 535 (F.B.) followed.

(iii) Limitation is suspended in insolvency against the father (the insolvent); a debt alive against the father is not barred against the sons.

The instruments were negotiated by T to the plaintiffs who presented them for payment. The defendants refused payment on the ground that the contract, in respect of which the instruments were drawn, had not been performed. The plaintiffs having sued to recover the moneys due under the instruments,

Held, (1) the documents were not negotiable instruments, either under the Negotiable Instruments Act or by reason of any mercantile usage;

(2) the documents were actionable claims within the meaning of S. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, but they were not validly assigned, because the procedure adopted was a blank endorsement by the payee on the back of the documents;

(3) the maker could not, however, because of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, deny his liability under the instruments as against bona fide holders such as the plaintiffs, who were consequently entitled to recover.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit by father against his brothers for partition—Dismissal—After-born son—Right to claim partition of same properties.

A suit for partition by a Hindu father against his brothers and nephews was dismissed. A son born after the filing of the suit by the father brought another suit for partition of the same properties alleging them to be joint family properties in which he was entitled to share.

Held, that by the filing of the suit the father must be deemed to have become divided from his brothers and nephews unless by withdrawal of the suit or some other subsequent event the father can be said to have revoked that declaration of his willingness to become divided. It is only when a partition takes place between a father and his sons and no share is allotted therein to the father that an after-born son can re-open the partition. There is no precedent in Hindu Law to extend it to the case of a partition between the father and his collaterals.

Observations in 33 Bom. 267 at 272 approved.

It is a fortiori where it is not a release or relinquishment of his share by the father, but a denial of his right to share in a suit filed by him before the birth of the sons, at which time he was the separate owner.

Civil Procedure Code, Ss. 109 and 110—Suit for accounts—Decree of High Court modifying the Lower Court's decree by less than Rs. 10,000—If an affirming or reversing decree.

In a suit by a principal against his agent for accounts, the suit being valued at Rs. 40,000, the Trial Court decreed for Rs. 5,682. Appeal was preferred by the defendant and the plaintiff cross-appealed for Rs. 20,000. The appeal was allowed by Rs. 4,000 and the cross-appeal by Rs. 150, thereby reversing to the extent of about Rs. 4,150 only.

Held, that though there may be concurrent findings of fact with reference to some of the items included in the valuation, the value of those items could also be taken into account in considering the valuation of the subject-matter of appeal to Privy Council. If a decree is a composite decree or a series of decrees dealing with what should strictly be the subject of separate suits—e.g., a decree dealing with alienations in favour of different defendants—then it may be proper to separate each decree of the series. But a decree for payment of money found due as a result of taking an account is one decree though it may be the result of decisions in respect of a number of items and therefore unless the High Court affirms the Lower Court's decree in its entirety, it is not an affirming decree.

Where a mortgaged property was sold and a portion of the consideration was left with the purchaser for payment to the mortgagee of the land sold, the vendor is entitled to the vendor's charge under S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act in respect of the amount directed to be paid to the mortgagee. The fact that the vendor had, at the time of the sale, only owned the equity of redemption does not distinguish the case from the decision in 39 Mad. 997 (F. B.). The vendor's charge is not lost by the mortgagee issuing notice to the purchaser calling upon him to pay the amount reserved to himself.

When a charge is made by a complainant to the police against more than one individual and the police while charging before the Court one or more of such individuals of the offence complained of, do not charge them all, a complaint of the Court under S. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is not necessary to prosecute the complainant under S. 211, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the person or persons whom the police have not charged before the Court.

Held further, the mere fact that the complaint, which was in the form of a telegram to the police officer, was filed as an exhibit in the case will not confer jurisdiction on the Court to issue notice under S. 476, because the alleged offence under S. 211, Indian Penal Code, was not committed in or in relation to any judicial proceeding in Court.

Water—River flowing in 3 or 4 months only—Custom of tapping water in the dry months—Owner on the opposite bank tapping a little further up the bed than customary—Likelihood of damage—Injunction if can be granted.

It was customary for the ryots on opposite banks of river Hagari in Bellary to take the water from the river by channels in monsoon periods and by tapping at particular points in the river during dry seasons when there was no surface water flowing. The defendants moved further up the bed and tapped, with the result the plaintiffs were likely to suffer a diminution of supply to their lands. The Government did not authorise the infringement.

Held, that though there may be a doubt as to whether the right of the ryot is contractual (1 M. 205), or proprietary (28 M. 72), it is now settled that the ryotwari holders are entitled to the accustomed quantity and mode of supply, unless and until the Government substitute an equally efficient mode of supply, and any person interfering with such supply will be liable (16 M. 333; 31 M. 171). This right is not an easement but an incident of the tenure. The right of the ryot begins as soon as the water from the river enters the channel ear-marked for his supply and not from when it enters his field.

It is very doubtful if the English rule recognising a right in the owner to take underground water and in exercise of that right to abstract all the water that may percolate into his land in undefined channels from surrounding lands can be applied to rivers in this Presidency. Having regard to the physical features and climatic conditions, it is not unreasonable to assimilate the legal incidents of such water in rivers to the incidents of flowing streams. The position is much as if the river were a large well or a subterranean pond from which authorised channels take off at various recognised points for irrigation of wet fields.

In any event, the rule does not authorise the owner to go on to his neighbour's land (here the Government, the owners of the bed), dig there and abstract water to the prejudice of other neighbours, especially when Government as neighbouring owners did not authorise the abstraction.

Madras Hereditary Village Officers Act (III of 1895)—Vacancy of Karnam's office—Proprietor's appointment—Revenue officers, when can cancel—Civil suit if lies—Appeal to Collector—Non-filing of—Effect of.

On a vacancy occurring by the death of the prior Karnam, the proprietor appointed the plaintiff as Karnam and he entered upon his duties also. The defendant successfully applied to the Revenue Divisional Officer to cancel the said appointment on the ground that he was the nearer heir. Plaintiff did not appeal to the Collector but filed the suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that the cancellation was ultra vires.

Held, S. 21 of Act III of 1895 takes away the jurisdiction of Civil Courts only in cases where by S. 13 jurisdiction is conferred on the Revenue Court. The suit not being one for recovery or restoration to the office on the ground that he is the person entitled to it under S. 10, sub-clauses (2) and (3) of the Act but for a declaration that the Revenue Divisional Officer's order was null and void, the suit lay in the Civil Court.

Where action is taken by the Revenue Officer under S. 11, sub-section (1), the right of appointment is conferred on him only in respect of cases where the nominee of the proprietor is disqualified under S. 10, sub-section (1) but not in cases where the appointment contravenes the provision in S. 10, sub-section (2).

Sadasiva Aiyar's observations in 19 L.W. 90 relied on.

An appeal under S. 11, sub-section (3) will lie only where action is taken by the Revenue Divisional Officer under sub-section (1). Even if sub-section (3) is to be understood as giving a right of appeal against all orders of the Officer, it does not take away the right of suit in a Civil Court.

"The word 'qualified' appearing in sub-section (1) of S. 11 in the Government publication of the Act is apparently a mistake for the word 'disqualified'."

The maker of a promissory note received notices demanding the money due under it from two persons, one claiming as an endorsee from the payee in whose favour it was made and the other claiming that the amount was really due to her deceased husband whose property was sold and that for the balance of purchase-money this pronote was taken benami in the name of her mother-in-law, the endorser, as she and her husband were undergoing imprisonment and (the mother-in-law) being a woman, it was expected her sentence would be reduced in appeal and she could therefore come out earlier from the prison and collect the amount. The maker of the note deposited the amount into Court and filed an interpleader suit between the endorsee from the alleged benamidar and the alleged real owner of the amount due on the pronote.

Held, (i) that the amount being due on a pronote no question as to the benami character of the payee or as to the title of the real owner can be gone into in the interpleader suit, and
(ii) that the money should be paid to the endorsee from the alleged benamidar.

Under S. 38 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, the consent of the majority of creditors is only one of the circumstances to be considered by the Court in approving a scheme and it does not relieve the Court of the duty of judging independently whether the scheme is reasonable and for the benefit of the creditors by reference to other circumstances, such as, the state of the assets, the conduct of the insolvent, etc. The mere fact that the Receiver's management of the estate will involve delay and expense is not sufficient ground for giving effect to the scheme. By Ex. A certain properties alleged to be worth Rs. 25,000 were sold for Rs. 2,000 to the plaintiff's father by the defendants, the sale-deed reciting that the amount had been paid and possession given thereunder. A contemporaneous document Ex. I styled a karinama stated that “the sale amount of Rs. 2,000 relating to the sale-deed executed by you in my favour with interest at 1 per cent. per month shall be liquidated from the income derived from the said lands and by selling a portion of the said lands. I shall sell the remaining lands to any person to whom you might ask me to sell and deliver possession. If you act contrary to any of these terms this document is of no effect".

Held, (differing from Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.), that Ex. I by which the income from the property was to be devoted to certain purposes and the vendee was to sell a portion of the land for reimbursement of the price and to sell the other lands to persons nominated by his vendors, clearly purports and operates to limit the rights previously assigned to the purchaser under Ex. A and is inadmissible for the purpose as it is unregistered.

23 L.W. 19 considered and distinguished.

In the light of the decisions in 22 All. 149, 47 M. 729, 33 All. 340 and 3 Rang. 106, the defendants can adduce evidence to show that, in spite of the recitals in Ex. A that it is an out and out sale-deed and that the plaintiff was put in possession of the properties, it is not an out and out sale and that the plaintiff was not put in possession.

31 L.W. 516 doubted in so far as it suggests that surrounding circumstances can be looked at only in the case of a document of doubtful tenor but not where the document is on its face free from ambiguity.

Held that nevertheless poundage must also be paid. It is a matter of policy if the rule should not permit the person conducting the sale to take his fee out of the poundage but that is an affair of the Government. The Rule (R. 200) as it stands is imperative that the person appointed to sell the property, whoever he may be, shall purchase Court-fee stamps to the value of the poundage and bring it into Court with the balance of sale moneys.

Madras Local Boards Act (XI of 1930), S. 54 (2), proviso—Retrospective effect—Applicability to pending proceeding—Effect of transitional provisions, Rr. 5 (3) and 6—Finding as to disqualification under S. 13, Madras Local Boards Act, 1920—Interference in revision.

An election to the presidentship of a District Board was made in February, 1930. A petition was filed contesting the validity of the election on the ground that the person elected was disqualified to hold the office by virtue of his being a salaried Officer within the meaning of S. 13 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920. During the pendency of the election petition, Madras Act XI of 1930 came into force. The election having been set aside by the Lower Court, a revision petition was preferred to the High Court.

Held, (1) that S. 54 (2) of Act XI of 1930 is not a declaratory provision so as to apply to an election held under the old Act of 1920.

Meaning of declaratory enactment discussed.

Jones v. Bennett, 63 L.T. 705, A.-G. v. Hertford, 3 Ex. Rep. 670 and Smithies v. The National Association of Operative Plasterers, L.R. (1909) 1 K.B.D. 310, referred to;

(2) that even assuming S. 54 is of a declaratory nature, the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with pending proceedings remains unaffected and the procedure prescribed by the second proviso to S. 54 (2) need not be pursued;

(3) that R. 5 (3) of the transitional provisions deals with applications or suits by or against a Local Board and cannot be applied to litigation between individuals such as election petitions;

(4) that R. 6 of the transitional provisions does not enable the disqualified person to hold the office of President for the term of one year even after the election is set aside; and

(5) that the question whether the candidate was disqualified or not is one of mixed law and fact and cannot be the subject of determination in revision.

Subsequently, the wife applied to the Magistrate for enforcing the said order as the husband fell in arrears as regards payment of the monthly allowance of maintenance. It was further provided that if the adoption was not made in the manner specified, the widow and the mother of the testator should divide his properties in equal shares and enjoy them with absolute rights. Subsequently, the widow adopted a boy though the mother had declined to give her consent. Some time before the adoption the mother conveyed some of the properties by deeds of gift. The widow having sued for a declaration of the validity of the adoption and for an injunction restraining the mother of the testator and her alienees from interfering with the widow's possession and enjoyment of the properties,

Held, that the consent of the testator's mother was a condition precedent to the adoption being made and the adoption was consequently invalid.

On a mortgage of 1908 the mortgagee obtained a decree for sale in 1914 and the properties were brought to sale and purchased by the plaintiff in Court-auction, but prior to the mortgage decree and sale thereof the defendants purchased the properties in execution of their money-decree and were in possession from 1912. The mortgagee did not implead them as parties to his mortgage suit. In 1926 the plaintiff as the auction purchaser of the mortgage properties instituted a suit for possession against the defendants but on an objection as to the maintainability of such a suit, the plaintiff sought to amend his plaint by adding an alternative claim for the recovery of the mortgage amount by the resale of the properties on failure of the defendants to redeem the property.

Held, (1) that the purchasers of the equity of redemption not being made a party to the mortgage suit their rights were not affected by the decree for sale therein;

(2) that the plaintiff cannot maintain a suit for possession against the defendants, as his purchase in a simple mortgage decree did not give him a right to possession;

(3) that the plaintiff cannot be permitted to amend his plaint by adding an alternative claim which would entirely change the nature and character of the suit; and

(4) that the plaintiff has no remedy against the defendants as his claim for recovery of the mortgage amount has become barred by limitation even on the date of the suit.

Minor—Suit against—Guardian ad litem—Adverse interest to that of the minor—Decree in the suit and sale on foot thereof—If decree and sale void or voidable.

In a suit on a mortgage executed by A, the present plaintiff, who was only a nephew of the executant A, was made a party and was represented by A himself as guardian ad litem. A allowed the suit to proceed ex parte and did not raise the defence that the mortgage was not binding on the minor. It was found that A's interests were adverse to the minor.

Held, an appointment of a guardian whose interests are adverse to those of the minor is in contravention of the express provision in O. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code. If there was no representation for the minor at all by reason of the fact that no guardian was appointed, or he was not in fact made a party at all, the decree passed in such a suit would doubtless be void. Where a minor is illegally represented by a guardian with an adverse interest, it is as though the minor was never a party to the suit in the proper sense of the term (see 31 A. 572) and the position will be much the same as though the minor's name is merely mentioned as a party defendant.

52 M. 275 (F.B.) refrains from answering the broad question but at least holds that if on the facts the appointment is so improper as to enable the Court to treat the minor as practically unrepresented, the decree is void. As on facts, the appointment was held to be improper within the meaning of the Full Bench, the general question if in every case in which the interest of the guardian is adverse, the decree should necessarily be void as against the minor was left open.

On an objection being raised that as regards one relief in an execution petition, the remedy was by suit, an application was put in to convert that portion of the petition into a plaint and to proceed with the other reliefs under S. 47. The first Court dismissed both the applications and an appeal was preferred only as regards the relief under S. 47. On appeal the Appellate Judge dismissed the petition under S. 47 but permitted the petition to be treated as a plaint in spite of the fact that the trial Judge's order rejecting the prayer had become final.

Held, S. 47 (2) is intended to prevent the inconvenience and injustice caused by the discovery sometimes made after proceedings in Court have gone on for a long time, or as a result of the decision of an Appellate Court, that the proceedings originated in an erroneous form by a bona fide mistake—by petition when it should have been by suit or vice versa. It was not intended to save litigants from the trouble of choosing the proper form and filing a plaint or an execution petition when it is discovered in time what is the proper form and there is no further question about the matter. On revision, the High Court set aside the order of restoration on 22nd November, 1929. The defendant then filed an appeal on 6th January, 1930, to the High Court against the preliminary decree. On a question arising if the appeal was in time, the date of the decree being 8th August, 1928,

Held, that the appeal was in time. By restoration of the suit the decree had ceased to exist and therefore there could have been no appeal after it was set aside. It is only in consonance with the principle underlying the Law of Limitation that suits, appeals and other legal proceedings are possible only when there is some cause of action, or ground of appeal or other grievance on which the plaintiff, appellant or applicant has a right to come to Court and ask for relief. It cannot be the intention that parties should start legal proceedings in circumstances when it would be futile for them to do so.

The plaintiff filed a suit for possession, being the auction-purchaser at a Court sale, and the defendant, a purchaser from the judgment-debtor by a private sale, set up that the purchase in Court-auction was vitiated by lis pendens. The 1st Court finding against that, held, that the private sale was a transaction intended to defeat other creditors of the judgment-debtor including the plaintiff and gave a decree to the plaintiff for possession on condition of his paying a large amount to the defendant equal to the amount which the latter had paid in discharge of certain simple money debts of the judgment-debtor. The plaintiff appealed to have the amount reduced but the defendant did not file a cross-appeal or memorandum of cross-objections. At the hearing of the appeal the defendant wanted to claim that the purchase by the plaintiff was vitiated by lis pendens.

Held, that so long as there was a substantial compliance with the rules, and the acquisition was made for a purpose contemplated by the Act and not with any ulterior motives, the acquisition was valid. If the agreement for recoupment of the cost of acquisition was subsequent to the acquisition, there can be no question of its validity and it does not make any difference for section 6 whether it was prior or subsequent. Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Order 22, rr. 12 and 4—Pendency of execution proceeding—Death of judgment-debtor—Substitution of legal representative—Fresh application, if necessary.

A money decree-holder put in the last of the execution petitions within twelve years of the date of the decree but it appeared that the judgment-debtor had not been heard of for eight years with the result that the presumption as to his death was drawn and thereupon the decree-holder put in a fresh application for impleading the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. The latter application was however filed more than twelve years after the date of the decree and was challenged as being barred by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that the question of abatement did not arise in execution proceeding, that the legal representative could be substituted as party in the original execution petition which was filed within time and was pending, and that a fresh application for that purpose was unnecessary. Effect of rules 4 and 12 of Order 22, Civil Procedure Code, considered.

Res judicata—Court which tried the prior suit must be competent to try the subsequent suit.

Where in a suit brought before a District Munsif pleas were raised as to the benami nature of a mortgage transaction and as to the discharge of the amount due under it and both were dismissed, and the same pleas were raised in defence in a suit to enforce the mortgage amount for Rs. 3,600 before a Subordinate Judge,

Held, that the defendant was not barred by res judicata from raising the pleas, for, in order to constitute res judicata the Court trying the prior suit must be competent to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue, but the subsequent suit itself, in which the issue is subsequently raised.

Civil Procedure Code, O. 33, r. 9—Death of Pauper plaintiff—Heir, not a pauper—If can be dispaupered—R. 9, if applies to a substituted plaintiff.

Where the original plaintiff to whom permission was given to sue as a pauper died and his heir was added as legal representative, the heir can be dispaupered under O. 33, r. 9, if he himself—taking his private property into account—is not a pauper. If it was open to dispauper the original plaintiff, then such proceedings can, by reason of S. 146, Civil Procedure Code, be taken against his heir, who claims under him.

Civil Procedure Code, Order 41, rule 23—Inherent power of remand of appellate court—Extension to cases where specific provision made under the Code—Legality of.

The inherent power of remand by the appellate court, apart from Order 41, rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, does not extend to cases for which there is specific provision, as, for instance, under Order 41, rules 25, 27 or 28.

Where a Lower Appellate Court purported to remand a case under its inherent power, in cases covered by any one of these rules, it is an illegal or a materially irregular exercise of its jurisdiction by the lower appellate court and the High Court will interfere under section 115 of the Code.

S.A. No. 1646 of 1927.

Civil Procedure Code, Order 2, rule 2—Legacy—Suit for interest alone—Subsequent suit for the principal—Absence of succession certificate at the time of the first suit—No provision for interest in the will—Executors agreeing to pay interest—If a separate agreement for purposes of Order 2, rule 2—Later suit if barred.

A testator by his will directed that a certain amount should be paid by the executors to the plaintiff. There was no provision for payment of interest on the legacy. The executors agreed to pay interest on the legacy but declined to pay the principal unless a succession certificate was produced. The plaintiff brought a suit in 1918 for interest due till then. She later obtained a succession certificate and brought this suit for the principal.

Held, that the suit was not barred by reason of Order 2, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, because

(i) she was not at the time of the prior suit "entitled to make any claim" in respect of the principal without a succession certificate.

51 All. 439 (P.C.) applied.

There is no difference for purposes of Order 2, rule 2 whether it is a case under the Pensions Act or Succession Certificate Act as in both cases, the certificate is not a condition precedent to the suit but can be produced before the decree.

8 C. 422 and 18 M. 466 referred to.

(ii) The provision for payment of interest was a separate agreement, the will itself containing no provision for interest and as such the causes of action for the two suits were different.

... Respondents.

Contract—Rescission by mutual consent—Evidence.

In an action for damages for breach of contract brought by the respondents, shipowners, against the appellant, a shipper, the latter admitted the contract and the non-performance of it, and pleaded that the contract had before breach been duly rescinded by mutual consent. All the evidence upon the vital issue of rescission had before the hearing been taken on commission, and the Trial Judge had, therefore, not had the advantage of seeing the witness in the box. The Trial Judge held that the appellant had made good his plea of rescission and dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal, the Appellate Bench of the High Court, however, held that the appellant had failed to establish his case of rescission, and decreed the suit.

On further appeal to the Privy Council, held that the judgment of the Appellate Court expressed on the evidence was the only conclusion judicially permissible.

Appeal No. 4 of 1929 from a decree of the High Court, Calcutta, Appellate Side (Rankin, C.J. and C.C. Ghose, J.), dated 20th January, 1928, reversing the judgment of Buckland, J., sitting on the Original Side, dated the 28th June, 1927.

The material facts of the case are stated sufficiently fully in their Lordships' judgment.

H. du Parcq, K.C. and Hyam for appellant.

Leslie Scott, K.C. and Robert Aske for respondents.

4th March, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD BLANESBURGH.—This was an action for damages for breach of a contract made on 2nd February, 1925, to ship 2,000 tons of rice from Rangoon to Mediterranean and Black Sea Ports by any of the respondents' steamers in March or April, 1925, at steamer's option. The action was brought by the respondents, the shipowners, against the appellant, the shipper, in the High Court of Calcutta in its original jurisdiction. The contract was admitted, and performance of it was not set up.

The appellant's answer to the claim against him was that the contract had before breach been duly rescinded by mutual consent. Separately, if the contract did remain in force, the amount claimed was excessive. The respondents had not minimised their damage, as it was their duty to do. These two issues, raised by the appellant, were substantially the issues at the trial.

All the evidence on both sides had before the hearing been taken on commission and for the most part at Rangoon. This was probably inevitable. The action depended at Calcutta. But it was at Rangoon that the transactions in question had all been carried out between the representatives there of the respondents and the appellant, and these representatives on both sides were still resident at that place.

The result of the procedure adopted has, however, been an embarrassment to every tribunal subsequently called upon to deal with the case. Upon the vital issue of rescission there is an acute conflict of testimony between witnesses not shown to be unworthy of credit. It might accordingly have been of the greatest help to the Trial Judge in determining where the real truth lay to see all these witnesses in the box. With their evidence taken on commission, he remained as dependent as was the High Court upon the printed record alone. All Courts again have suffered from the fact that taken on commission none of the evidence was adduced under the personal direction of the learned Judge who had to decide the dispute. It does not seem to be doubtful that in the present case if Mr. Justice Buckland's presiding influence had been available while the evidence was being taken questions which have ceased to be, if they ever were, important would not have become preponderant, while the testimony upon the vital issue in acute controversy would have been made more complete than in many important aspects and on both sides it is left.

Upon this incomplete printed material to which both Courts were so relegated, divergent conclusions have been reached. Mr. Justice Buckland was, upon the evidence, of opinion that the appellant had made good his plea of rescission, and by a decree of the 28th June, 1927, he dismissed the respondents' action with costs. On appeal by them to the Appeal Court, the learned Judges there came to the conclusion that the appellant had failed to establish his case of rescission and on the 24th January, 1928, that Court allowed the respondents' appeal, decreed the suit, and directed an inquiry to ascertain the damages sustained by the respondents through the appellant's breach of contract.

Hence the present appeal. The defendant-appellant seeks to have the decree of dismissal restored. He is content, however, if the judgment of the Appeal Court is in other respects to stand, that the inquiry as to damages shall go as directed by its decree. The Board accordingly is concerned only to determine whether the appellant has or has not established in evidence his plea of rescission.

In this task their Lordships have been greatly assisted by the elaborate and most carefully-expressed opinions of Mr. Justice Buckland at the trial, and of the learned Chief Justice, who, on appeal, delivered the judgment of the Appeal Court. A perusal of the two judgments discloses quite clearly the stages at which they diverge, and their Lordships thereby dispensed from again going over all the ground which with such care has been judicially explored in both Courts, are in the result enabled, more compendiously to expose their reasons for the conclusion which, in the result, they have themselves reached.

The appellant is a merchant of Calcutta, with a branch business at Rangoon. He is represented there by Mr. Sadeq Ispahani, who was alone concerned on the appellant's side in the transactions now in question. It will be convenient to refer to him as Mr. Sadeq.

The respondents, plaintiffs in the action, are a company owning a line of steamships trading with the East. Their headquarters are at Venice. They are represented at Rangoon by Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Co., a well-known firm of Indian merchants, with a branch there, of which Mr. Arthur Ellison Forster was manager at the time.

Amongst Gillanders' agencies at Rangoon two only enter into the story—their agency for the respondents, and their agency for the Lloyd Triestino Steam Navigation Company, as owners of the S.S. Numidia.

The appellant is an extensive shipper from Rangoon, and Mr. Sadeq was, it appears, in frequent association with Gillanders as representing shipping companies whose vessels trade with that port. In October, 1924, he had engaged with them, acting on behalf of the Triestino Company, for the carriage, by a January-February, 1925, shipment, of 1,000 tons of rice from Rangoon to Mediterranean ports. That time limit fixed for shipment was important to the appellant. He was under contract with buyers of the rice at the ports of destination upon terms which could not be fulfilled by any later shipment. The Numidia of the Triestino Line, timed to arrive at Rangoon in February, was in due course appropriated to the contract, and it was in these circumstances that, on the 28th January, 1925, Mr. Sadeq was informed by Mr. Vertannes, a representative of Gillanders, that according to advices just received the Numidia was delayed in her voyage and could not reach Rangoon in February. It is now common ground—and the fact becomes of real importance in the sequel—that this information was first given to Mr. Sadeq on the day named, and not later. His earlier recollection, as reflected in the appellant's original written statement, apparently was that the information reached him after the contract now being sued on had been made, and not before. This, however, was not so. It results from his admission—it may be more correctly described as his assertion in evidence—that he had been so informed five days before he made the contract at all. It is in the light of that fact, amongst others, that the question in suit has to be determined: whether four days later the contract entered into by Mr. Sadeq in that knowledge was in turn rescinded at his instance in the circumstances he states.

Mr. Sadeq's account and explanation of the rescission may be summarized as follows. On the 2nd February when he engaged space for the 2,000 tons of rice by the respondents' firm, he had no actual buyers of the cargo in prospect. As prospective buyers he was looking to those who had already taken up the cargo to be shipped on the Numidia. By the 6th February, however, he realised that owing to the late arrival of that vessel he would be in such difficulties with these buyers that he could not hope, so soon afterwards, to make any further sales to them, and it might be difficult to obtain other buyers. He became therefore desirous of being relieved of the contract of the 2nd February. He had something to offer in return, because Gillanders, in his view, were liable to the appellant in substantial damages in respect of the Numidia's late arrival. Mr. Sadeq's proposal on the 6th February, made by him, as he says, to Mr. Forster, accordingly was that in consideration of the appellant renouncing all claims for damages in respect of the late arrival of the Numidia, Gillanders on behalf of the respondents would cancel the appellant's contract of the 2nd February. And Mr. Forster, so Mr. Sadeq says, agreed on the respondents' behalf, to this proposal. No one else was present, and Mr. Forster denies that he made or could have made any such agreement.

Now, it must, their Lordships think, be conceded, that if that were all, Mr. Sadeq's story, disputed as it is, does not carry conviction. He does not explain with any effect why it was that the late arrival of the Numidia, which did not stop him from engaging this tonnage on the 2nd February, should only four days later have impelled him, if he could, to relinquish it. And there is evidence as to the market scarcity of freight at both dates sufficient to lead him both to obtain and to retain the tonnage as an ordinary business transaction. And Mr. Sadeq produces no protest from any of his buyers of date earlier than the 9th February. He does, it is true, suggest almost casually, that his information as to the late arrival of the Numidia was more definite by the 6th than it had been on the 2nd February. But that is a very different thing from having had no information at all on the 2nd, and, moreover, no support in any direction is forthcoming for the suggestion that Mr. Vertannes's intimation of the 28th January was not completely specific or that it needed or obtained any later confirmation. But these are only preliminary difficulties in Mr. Sadeq's way. There are others. He does not suggest that as between the appellant and the respondents he had any ground upon which he could ask for a gratuitous cancellation of his contract. He recognised, if his request was to be acceded to, that some consideration to somebody for the cancellation must proceed from the appellant, and while their Lordships are ready to go far in crediting Mr. Sadeq with the belief—however mistaken—that a release of Gillanders from a personal liability would justify them in procuring for him a gratuitous release from the respondents whom they also represented, the proposal, if ever made, must have impressed Mr. Forster very differently. For one thing, it was beyond reason that the late arrival of the Numidia could have involved Gillanders in any personal liability at all to shippers by her. But, more important far, the suggestion of Mr. Sadeq, if made in the terms and for the inducement deposed to, must at once have struck Mr. Forster as a proposal not to be listened to; one which it would be dishonourable for Gillanders to accept or even to entertain.

Further, if the proposal was made, it is hardly possible that Mr. Forster, so far as appears, an honourable business man, could have forgotten it. Yet he has no recollection of it at all. His recollection of the interview deposed to after a two years' interval was vague. It related, as he recalled it, only to Mr. Sadeq's difficulties in regard to the appellant's Numidia shipment, and had nothing to do with his contract with the respondents. And confirmation of this is not wanting in what subsequently happened. According to Mr. Sadeq's statement, as their Lordships understand it, the appellant in consideration of the release was to stand by his contract with the Triestino Company, making, however, no claim in respect of the Numidia's late arrival. He was himself to settle with his buyers. What subsequently happened, however, shows that Mr. Sadeq treated that contract as entirely at an end, for ultimately Gillanders secured for the appellant, by the respondents' steamship San Michele, which sailed from Rangoon for Mediterranean ports in February, room for 850 tons of the appellant's rice, destined for the Numidia.

Mr. Sadeq was quite unable to give any sensible reason why Gillanders, agents of the Triestino Line, were entitled or should have troubled to render him this service through the Venice Line if, as his case was, his contract in relation to the Numidia stood but with all liability in respect of her late arrival, so far as concerned the appellant, at an end.

All these considerations make Mr. Sadeq's story unlikely. But his preliminary difficulties are not even yet ended. The transaction was undoubtedly important. Mr. Sadeq so regarded it. Yet no memorandum of it exists. None was made or sent by Gillanders either to their principals, the respondents or to Mr. Sadeq. More remarkable still, no note of it was made or sent by Mr. Sadeq to Gillanders. The contract rescinded had been the subject of a memorandum in writing sent to Mr. Sadeq. Its rescission four days later remains unrecorded anywhere.

These difficulties in the way of the appellant's case are formidable indeed and they were, in their Lordships' judgment, unduly discounted by the learned Trial Judge. But even so, it seems clear, that if there had been nothing more to be considered he, too, would have held that the appellant had failed to establish his plea of rescission. His conclusion that he had proved it really resulted from his finding that, as it happened, although all unknown to Mr. Sadeq, cancellation of the contract of the 2nd February was, on the 6th February, as much to the relief of Gillanders as it could be to the appellant. As a result of inconsistent instructions from the respondents, Gillanders were then embarrassed as to the March-April tonnage, and he finds corroboration of his resulting view that rescission had really been agreed to in the fact which he holds proved that Gillanders within a few days were offering the surrendered tonnage to another shipper. Above all he is unfavourably impressed by the respondents' failure to call as a witness Mr. Stewart, the one member of Gillanders' staff to whom all the facts were known at first hand, and who could have resolved one way or another the uncertainty in which the whole matter is left by the incomplete evidence on both sides.

The real difference between the Appeal Court and the learned Judge is to be found at this stage. The learned Judge did not, in the view of the Appeal Court, correctly appreciate the position. Gillanders' embarrassments were less serious than he supposed. The absence of Mr. Stewart from the witness-box, however regrettable, did not prove the appellant's case. And their Lordships find themselves in general agreement with the Appeal Court. Indeed the action of Gillanders, so far as it is proved, suggests to their minds that no desire to cancel the appellant's contract with the respondents had, on the 6th February, even been expressed by Mr. Sadeq. As to the assertion that the appellant's reserved tonnage was subsequently on offer by Gillanders, while they agree with the learned Judge in their appreciation of its seriousness, they are unable in the circumstances to regard it as proved.

It seems to their Lordships to be established that in early February, 1925, there was a demand generally for March-April tonnage from Rangoon in excess of the expected supply. On 6th February Gillanders had before them a cable from the respondents of the 2nd February in which they expressed a desire to cancel to the extent of 4,000 tons the space for these shipments which Gillanders had been authorised to let. Before receipt of that cable all the authorised space was under offer or had been let. The appellant had taken 2,000 tons of it. In these circumstances it seems to their Lordships that on the 6th February, if the request were then made by Mr. Sadeq as he says, Mr. Forster while presumably not in a position to accede to it without further instructions, must at least have informed his principals that 2,000 tons could be freed if they desired that smaller quantity. Gillanders, however, did nothing of the kind. What, in fact, happened was that on the 7th February Mr. Vertannes cabled for authority to let further tonnage.

All this, as it seems to their Lordships, so far from negating, tends to support the view that Mr. Sadeq's request, if it were ever made, was not appreciated by Mr. Forster and was certainly not granted.

The second circumstance on which the learned Judge relies is more cogent.

There was taken on commission a mass of evidence directed to show that the respondents had not minimised their loss. The point stressed in cross-examination of their witnesses was that they had not accepted from Messrs. Steel Brothers, another Rangoon firm of shippers, an offer to take the vacant tonnage, after they knew in March, 1925, that the appellant was relying on the fact that his contract had been duly rescinded. As his very last witness, the appellant, with a view to proving his case on this point, called a Mr. Matthew, assistant manager of Steel Brothers, knowing nothing, as their Lordships were informed, of what the witness would say. Quite unexpectedly Mr. Matthew deposed that Gillanders in February, 1925, themselves offered Steel Brothers 2,000 tons March-April shipment by the Venice Line at rates which were in fact identical with those to be paid by the appellant and that Steel Brothers, by a counter-offer made as early as the 16th February, 1925, offered 2s. 6d. per ton less, and that Gillanders did not accept it. With reference to this evidence, Mr. Justice Buckland's finding is very express:

"I regard it as established beyond all question," he says, "that an offer of space was made to Steel Brothers in the terms to which this witness speaks." And the importance of the finding he summarises later as follows:—

"No explanation whatever consistent with the plaintiff company's case is suggested of the offer to Steel Brothers which will exclude it having reference to the 2,000 tons of space booked by the defendant firm."

In other words, this evidence showed that the 2,000 tons could only be free as the result of the rescission deposed to by Mr. Sadeq.

Their Lordships appreciate the force of the learned Judge's reasoning. At its face value Mr. Matthew's evidence is most important, and its importance is heightened by the conflicting evidence from Gillanders as to the relevant bookings, and by the absence from the witness box of Mr. Stewart, who was the one person to make all these things plain. But their Lordships have to ask themselves whether this statement of Mr. Matthew's is by itself sufficient to displace on the direct issue not only the sworn evidence of Mr. Forster, but all the other matters to which they have referred, and which together make the appellant's case so difficult of acceptance. In their judgment it is quite insufficient for that purpose, and they cannot but feel that the learned Judge himself would have hesitated to act upon it with the confidence he did if he had been more impressed than he was by those serious preliminary difficulties in the appellant's way, which their Lordships have detailed. And Mr. Matthew's evidence, circumstantial as superficially it appears to be, is by no means completely convincing. It was not directed at all to the issue of rescission, and it is quite clear from their questions to the witness that counsel on neither side realised at the time that it might have a material bearing upon that issue. Accordingly, there was neither examination nor cross-examination as to his means of knowledge nor as to the circumstances of the alleged offer, nor anything in relation to it. Nor can it be assumed, as their Lordships think, that the offer if made as stated necessarily related to the respondents' tonnage. Further, as to the failure of the respondents to call Mr. Stewart, the failure was, their Lordships think, most regrettable. But it has to be noted that not only was the possible bearing of Mr. Matthew's evidence not appreciated when it was given, but he was the appellant's last witness, the respondents' evidence having been concluded some time before. At that stage it seems to have been common ground—or at least the view of the appellant's advisers—that Mr. Stewart's evidence would have been valuable only on the quantum of damages to which question so much of the evidence taken was being directed.

Their Lordships think it unnecessary to canvass the matter further. On the whole case, and even without having heard the learned counsel for the respondents, they are led to the conclusion that the judgment of the Appeal Court expressed on the evidence the only conclusion judicially permissible. They think, with the learned Chief Justice, that the appellant has not shown Privy Council—Special leave for appeal to—Grant of, on grounds found to be untenable at hearing of appeal—Objection to competence of appeal taken at hearing on ground of—Procedure on—Petition by respondent for rescission of order granting leave—Necessity.

Where it appeared at the hearing of an appeal for which special leave had been granted that the ground on which such leave was applied for and granted did not in fact exist and that the appeal was therefore incompetent, held, that their Lordships were competent to advise His Majesty that, on the facts as disclosed at the hearing, the appeal should not be further entertained.

Held further, that, as the objection to the competence of the appeal was put in the forefront of the respondents' case, a petition by them to have the order in Council giving the special leave rescinded was unnecessary.

Costs of the appeal provided for as per the terms as to costs imposed by the order granting special leave.

Appeal No. 66 of 1927, by special leave, from a decree of the High Court, Allahabad, dated the 22nd February, 1916, reversing the decree, dated the 27th September, 1913, of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, and dismissing the plaintiffs' suit.

For purposes of the present report it is sufficient to set out below the order of the High Court refusing leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The learned Judges (Mears, C.J. and Banerji, J.) said:

“The facts of this case are these. The plaintiffs, who claimed to be zemindars, applied to the Revenue Court for partition of the abadi land lying within the ambit of their zemindari. Certain persons came forward with objections asserting that they were proprietors of the sites of their dwelling-houses and that those sites could not be included in the partition for which the plaintiffs had applied. The Revenue Court referred the plaintiffs to the Civil

Court and directed them to establish their right in regard to the plots held by the persons who had preferred objections in the Revenue Court. These persons claimed to be the descendants of one Abdullah Shah and were called "Pirzadas". Their allegation was that Bhalol Lodhi, one of the Lodhi Kings, had made a grant of the village to Abdullah Shah, that the descendants of Abdullah Shah were the proprietors of the land, and that these defendants, as such descendants, were proprietors of the sites of their houses. The Court of first instance made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, we may mention, had valued their suit at Rs. 5,100 and they had included in their claim 18 complete plots and portions of two other plots, altogether 20 plots. It was in respect of these 20 plots that the case was fought in the Court below and also in this High Court. From the judgment of the learned Judges of this Court it appears that the dispute raised by the defendants related to the plots which were in the occupation of persons known as "Pirzadas" and not in respect of any other plots in the abadi. This Court reversed the decision of the Court below and dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs against the defendants.

"The plaintiffs have now applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and it is alleged on their behalf that the decision of this Court indirectly affects property of the value of over Rs. 10,000 and that as this Court reversed the decision of the Court below, they are entitled as of right to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is stated in their affidavit that there are 527 plots of land in the abadi of which only 20 were in dispute in the present case, and that a decision in the present case would affect the remaining 507 plots, and the value of those plots, if added to the value of the 20 plots in dispute in this suit, would exceed Rs. 10,000. It is denied on behalf of the opposite party that the decision in the present case would affect any plot of land in the abadi which is not in the possession of one of the descendants of Abdullah Shah and who is not known as "Pirzada". This appears to be clear from the judgment of this Court and from the pleadings in this case. It is not shown in the affidavit of the applicants that there are other plots besides the 20 plots in dispute in the present case which are in the occupation of "Pirzadas" and would necessarily be affected by the decision in the present case. It is also not suggested or shown what those plots are and what the value of those plots may be. Therefore the plaintiffs have failed to show that there is any other plot in the abadi which the decision in the present case would directly or indirectly affect. In this view the application of the plaintiffs must fail. No question of general importance is involved in the case as the dispute was limited between the particular plaintiffs and the particular defendants and the class of persons known as "Pirzadas," who are the descendants of Abdullah Shah. The decision cannot affect any other property and any other class of tenants and therefore we are not satisfied that this is a case which we should certify to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The application is, therefore, rejected with costs."

By an order in Council, dated the 23rd July, 1923, the plaintiffs were granted special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

De Gruyther, K.C. and Wallach for appellants.

Abdul Majid for respondents.

Majid for respondents objects that special leave should not have been granted, as there was no proof that the appeal even indirectly affected property valued at more than Rs. 5,100, which was the value of the suit in the Court of first instance.

Wallach in reply.—Our affidavit shows that there are other plots besides the 20 plots in dispute in the present case which were in the occupation of the Pirzadas and would necessarily be affected by the decision in this case.

[SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—The High Court in refusing you leave to appeal distinctly point out that the decision will not affect any other plots except those in suit.]

I submit that if the decision of the High Court stands, other plots in the abadi will be affected.

[LORD BLANESBURGH.—There is no evidence to that effect. Your affidavit does not support it.]

The High Court is in error in stating that there is no question of general importance involved.

[LORD BLANESBURGH.—In your petition to the Board for special leave, you do not base your case on the ground of the question being of general importance, but merely that your title to the other plots would be affected and that consequently the limit of Rs. 10,000 was reached. Leave was not asked for nor granted because of the general importance of the question.]

[LORD RUSSELL.—The facts now disclosed to the Board show that special leave ought not to have been granted.]

[SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—It is open to the Board, notwithstanding that special leave was given, to declare that the appeal is not competent.]

[LORD BLANESBURGH.—We can still advise His Majesty that the appeal be not further entertained.]

13th March, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD BLANESBURGH.—In this case, on the 23rd July, 1923, as the result of an ex parte application by the appellants, their Lordships humbly advised His Majesty that special leave should be granted to the applicants to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a decree which had been made against them by the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad on the 22nd of February, 1916. The leave was so advised upon special terms as to the costs of the respondents, who are a very large body of holders of small properties in the abadi of the zemindari belonging to the appellants. The application was made by the appellants upon the ground that the decree against which they desired to appeal not only directly affected the properties claimed by the respondents, which did not themselves exceed in aggregate value the sum of Rs. 5,100, but that it indirectly affected the title of the appellants to other properties in the abadi, the aggregate value of which was far in excess of Rs. 10,000. An application for leave to appeal had on similar grounds been unsuccessfully made by the appellants to the High Court, but their Lordships make no reflection adverse to the appellants upon the terms in which their further application for special leave to appeal was made to the Board.

The respondents, however, have, in their printed case, stated as their first reason for affirming the decree that special leave to appeal should not have been granted because, as they say, there is no proof that the order appealed against indirectly affected the appellants' title to any property at all. As the result of the full investigation into all the facts and circumstances of an extremely complicated case which, with the assistance of counsel, their Lordships have now been able to make, they are quite satisfied that no plots of land in the abadi of the appellants' zemindari other than those claimed by the respondents are in fact affected by the decision appealed against. Indeed there is, in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, whose decree in their favour of the 27th September, 1913, the appellants seek to have restored by this appeal, a statement which proves that the other plots in the abadi to which the appellants have referred, stand, with regard to the zemindars, in a position quite different from those of the respondents.

In these circumstances this objection taken to the competence of the appeal, now that it is shown to be well founded, becomes of compelling importance. The respondents, a veritable crowd of people of slender means, have had their titles to their properties upheld by the decree of their own High Court. Only in the most exceptional circumstances, would it be right to require them further to defend their title before the Board. No provision for their costs, however adequate, can be their sufficient protection against the risk involved.

It appears, accordingly, to their Lordships, that this appeal against them should not proceed further. Nor, as the objection to its competence is put in the forefront of their case, does it appear to the Board to be necessary that the respondents should be required by petition to apply that the order in Council giving the special leave should be rescinded. In the circumstances it will suffice if their Lordships advise His Majesty, as they will humbly do, that on the facts as now disclosed this appeal should not be further entertained. In fulfilment of the offer made by the appellants when they obtained special leave to appeal they must now provide for the respondents' costs as between solicitor and client, and the order as to costs will be to that effect.

The properties now in dispute originally belonged to the respondent's father Chiranjit Singh, and yielded an annual income of Rs. 3,100. He died in May, 1901, having left a will, dated the 16th March, 1901, and a widow Gopi Kunwar, and a daughter, Ram Dei (plaintiff-respondent), by another deceased wife. By his will Chiranjit Singh gave certain properties, yielding an annual nett income of Rs. 1,000 to his widow Gopi Kunwar for her life with a reversion to his daughter, Ram Dei, and devised and bequeathed the rest of his properties to his daughter absolutely.

The said Ram Dei, on the 31st August, 1918 (when she was 23 years of age) executed a power-of-attorney in favour of the appellant, Oudh Behari Lal, for management of her estate. On the 30th April, 1919, she executed a Tamliknama endowing all her properties in favour of Sri Thakurji Maharaj, appellant No. 1. The deed provided, amongst other things, that out of the annual income of the endowed properties, she was to get Rs. 600 a year for her maintenance for her life. It further provided that if "at the time of her death no male issue born of her be alive, then in every case Oudh Behari Lal (i.e., Appellant No. 2) and after him his male issue shall be entitled to get the annual maintenance of Rs. 600 generation after generation".

On the 29th April, 1920, the plaintiff Ram Dei instituted the present suit to recover back possession of the said endowed properties on the allegation that she was an inexperienced purdanashin woman ignorant of legal proceedings who had been induced to put her signature on the deed of endowment, dated the 30th April, 1919, in consequence of the said Oudh Behari Lal exercising fraud and undue influence on her and without giving her an opportunity to think over and understand the matter and take independent advice.

The said Oudh Behari Lal and the other defendants filed written statements denying the plaintiff's allegations.

The Subordinate Judge framed several issues on the pleadings, but the following issue alone is material:—

"Was the Tamliknama in question executed by the plaintiff of her own free and independent will or owing to the fraud or undue influence of any of the defendants, and is the deed liable to be cancelled?"

The learned Judge held that it had not been proved that the plaintiff executed the Tamliknama owing to fraud practised on her by any of the defendants, but he found that the deed in question had been executed by the plaintiff under the influence of Oudh Behari Lal, Appellant No. 2. In the course of his judgment, he said:

"I am of opinion that it was Oudh Behari Lal's undue influence that led Ram Dei to execute the document. There is not much direct evidence on the point, nor could there be. But the circumstances of the case are quite sufficient to bear out the plaintiff's case."

The suit having been, accordingly, decreed, the defendants appealed to the High Court, and the learned Judges were of opinion that the finding of the Trial Court on the issue of undue influence was right. Mr. Justice Mookerji, in the course of his judgment, observed as follows:—

"Oudh Behari Lal was the nearest male relative of Musammat Ram Dei's father and had performed the ceremony of giving her away at the time of her marriage. Ordinarily, therefore, Oudh Behari would be regarded as the guardian of the plaintiff. The use of the word 'guardian' in respect of a female who has attained the age of majority may sound queer, but according to the custom of the country a female seldom acquires independence and she is mostly under the guardianship or care of some male relative, near or distant. . . It is clear that Musammat Ram Dei came under the influence of Oudh Behari Lal and that Oudh Behari Lal acquired a position to dominate the will of her. . . At the date of the execution of the deed of endowment she was a woman of 23. She was a purdanashin lady, and for all practical purposes a woman of no education. She was cut off from her husband and his relations. . . Thus, Musammat Ram Dei had very little hopes of love or protection from her husband or his relations: She was thus entirely thrown on the mercy and goodwill of Oudh Behari Lal who was her father's cousin and closest neighbour. It is also common ground that Oudh Behari took up the management of the plaintiff's property. It was thus that he assumed the position of almost a father towards Musammat Ram Dei. If then we find that the deed of endowment is to the material advantage of Oudh Behari Lal we must call upon him to explain how it came to be executed."

The learned Judge, after examining the deed, came to the conclusion that the principal object of the endowment was to benefit Oudh Behari Lal and his issues at the expense of even the children of Musammat Ram Dei, and he concluded his judgment in the following words:—

• "Examining the deed closely, I have not the least doubt that in the garb of an endowment the document was meant to benefit Oudh Behari Lal, who, as I have already pointed out, was in a position to dominate the plaintiff's will. Oudh Behari has entirely failed to explain the genesis of the will. If we put to ourselves the questions which were put to themselves by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi,¹ we shall see at once that the deed of endowment cannot stand. I hold that the document is voidable owing to the undue influence exercised by Oudh Behari Lal on the plaintiff. This would be enough for the success of the plaintiff."

Mr. Justice Ashworth, in a concurring judgment, added:

"I would point out that it was not necessary to hold that the plaintiff had proved undue influence affirmatively. The facts clearly show that Oudh Behari Lal was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff and that the document was so unreasonably in favour of Oudh Behari Lal as to justify its being held to be unconscionable. The burden of disproving undue influence was therefore on Oudh Behari Lal. This burden of proof is of importance because if the burden had been the other way it might have been impossible for the plaintiff to rule out by her evidence the possibility of her having executed the document in a state of resentment against her husband. So long as the burden of proof is placed on the defendant this mere possibility will not help him. If it were placed on the plaintiff it might be sufficient to prevent her being held to have established affirmatively undue influence."

LORD THANKERTON.—This appeal raises what appears to be mainly, if not entirely, a question of fact. The facts found in both Courts below disclose that there was a relation of confidentiality between the two parties mainly concerned in the execution of the deed in question, and, further, those findings establish what appears on the face of the deed itself, that the deed was clearly harsh and unconscionable as regards the interests of the respondent. That being so, it was clear that it was essential for the appellants to excuse themselves from what would otherwise be the necessary implication arising on those facts. Both Courts below have found that there is no evidence on the part of the appellants which can afford such an excuse, and their Lordships are not prepared to disturb these concurrent findings. Accordingly they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Kuppuswami
Nayagar,
*In the matter

A succession certificate can be granted by the High Court on its Original Side under the provisions of the Indian Succession Act of 1925 as amended by Act XVIII of 1929.

Original Petition for the grant of a succession certificate under Part X of the Indian Succession Act by the High Court on the Original Side. The petition came on before Kumara-swami Sastri, J., in the first instance.

The referring order of the learned Judge was as follows:—

This is an application for the grant of a succession certificate in respect of certain shares standing in the name of the deceased, and the question is whether a succession certificate can be granted by the High Court under the provisions of the Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925).

The Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) has been repealed and its provisions have been incorporated in Part X of the Indian Succession Act. In the Succession Certificate Act, "District Court" was defined as meaning a Court presided over by a District Judge, and as the provisions of that Act referred to a District Court, no applications were made to the High Court for grant of succession certificates, as that Act in terms gave power only to District Courts to grant succession certificates.

There is no definition of "District Court" in the Indian Succession Act, and we have to fall back on the definition of "District Judge" in the General Clauses Act (X of 1897). Section 3, sub-clause (15) of the General Clauses Act defines "District Judge" as the Judge of a Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction but shall not include a High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary or Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

Part IX of the Indian Succession Act deals with the grant of Probate and Letters of Administration, and Chapter IV commencing with section 264 deals with the practice in granting and revoking Probates and Letters of Administration, and section 264 to 302 in Chapter IV refer only to the District Judge as the Judge who is to grant probate or letters of administration, and there is no power given to the High Court as such in this chapter.

Section 264 refers to the District Judge as having jurisdiction in granting and revoking Probates and Letters of Administration and the other sections also refer to District Judge.

Section 300 gives concurrent jurisdiction to the High Court. But concurrent jurisdiction can only give the High Court power in such cases where the District Judge would have had the power.

It does not confer any independent jurisdiction on the High Court. Section 300 says that

Kuppuswami
Nayagar,
*In the matter
of,*

“the High Court shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge in the exercise of all the powers hereby conferred upon the District Judge.”

In dealing, therefore, with the definition of District Judge, I think the same interpretation should be given to the word “District Judge” in Chapter IV, which refers to the grant of probates and letters of administration, as in Part X which gives the District Judge jurisdiction to grant succession certificates. It seems to me that if the definition of “District Judge” excludes the High Court altogether, the High Court cannot grant probate or letters of administration under the Indian Succession Act.

Clause 34 of the Letters Patent which gives the High Court jurisdiction in testamentary and intestate matters runs as follows:—

“And We do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Madras shall have the like power and authority as that which may now be lawfully exercised by the said High Court, in relation to the granting of probates of last wills and testaments, and letters of administration of the goods, chattels, credits, and all other effects whatsoever of persons dying intestate, within or without the Presidency of Madras: Provided always that nothing in these Letters Patent contained shall interfere with the provisions of any law which has been made by competent legislative authority for India, by which power is given to any other Court to grant such probates and letters of administration.”

The definition of “District Judge” as given in the General Clauses Act means a Judge of a Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction, and this would apply to the High Court but with a proviso, and the proviso is that it shall not include a High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary or Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

Ordinary and Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court is dealt with in clauses 11 to 21 of the Letters Patent. The heading is “Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court,” and clauses 11 to 21 deal with Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction and Insolvency Jurisdiction. Clauses 22 to 30 deal with Criminal Jurisdiction. Clause 31 deals with the exercise of jurisdiction outside the ordinary place where the High Court sits. Clauses 32 and 33 deal with Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Jurisdiction. Section 34 deals with Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction.

Kuppuswami
Nayagar,

It is argued by Mr. Tirunaryana Chariar that, under the Letters Patent, the High Court in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction only means the High Court exercising jurisdiction conferred by clauses 11 to 21 of the Letters Patent and cannot refer to any other Civil Jurisdiction (for example, granting probate) and that except when the High Court is exercising Ordinary Original Jurisdiction conferred by clauses 11 to 21, when the word District Judge is used, it must be taken to include the High Court when it exercises Original Civil Jurisdiction in matters such as granting probate, etc.

I think there is a distinction between the Original Jurisdiction of the High Court and the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court. All applications to the High Court are either civil or criminal. They are Original Civil when matters come for the first time to the High Court, and they are Appellate Civil when they come in the form of appeals. The granting of probates or succession certificates will come within the Original Civil Jurisdiction, but it would not come under Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, which, by the Letters Patent, seems to be confined to suits and matters under clauses 12 to 21, which refer to the exercise by the High Court of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

In *In the matter of Candas Narrondas. Navivahu v. C. A. Turner*¹ the Privy Council considered the various jurisdictions conferred on the High Court by the Letters Patent and held that the Insolvency Jurisdiction was part of the Original Civil Jurisdiction having regard to the grouping of the clauses in the Letters Patent. Their Lordships at page 532 refer to clauses 11 to 18 as a group of clauses headed "Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court" and they deal with this as one group.

Their Lordships observed:

"Sections 11 to 18 are a group of clauses headed 'Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court'. Sections 11 and 12 describe the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction which is said to extend to all kinds of suits within those limits except Small Cause suits. Section 13 gives to the High Court power to remove, and to try as a Court of Extraordinary Original Jurisdiction any suit falling within the jurisdiction of any Court subject to its superintendence, when it shall think proper, either on agreement of the parties, or for the purposes of justice. Sections 15 and 16 confer appellate jurisdiction. Section 17 confers authority over infants, idiots and lunatics. Section 18 ordains that the Court for relief of insolvent debtors shall be held before one of the Judges of the High Court, and that the High Court and any such Judge shall have powers as are constituted by the laws relating to insolvent debtors in India."

Kuppuswami
Nayagar,

I think this case supports the view that for the purpose of determining the meaning of the words Ordinary or Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction in section 3, clause 15 of the General Clauses Act, all that is excluded is the High Court acting under clauses 11 to 18 of the Letters Patent and that the High Court exercising any other Original Jurisdiction would fall within the definition of District Judge.

There is no reason why the High Court cannot grant succession certificate in cases where it could be granted outside Madras. Part X of the Indian Succession Act gives the limitation under which it could be granted. It cannot be granted where the law requires Probate or Letters of Administration to be produced, and there is no question of any evasion of stamp duty. There is no reason why there should be a facility for persons outside Madras in respect of collections of small debts and securities, such facility being denied to those in Madras.

The Indian Succession Act codifies the whole law on the subject, and repeals the Succession Certificate Act, and the omission in the Indian Succession Act of the definition of "District Court" given in the Succession Certificate Act is, I think, a matter which deserves notice in construing the definition of "District Judge". As I said before, the District Court is the Court which is referred to in the granting of Probates and Letters of Administration and it cannot be contended that the words "District Court" in those sections exclude the High Court.

I may state that in the Probate and Administration Act of 1881, "District Judge" is defined as meaning the Judge of a Principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction which obviously took in the High Court. But the Probate and Administration Act has been repealed by the Indian Succession Act of 1925 and the definition is omitted. So far as the succession certificate is concerned, it partakes the nature of a limited grant. Various forms of limited grants have fallen under the jurisdiction of Courts dealing with intestate matters in England (Tristram and Coote, p. 224), and I can see no difficulty in the High Court granting succession certificates under its general jurisdiction as regards matters falling within its Intestate Jurisdiction, unless wherever compelled by the definition of the words "District Judge" in the General Clauses Act, to hold that the High Court has no jurisdiction.

Kuppuswami
Nayagar,
of.*

For the reasons given by me, I am of opinion that, having regard to the Indian Succession Act of 1925, which has repealed both the Probate and Administration Act and the Succession Certificate Act, and incorporated the provisions of these Acts in the body of the Indian Succession Act and has omitted to define the words "District Judge" leaving us to fall back on the definition of "District Judge" in the General Clauses Act, the High Court is a "District Court" when it does not exercise its Ordinary or Extraordinary Civil Jurisdiction conferred by clauses 11 to 18 of the Letters Patent.

As the matter is one of considerable importance, and is opposed by the Collector, and as several applications are likely to be filed for the grant of succession certificates, I think it is desirable that the question should be settled by a Bench.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. VI, R. 5—Order directing the defendant to give particulars within a certain time—No provision in the terms of the order for striking out the defence on default—Failure to comply with the order—Power of Court to strike out the defence.

Where an order is made under Order VI, Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code directing the defendant to give particulars within a certain time and the defendant fails to comply with the order within that time, the Court has jurisdiction to strike out his defence, even though it has not been made a term of the order that the defendant, on making default, shall be liable to have his defence struck out.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—In this suit the plaintiff is the Official Assignee, representing the estate of Dumaine & Co., who have been adjudged insolvents. Dumaine & Co., it appears, were exporters of groundnuts, and in the course of their business they pledged a large quantity of groundnuts to the Nedungadi Bank, who are the defendants, received loans on these groundnuts, sold the groundnuts to various persons in other countries and had them shipped by the defendants, who received the bills of lading and the bills of exchange drawn on the purchasers and applied the proceeds of the bills of exchange after getting them discounted by another bank towards the repayment of the loans they had made to Dumaine & Co., crediting the balance to Dumaine & Co. The Official Assignee in this suit alleges that the defendants have not accounted for 7,169 bags of groundnuts and prays that they may be delivered to him or their value, about Rs. 1,50,000, or in the alternative that this sum of Rs. 1,50,000 may be paid to him as damages for conversion. The defendants after some delay put in their written statement. The plaintiff applied for an order for particulars, which was made by the Master. Eventually, when this matter came up before the learned Chief Justice on 15th November, 1929, the particulars had not been given in full, and the plaintiff applied that the defendants should be dealt with for contempt or that their defence should be struck out. The learned Chief Justice made an order that their defence should be struck out. The present appeal is against that order.

Mr. Doraiswami Aiyar, who appears for the defendants, contends first that the learned Chief Justice had no jurisdiction to make that order, and secondly that it was not in the circumstances a proper order to make. It will be convenient to deal with the question of jurisdiction first.

Rule 5 of Order 6, Civil Procedure Code, provides that a further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and, otherwise, as may be just. Mr. Doraiswami Aiyar contends that that rule does not empower the Court to strike out the defence of the defendant if he does not give particulars when ordered to do so under the rule; and he has asked us to contrast that rule with R. 21 of O. 11, Civil Procedure Code, which provides that, where any defendant fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents he shall be liable to have his defence struck out. Mr. Doraiswami Aiyar argued that the penalty of having the defence struck out is explicitly provided for in R. 21 of O. 11, but that it is not mentioned in R. 5 of O. 6, and that, he urges, is very significant. There is a contrast between the two rules. But, as Mr. Grant who appears for the plaintiff has pointed out, Order 11 does not deal with pleadings, and, therefore, it may have been thought necessary that, if the penalty for failure to answer interrogatories or to give discovery or inspection was to be provided in the shape of striking out pleadings, it should be explicitly set out, though that might not be necessary in an order dealing with pleadings and their amplification by particulars. It is interesting to notice that both R. 5 of O. 6 and R. 21 of O. 11, Civil Procedure Code, correspond to Rules of the Supreme Court in England. There is just the same contrast between R. 21 of O. 31 and R. 7 of O. 19 of the Rules of the Supreme Court as there is between R. 21 of O. 11, and R. 5 of O. 6 of our Code, and yet the contrast was not held by the Court of Appeal to be of any significance in Davey v. Bentinck,¹ which dealt with the dismissal of a suit for failure to give particulars and is equally applicable to striking out a defence for failure to give particulars. In that case a plaintiff was ordered to give particulars and a further order was made that, if he did not do so within a certain date, the suit would be dismissed. It was argued that R. 7 of O. 19 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, corresponding to R. 5 of O. 6, Civil Procedure Code, did not justify the dismissal of the suit because it only provided for particulars being called for upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as might be just, and the contention was that the terms could only be in respect of costs or some incidental matter. The Court of Appeal did not accept that contention. They held that under the Rules of the Supreme Court a condition might be added to the order for particulars that, if they were not given by a certain date, the suit should be dismissed. In this case it happened that, when the Master made an order for particulars, he fixed a date for those particulars to be given; but he did not say in so many words that, if the particulars were not given by that date, the defence would be struck out. Does that really make any difference in the matter? Mr. Doraiswami Aiyar's contention is that, because that threat was not added to the order, the defendants may take up the position that they were not warned that their defence would be struck out. But, if we examine the matter, I do not think that the absence of the threat or warning really makes any serious difference except in one respect. If the Master had said "Particulars must be given within a certain time, otherwise the defence will be struck out," except on an appeal from his order there might have been great difficulty in extending the time for giving particulars; but, as he fixed the time without any such penalty being explicitly added, the Court of course could have extended the time. There is no doubt about that. As a matter of fact on appeal Eddy, J., did not extend the time. I understand that, when the matter came up before the learned Chief Justice on 15th November, 1929, an oral application was made to him that he should extend the time. Undoubtedly that could have been done. But, when a time was fixed and the defendants disregarded it, they knew that they did so at their peril. The time might be extended: the time might not be extended. And, if the time was not extended, what would be the result? The particulars, which the Master had found necessary and which Eddy, J., on appeal had found necessary for the case, would not have been given. That means that the written statement of the defendants was an incomplete, insufficient and ineffective defence, and the result would simply be that the position of the defendants would be practically equivalent to that of a defendant who had put in no defence. If that is the correct way of viewing the matter, when the learned Chief Justice did not extend the time any further, the position was that the defendants had not put in a proper defence, and the case would naturally and properly go to the undefended board. Does it make any difference that the learned Chief Justice has added the words "I should strike out the defendants' defence," which do not appear in R. 5 of O. 6 of the Code. To my mind it makes no difference whatever. There is only one Indian case which has been quoted before us, dealing directly with this matter, Gauri Shankar v. Musammatt Manki Kunwar.² In that case a Bench of the Allahabad High Court considered what the procedure in such a matter should be and gave directions to subordinate Courts how they should act in connection with orders for particulars. In the judgment of the learned Judges it is said that "Subordinate Judges should, when ordering particulars to be given, order the party in default to pay a specified sum of costs to the other side for the costs occasioned by the application, such payment should be made on or before the delivery of the particulars. If the order is disobeyed and the plaintiff is in default, he should have his action stayed, and, if the defendant is in default, his defence should be struck out". That appears pretty clear. But it has been suggested that what the learned Judges meant is only that, if the order for payment of costs is disobeyed, the defence of the defaulting party should be struck out. Let us examine that for a minute. What is contended is that, should the Court order particulars to be given and also order the defendant to pay costs at the time of filing his particulars, if he gives the particulars only but does not pay the costs, then his defence is to be struck out. Surely, a fortiori, if he does not give the particulars at all, the learned Judges would be of opinion that his defence should be struck out. I have no doubt that the learned Judges held the view that, when a defendant has been ordered to give particulars by a certain time and does not give them by that time or within the extended time, if there is an extension, his defence should be struck out. With that opinion I agree. That being so, it appears to me that the learned Chief Justice certainly had jurisdiction to make the order which he has made in this case.

There remains the question whether it was an appropriate order or rather whether it was an order with which there is any sufficient reason for us to interfere in appeal.

[The learned Judge after discussing with the evidence concludes]

In my opinion there is no sufficient reason for us to interfere with that order and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Cornish, J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. It has been contended that when an order is made under R. 5 of O. 6, Civil Procedure Code, for delivery of particulars, the Court has no jurisdiction to strike out the defence unless it has been made a term of the order that party on making default shall be liable to have his defence struck out. No doubt R. 5 of Order 6 contains no provision similar to the provision in R. 21 of O. 11 that a defendant who does not comply with an order for discovery shall be liable to have his defence struck out. But no similar provision in R. 5 of O. 6 is necessary, because R. 16 of O. 6 (and O. 6 is the order governing pleadings generally) contains the appropriate provision. Rule 16 of O. 6 says that

“the Court may at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out any matter in any pleading which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit.”

Now the whole object of obtaining particulars is to get a clearer or fuller statement of the opponent's case, so that the party applying for particulars shall not have to go to trial embarrassed by the obscurity or incompleteness of the case which he has to meet upon the pleadings. It seems to me, therefore, that the party who has been ordered to deliver particulars of his defence within a given time and fails to do so, comes within the reach of R. 16 of O. 6, and runs the risk of having his defence struck out unless he is able to satisfy the Court that he has some good excuse for not having complied with the Court's order. I think that in this case the more correct form of application would have been to strike out paragraphs 4 and 8 of the written statement. But this is not a point of substance, for it happens that the effect of striking out the pleas in those paragraphs is to leave the defendants with no defence, so that the result is the same. In my view, therefore, the Court had power under O. 6, R. 5 to make the order striking out the defence. The power to strike out a defence is a discretionary power. On the materials placed before us I am not prepared to say that the learned Chief Justice did not exercise his discretion rightly. But this aspect of the case has been fully dealt with by my learned brother and it is not necessary for me to add anything to what he has said.

A Bank which has lent money on a mortgage in spite of the prohibition by its Memorandum of Association to lend money on mortgages is entitled to sue on the mortgage to recover the money lent.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastriar, dated the 7th day of March, 1929, and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in C.S. No. 212 of 1928.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of our brother Kumaraswami Sastri, J., decreeing a suit by the Bank of Mysore based on a mortgage deed, dated the 6th May, 1925, for Rs. 1,00,000.

The plaint (paragraph 6) alleges that the defendants paid on the whole Rs. 18,672-2-0 up to 6th February, 1927, which the plaintiff Bank appropriated in a particular manner. The suit is to recover the balance. The defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraph 6 of the plaint but plead that "on account of the relationship existing between them and at their request, the said Sir Haji Ismail Sait has paid to the plaintiff the entire amount due on the mortgages referred to in the plaint. The actual date of the payments are not known personally to these defendants but they are informed and believe the same to be true that by 3rd March, 1926 or thereabouts the payments aforesaid by Sir Haji Ismail Sait were completed". The defendants also pleaded in the course of the trial as probalising the above plea of discharge that Sir Haji Ismail Sait had a large sum of money amounting nearly to two lakhs belonging to them in his hands and that the payments made by Sir Haji Ismail Sait were made out of those funds. A third plea which was not raised either in the written statement or in the issues or at the trial before the Court below is that the Memorandum of Association of the plaintiff Bank prohibits the Bank from lending on mortgage, and the suit transaction is, therefore, void as being ultra vires and is not enforceable at the instance of the plaintiff.

Ahmed Sait
v.
The Bank of Mysore, Ltd.

The last point will be taken up first. The learned Advocate for the appellants relied on the decision in *Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche*¹ and the decision in *Sinclair v. Brougham*² which follows it. In the first case it was held that a transaction which was ultra vires of the company could not be enforced against it. In the latter case questions of priority arose between the outside creditors, the unadvanced shareholders and the depositors of a building society formed under the Building Societies Act of 1836, the assets being insufficient to pay off all the claimants and it was held that the depositors were not entitled to priority over other claimants as the contracts of loan were ultra vires. The question before us is not similar to the questions raised in those two cases. In Brice on the Doctrine of Ultra Vires it was laid down that "property legally and by formal transfer or conveyance transferred to a corporation is in law duly vested in such corporation, even though the corporation was not empowered to acquire such property". Under the Indian Law a mortgage is a transfer of interest in immoveable property. The case of *Ayers v. South Australian Banking Co.*³ is given as an illustration. There the transaction was ultra vires as it was prohibited by the charter of the company. Still it was held that the company could recover and Mr. Brice observed that the reasoning applies equally to reality. Another case relied on by the learned Advocate for the respondent is In re Coltman, Coltman v. Coltman,⁴ in which the Court of appeal reversing the judgment of Fry, J., held that all contracts which were ultra vires were not necessarily illegal. This was a case of the trustees of a friendly society. In *Turner v. The Bank of Bombay*⁵ it was held by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., and Tyabji, J., confirming the judgment of Russel, J., that notwithstanding section 37 of the Presidency

Banks Act, the Bank was entitled to realise money lent on equitable mortgages. The above-mentioned decision in the *Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche*¹ case was referred to by Russel, J., and the decision in *Ayers v. South Australasian Banking Co.*² was applied and followed by the learned Judges. For examples of the same principle *The National Bank of Australia v. Cherry*³ and *G. E. Railway Co. v. Turner*⁴ were also relied on. Russel, J., observes that it is unfortunate that the words "ultra vires" should be used to describe two classes of cases, namely, those which are merely ultra vires and those which are also illegal. Following the above decisions we think that the Bank of Mysore is entitled to sue. It is unnecessary to describe what exact position the Bank occupies with reference to Sir Haji Ismail Sait on the facts of the case, that is, whether the Bank is a benamidar or a trustee or an agent of an undisclosed principal or does not occupy any of those positions.

I now proceed to the merits of the case of the three defendants.

[The learned Judge then discusses the evidence and concludes]

On a proper reading of the documentary and oral evidence in the case it is clear that the defendants' plea of discharge must be found against.

Agreeing with the Trial Judge we dismiss the appeal with taxed costs. We certify for two counsels.

The proceedings before the Court in the case of a reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act are in the nature of objections to the Collector's award and not a judicial inquiry independently undertaken into such questions as the claimant may raise and, therefore, it is not open to the claimant to make out a fresh case before the Court on such a reference, whether by way of supplementary claims to compensation or otherwise.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the Principal Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, dated 8th November, 1928, and made in I.A. No. 348 of 1928 in O.P. No. 11 of 1928 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam.

The Government Pleader for petitioner.

Salem Ramaswami Aiyar for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This petition is preferred by the Secretary of State against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam in a land acquisition case. Certain land of the respondent was acquired and under section 10 of the Act (I of 1894) he put in a claim to compensation which was made up of the value of the land, of some cocoanut trees, and of two walls, together with a sum claimed as compensation for depreciation of his property. In due course an award was made and subsequently the respondent asked the Collector under section 18 to refer the matter for the determination of the Court. Before the Court he supplemented his claim by the addition of two new items, the cost of constructing new walls and the cost of erecting latrines. It was objected on behalf of the Government that the Court had no power to entertain such newly preferred claims. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, found that in certain circumstances section 25 gave him jurisdiction. He disallowed the claim in respect of the latrines but allowed it in respect of the walls. Against the latter part of the order this petition is filed.

Section 25 of the Act, upon sub-section (3) of which the Lower Court has relied, runs as follows:—

Section 25. (1) When the applicant has made a claim to compensation, pursuant to any notice given under section 9, the amount awarded to him by the Court shall not exceed the amount so claimed or be less than the amount awarded by the Collector under section 11.

(2) When the applicant has refused to make such claim or has omitted without sufficient reason (to be allowed by the Judge) to make such claim, the amount awarded by the Court shall in no case exceed the amount awarded by the Collector.

The Secretary of State for India in Council

v.
Sabramania Aiyar.

(3) When the applicant has omitted for a sufficient reason (to be allowed by the Judge) to make such claim, the amount awarded to him by the Court shall not be less than, and may exceed, the amount awarded by the Collector."

It will be seen that the section is concerned with the maximum and minimum amounts which the Court may award in each of the three cases: (1) where the applicant has made a claim before the Collector, (2) where without sufficient reason he has failed to make a claim, and (3) where with sufficient reason he has so failed. In the last of these cases the minimum is not to fall below the amount of the Collector's award, but no maximum has to be observed. That, it appears to me, is all that the section says, and I can read into it no authority whatever for the course which the Subordinate Judge has found himself open to take under it. It deals with the amount of compensation and not with the grounds upon which compensation should be awarded, and I see no reason to hold that because the amount awarded by the Collector may be exceeded, therefore grounds other than those on which the award was made may be entertained.

If, therefore, it is open to the Court to entertain fresh grounds, it must be by virtue of other provisions of the Act, or at least those other provisions must not conflict with such a course. Sections 23 and 24 respectively lay down what matters the Court shall, and what it shall not, take into consideration; but I do not think that it is sufficient to find the item of claim admissible under section 23 to hold that the Court may grant it. Under section 9 claims to compensation for all interests are to be made to the Collector, and under section 15 the Collector, equally with the Court, is to be guided by the terms of sections 23 and 24. In all ordinary circumstances, therefore, a claimant can and should present his case fully before the Collector, and should be held bound throughout the proceedings by what may be termed his pleadings. Turning then to section 18, it enables a person interested to require the Collector to refer the matter for the determination of the Court, "whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of the compensation, the persons to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested." Under sub-section (2) he has to state the grounds on which objection to the award is taken. The proceedings before the Court are thus of the nature of objections to the Collector's award, and not a judicial inquiry independently undertaken into such questions as the claimant may raise. On this view, it would not be open to a claimant to make out a fresh case, whether by way of supplementary claims to compensation or otherwise. The point is practically bare of authority, the only apposite case cited to me being a decision to this effect by a Judge of the Punjab Chief Court in Umar Bakhsh v. The Secretary of State.¹

It is objected that it ought to be within the power of the Court where, as here, grounds have been shown for failure to make the claim, or some part of the claim, before the Collector, to entertain it. I agree that section 25 might well have been so drafted as to provide not only, as it does, that the amount may be enhanced but that fresh grounds may be adduced; but in point of fact it does not so provide. Hardship from the absence of such a provision is not likely to arise often or in an acute form, and is, of course, no justification for the Lower Court's action if jurisdiction so to act is lacking. I allow the revision petition and set aside the order so far as it declares the claim admissible. Respondent will pay petitioner's costs in this Court.

A claimant under the Land Acquisition Act is not required necessarily to make his claim in writing so long as he makes a claim for compensation but the claim must be for a precise or specific amount.

It is in the discretion of the Land Acquisition Officer to grant an adjournment to the person interested in the land to make a claim.

Per Curgenvu, J.—There is never any question of the land acquisition proceedings going by default. Even if the person interested in the land does not appear and make a claim, the Land Acquisition Officer must, to the best of his discretion, find out the true value of the land and make his award of compensation.

Beasley, C. J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appellant was served with a notice under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), Exhibit A. The date upon which he was called upon to appear was the 21st September, 1926. According to the Land Acquisition Officer the appellant did not appear on the 21st September. According to the appellant he did appear but appeared late and the Land Acquisition Officer was angry with him, but nevertheless allowed him to make his claim orally at a later date and allowed him to file two sale-deeds in respect of land close by the land under acquisition. On the 1st December the Land Acquisition Officer made his award and in that award he commenced by stating, "The landowner did not turn up and make any claim in response to the notice issued under sections 9 and 10 of the Act. He, however, filed copies of two sale-deeds which give a rate of Rs. 2,400 and Rs. 2,450 an acre" and then he proceeded to deal with those sales and show how those lands were distinguishable from the land comprised in the award and he eventually valued the land under acquisition at Rs. 1,800 per acre and awarded compensation accordingly with 15 per cent. allowance extra under the Act. The appellant was dissatisfied with this award and requested the Land Acquisition Officer to refer the case to the Court. It was accordingly referred by him to the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry on the 27th January, 1927. In that letter of reference the Land Acquisition Officer stated that the landowner did not turn up on the date of hearing fixed for enquiry and hence the amount of compensation awarded need not be enhanced under section 25 (2) of the Act.

Subbanna
v.
The District Labour
Officer, East

Beasley, C. J.

It is quite clear that, under section 25 (2) of the Act, if the applicant—the appellant in this case—has omitted without sufficient reason (to be allowed by the Judge) to make a claim, the amount awarded by the Court is in no case to exceed the amount awarded by the Collector; and therefore the point for consideration by the learned Subordinate Judge was whether the appellant had made any claim for compensation. It is argued here by Mr. Somasundaram on behalf of the appellant that the appellant did make a claim. First of all, he contends that the evidence of the appellant is to be accepted on this point, namely, that the Land Acquisition Officer gave him an adjournment and that he made a claim and supported it by the filing of these two sale-deeds already referred to. Admittedly two sale-deeds were filed because they were considered by the Land Acquisition Officer and are dealt with by him in his award. But the Subordinate Judge after hearing evidence on the point has not accepted the appellant's evidence that he made any claim. He regards his evidence as most improbable.

This case can be considered in two views, viz.: (1) that the appellant did not turn up on the 21st September or turned up too late, but nevertheless the Land Acquisition Officer said that he might bring forward his claim at a later date and that the applicant made a claim for compensation and as evidence of his claim produced these two sale-deeds, or, (2) that, having failed to turn up on the 21st September, the Land Acquisition Officer nevertheless allowed him to file the two sale-deeds. In the former alternative I am of the view that the provisions of section 9 (2) of the Act would have been complied with because the claimant is not required necessarily to make his claim in writing so long as he makes a claim for compensation and it is in the discretion of the Land Acquisition Officer to grant him an adjournment. Supposing he does not make a claim on the first day the Land Acquisition Officer can, if he chooses, adjourn the hearing and allow him to make a claim and, in support of this view we were referred to the decision of the Punjab Chief Court in Secretary of State v. Sohan Lal.¹ In that case the claimant did not put in a claim on the appointed date, but subsequently put in a written claim and it was held by the Punjab Chief Court that that was a sufficient compliance with the Act. But in this case there is no written claim at all and we merely have the evidence of the claimant himself that he made a claim and that evidence has not been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge; and we

v.

Officer, East

see no reason for disagreeing with the view he has taken with regard to that evidence. The case, therefore, is this that the claimant made no claim at all. He did not appear on the appointed day and therefore under the Act the Land Acquisition Officer had to use the best judgment he could and make his award in the absence of any claim. The mere fact of his having considered the two sale-deeds does not justify the argument that he must be held to have treated the amounts therein as the valuation placed upon the land by the claimant. It was his duty to make use of all the information available. Having made such an award it was not open to the Court to make any award in excess of the amount awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer. But we are asked to say that the filing of the sale-deeds amounted to making a claim for the amount which the sale-deeds show that the adjoining lands were sold for, namely, in the one case Rs. 2,400 and in the other Rs. 2,450 per acre and it is contended that that is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 9 (2) which is as follows:—

“Such notice shall state the particulars of the land so needed, and shall require all persons interested in the land to appear personally or by agent before the Collector at a time and place therein mentioned (such time not being earlier than fifteen days after the date of publication of the notice) and to state the nature of their respective interests in the land and the amount and particulars of their claims to compensation for such interests, and their objections to the measurements made under section 8. The Collector may in any case require such statement to be made in writing and signed by the party or his agent.”

In this case the claimant was not required in the notice to make any statement in writing but we are satisfied that he did not like to make any statement orally. He placed no specific value upon the land, he did not state the nature of his interest in the land but merely contented himself with putting in the sale-deeds. Does that justify us in drawing the inference that the amount set out in the sale-deeds was the amount which he was claiming in respect of the land which was under acquisition? I am of the opinion that it is not open to us to do that because section 25 (1) says:

“When the applicant has made a claim to compensation, pursuant to any notice given under section 9, the amount awarded to him by the Court shall not exceed the amount so claimed or be less than the amount awarded by the Collector under section 11.”

The claimant has got to claim an amount. I am satisfied from a reading of that section and the other sections that a specific amount has got to be claimed. In these cases it is common for claimants in support of their claims to put in sale-deeds many in number and varying greatly in the amount of the purchase price. If no claim for specific amount is made, what amount is the Court to infer as claimed by the claimant? It may be the top purchase price or it may be the lowest purchase price or it may be the average purchase price, but no specific amount having been claimed if this contention is right it would be open to a claimant after an award has been made by the Land Acquisition Officer or by the Collector to go to the Court and say:

"The amount awarded is less than the amount which I really claimed. It is quite true that the evidence shows that other lands were sold for certain amounts but my real claim was for more than those amounts and I am entitled to an enhancement of the award made by the Land Acquisition Officer."

In my view, that contention is unsound. What the Act does require is that there should be a specific claim, namely, a claim which states in rupees the value the claimant places upon his property; and there has been no such claim here and, in my view, the provisions of section 9 (2) of the Act have not been complied with. This was the only point of importance which the learned Subordinate Judge had to consider and, disbelieving the evidence of the claimant, he came to the conclusion that no claim had been made and that, therefore, it was not open to him to consider any enhancement of the award made by the Land Acquisition Officer. I agree with him in his findings both on the facts and with regard to the law. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Curgenvven, J.—I agree with my Lord and have little further to add except to point out that the first 'point for determination' framed by the learned Subordinate Judge, upon which this appeal has been preferred, does not really set out the scope of the case as it has been presented before us. The terms of that 'point' were whether the appellant appeared before the Land Acquisition Officer on the date fixed in the notice served on him and if not whether he had sufficient reasons for the omission. I should preferably have so framed it as to refer expressly to the terms of section 25 (2) of the Act, namely, whether the appellant omitted to make a claim for compensation pursuant to any notice given under section 9, and, if so, whether he had sufficient reason for the omission. The question for our determination, as my Lord has said, is whether what the appellant did, amounted to making a claim. There is certainly no evidence that he made any claim on the 21st September. As regards what happened on the 18th November, when he filed the two sale-deeds, he himself has stated in cross-examination that he filed a statement along with them. But even so, he does not claim that the statement comprised a precise claim to an amount of compensation, and his allegation is contradicted by the evidence of the Revenue Inspector. We must take it accordingly that either the mere filing of the sale-deeds constituted an implied claim or that no claim at all was made. It seems clear to me that according to the terms of section 25 (1) a claim must embody a precise amount claimed because that sub-section provides that the amount awarded may not exceed the amount so claimed. It may very well be, as decided in Secretary of State v. Sohan Lal,¹ that the mere circumstance that the claim was not made upon the date fixed in the notice does not deprive the Collector of jurisdiction to entertain it. Every Court and every officer exercising quasi-judicial functions has, I think, an inherent power to grant an adjournment. The case more apposite to the present one is *Orient Bank of India v. Secretary of State*² which dealt with what was contended to be a claim but which was not in fact a legally sufficient claim, preferred by the Bank in a land acquisition case. There too a sale-deed was filed and it was actually a sale-deed which included the property acquired. I think, therefore, that it is an untenable position to take up here that a claim in accordance with the terms of section 9 (2) was put in, nor am I prepared to say that in accepting the sale-deeds and in appreciating the evidence which they afforded the Collector waived the necessity for such a claim, whether or not he had jurisdiction to do such a thing. Under section 11 of the Act he is to enquire into the objections, if any, and make his award of the compensation which in his opinion should be allowed. There is never any question of such proceedings going by default. He must, to the best of his discretion, find out the true value of the land and I can see no objection to his using any material, even when it may be supplied by the applicant, without giving rise to the implication that he has recognised that a claim as required by the Act has been preferred. I agree accordingly that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Venkata-

Nagamma.

A mortgage was executed by the owner and subsequently a second mortgage was executed over the same property to another person by the transferee of the equity of redemption. The first mortgagee filed a suit on his mortgage impleading the owner and the transferee of the equity of redemption as defendants but without impleading the puisne mortgagee as a defendant, obtained a decree for sale and the property was purchased by one of the sons of the transferee of the equity of redemption in execution of the decree. This purchase was made after a decree for sale was passed in a subsequent suit instituted by the puisne mortgagee on his puisne mortgage in which he impleaded the transferee of the equity of redemption and his sons as defendants. Afterwards, the property was again sold under the decree in the puisne mortgagee's suit and bought by a stranger who obtained possession in execution. The purchaser in the first mortgagee's suit brought a suit for recovery of possession of this property and prayed that, if he could not recover it, the purchaser in the puisne mortgagee's suit might be made to pay compensation.

Held, in second appeal—

(1) that, the puisne mortgagee not having been made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit, his rights were not in any way affected and the auction purchaser in his suit secured a valid title subject to the first mortgage interest vested in the purchaser in the first mortgagee's suit. Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasamy Chettiar, (1915) I.L.R. 40 Mad. 77: 30 M.L.J. 347 referred to;

(2) that the purchase of the property by one of the sons of the transferee of the equity of redemption in the first mortgagee's suit was affected by lis pendens, the same having been made after the passing of the decree in the puisne mortgagee's suit against him, his father and brother;

(3) that the plaintiff having fought out his claim in the Lower Courts on the footing that the execution proceedings in the puisne mortgagee's suit were void, cannot be allowed to put forward a new claim in second appeal to the effect that the purchaser in the puisne mortgagee's suit should be compelled to redeem him if such a claim would then be barred.

against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Narsapur in O.S. No. 658 of 1921.

K. Bhimasankaran and B. Satyanarayana for appellant.
G. Lakshmanna for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The property in suit was twice mortgaged, first by the original owner, Chenna Peribhotlu, and again by Yegyanna, the purchaser of the equity of redemption. The first mortgagee sued in O.S. No. 369 of 1897, making parties Peribhotlu and Yegyanna (with his sons), but not the puisne mortgagee, and obtained a decree. The puisne mortgagee sued in O.S. No. 184 of 1901, impleading Yegyanna and his sons, and obtained a decree on 15th November, 1901. After this decree, in 1902, the 4th defendant, through whom the plaintiffs (now respondents) claim, purchased the property in Court sale under the prior mortgagee's decree. The property was again sold under the puisne mortgagee's decree and bought by the 3rd defendant, who is the appellant before me. The question for decision is whether the title of the 4th or of the 3rd defendant is to prevail.

An answer in favour of each claimant may, if I construe them correctly, be derived from cases decided by this Court. Broadly stated, the one view is that the auction purchaser at the later sale—here the 3rd defendant—would buy nothing because the saleable interest of the judgment-debtor had already passed to the earlier auction purchaser; the other view is that the puisne mortgagee not having been made a party to the prior mortgagee's suit, his rights would not be in any way affected, and his auction purchaser would secure a title subject to the first mortgage interest vested in the first purchaser. Examples of the former line of argument are *Kutti Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar*¹ and *Venkatagiri v. Sadagopachariar*²; of the latter, *Mulla Vittil Seethi v. Achuthan Nair*³ and Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasamy Chettiar.⁴ In the first of these cases the puisne mortgagee sued first and sold first, and the view taken was that “both the mortgagees have an equal right to sell the property, and once it is sold at the instance of one mortgagee there is no further saleable interest left in the judgment-debtor to be sold again”. That, no doubt, is indisputable. The only question seems to be whether it necessarily settles the point. The next case in order of time is the Full Bench judgment in Mulla Vittil Seethi. v. Achuthan Nair.³ The question referred was whether a first mortgagee who has bought in execution of his decree can sue to eject a puisne mortgagee with possession. The judgment contains an elaborate review of the case-law dealing with the rights of puisne mortgagees. It is urged that many of the observations made are obiter, but I do not think so; the learned Judges begin with the remark that there are conflicting decisions and that the source of the difficulty seems to lie mainly in arriving at a definite conception of the rights of the second mortgagee. What those rights are therefore had to be investigated. It was held that the subsequent mortgagee could not be affected by proceedings to which he was not a party, and 'if the rights of the puisne incumbrancer who was not made a party to the suit of the prior mortgagee are preserved in every respect, the right to sue for sale of the equity of redemption which existed previous to the suit by the first mortgagee must continue to remain after it.' It would seem that if the right to sue for sale remains, the right to sell remains, and with it the ability to give the purchaser a good title. But it would I dare say be going too far to use the passage above cited as authority for the proposition that the second mortgagee may sell behind the back of the first auction purchaser, though indeed the first sale was conducted behind his own back notwithstanding that he was a necessary party to the first mortgagee's suit. This Full Bench opinion was considered by Munro and Sankaran Nair, JJ., in Venkatagiri v. Sadagopachariar,² another case of two competing sales. They remark what is no doubt true, that a different question was referred to the Full Bench, though it was apparently decided that a puisne mortgagee may sue the purchaser of the equity of redemption without redeeming the prior mortgage. Their own view is that the puisne mortgagee has a right to sell the property even after sale by the first mortgagee, but he can exercise that right only after redeeming the prior mortgage.

The rights of the two mortgagees in the matter of sale came up again for consideration by Coutts Trotter, J. (as he then was) and K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., in Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasamy Chettiar.⁴ The several cases which I have alluded to are reviewed by the latter learned Judge. Referring in particular to the argument relied on in Venkatagiri v. Sadagopa- *chariar*² and the cases, that the judgment-debtor's interest having been sold there is nothing left for the puisne mortgagee to sell, he observes that this ignores the fact that the first purchaser purchases it subject to the rights of the second mortgagee to sell; and later on he thus criticizes the opposite view, with cogency, if I most respectfully say so:

"Therefore it comes to this: that the second mortgagee is entitled to, and must bring a fresh suit against the purchaser in the first sale to sell the property for the satisfaction of the second mortgage debt subject to which the first purchaser took, and that the whole of the proceedings taken by the second mortgagee to realize his security, which proceedings were regularly and properly constituted, in which he obtained the decree which he was entitled to get.....become wholly infructuous not owing to any fault of his, but because a purchaser comes into existence pendente lite, whose purchase is in execution of a decree in a suit improperly constituted."

The learned Judges refused to regard the dicta in the Full Bench case *Mulla Vittel Seetha v. Achuthan Nair*³ as obiter, approved them and deemed them to be binding on them, and dissented from *Venkatagiri v. Sadagopachariar*² and other cases to the same effect. At the end of his judgment Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., deduces seven general propositions. The last of these applies to the circumstances of the present case; and I propose to adopt this view of the law in preference to the view that no title can pass by the sale.

One of the conditions laid down in the above cited proposition is that where there has been a sale under the first mortgage the auction purchaser should be made a party. It has not been contended here that that condition was not satisfied. The 4th defendant, who bought the property in the sale under the first mortgagee's decree, is a son of Yegyanna, the transferee of the equity of redemption. The learned District Munsif found, indeed, that this purchase was on behalf of the joint family, in other words, by the holder of the equity of redemption. The learned Subordinate Judge differed from him on this point. The propriety of the Subordinate Judge's finding is questioned here but on the view I take I do not think it is necessary to pronounce upon it. In the second suit Yegyanna and his sons were impleaded as the mortgagors, so that in that capacity the 4th defendant was before the Court which ordered the sale now in dispute. It is perhaps worth repeating that the 4th defendant did not buy the property until after the decree in O.S. No. 184 had been passed against him and his father and brothers. The principle of lis pendens, I think, applies to his purchase.

2. (1911) 22 M.L.J. 129.

3. (1911) 21 M.L.J. 213 (F.B.).

I consider, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to possession of the suit property as against the 4th defendant and the plaintiffs who derive title from him. The 3rd defendant holds the property subject to the first mortgage rights acquired by the purchaser under the earlier sale. The plaintiffs sued for possession and prayed that if they could not recover it, the 3rd defendant might be made to pay compensation to them. Neither of these prayers can be granted. They ask me to compel the 3rd defendant to redeem them. This would be to allow them to put forward newly an alternative case, and ask for an alternative relief, after fighting their claim on the footing that the execution proceedings were void. It appears that the 3rd defendant has been continuously in possession of the property since 1915, and under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act such a claim, if now preferred, would be barred. In these circumstances I do not think that I ought to comply with the request.

The result accordingly is that the second appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed, with costs of 3rd defendant throughout.

Held, on the evidence, that no time was fixed for completion of the sale by the written contract for sale as subsequently varied by agreement, and that it must, therefore, be implied that it was to be completed in a reasonable time.

In a suit by the appellant for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land as varied by subsequent agreement, the main defence of the respondents in the Courts below and before the Privy Council was that the suit was premature. Before the Privy Council, they raised an alternative plea that the appellant had lost his right to specific performance by his delay.

There was no suggestion that the position of the purchaser had been so prejudiced by the appellant's delay in seeking specific performance that it would be inequitable to enforce it. It also appeared that all the delay, such as it was, could not be ascribed to the laches of the appellant, and that the purchaser was professing willingness to complete only a few days before the commencement of the suit.

Held, under the circumstances, that the alternative plea was curious, and that there was in any event no substance in it.

Appeal No. 103 of 1928 from a decree of the High Court, Bombay, dated the 5th December, 1927 (Marten, C.J., and Crump, J.), reversing a decree of that Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 21st January, 1927 (Talyarkhan, J.).

The appellant who was the plaintiff in the suit sued the original defendant for specific performance of an agreement, dated the 18th December, 1920 and for other relief. The defendant died pending the hearing of the suit and the present respondents were substituted as legal representatives.

The Trial Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for specific performance and for the payment by the defendants of certain moneys, the plaintiff's claim in other respects being disallowed. The plaintiff appealed against the decree on certain of the points decided against him; the defendants appealed against the decree on all points decided against them. The Appeal Court (Marten, C.J. and Crump, J.) allowed the defendants' appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and cross-objections, the result being that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs throughout.

The facts of the case, as well as the material terms of the agreement in suit, are sufficiently fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—The dispute in this appeal is as to the appellant's right to specific performance of an agreement for the sale of land. The facts are of an unusual character and make the determination of this question a matter of considerable difficulty.

The appellant was, in the year 1920, the owner of a plot of land with a four-storeyed building upon it situated opposite the Mulji Jetha Cloth Market in Bombay. Parts of the building were in a dilapidated condition, and in February of that year the Municipality served him with notice to pull down certain portions of three of the upper floors which appeared to be dangerous. The appellant was advised to rebuild, and had plans prepared and submitted to the municipal authorities, but they were not approved. Meanwhile, he was in negotiation with one Narandas Thakersey Mulji, who was a director of the Cloth Market Company and interested in the development of the site, which was evidently a valuable one, and on the 18th December, 1920, an agreement was come to between them under which the appellant was to sell and Narandas was to buy an undivided half share in the property which was thereafter to be let out to tenants upon the joint adventure of the two. The terms of this agreement were reduced to writing and it is necessary to set out the more material clauses in extenso:—

"1. The vendor shall sell and the purchaser shall buy an undivided half share in the said property for the sum of Rs. One lac ninety thousand.

"2. The vendor shall forthwith carry out all the repairs and works specified in the said notice. . . . from the Municipality and the purchaser shall pay in addition to the said sum of Rs. One lac ninety thousand half of the expenses incurred in carrying out the requirements of the said notice.

"4. The sale shall be completed within two months from the date of this agreement if the requirements of the said notice are carried out before that period. If the requirements are not carried out within the said period then the sale shall be completed within two weeks after all the said requirements have been carried out and completed and the property is fully occupied by the tenants.

"5. The vendor shall within seven days of the date of this agreement hand over to the purchaser's attorneys all documents of title for investigation of title.

"8. After completion of the purchase the purchaser shall attend to the management of the property and shall collect the rents of the entire property and shall keep regular account thereof."

Then followed detailed provisions for the division of the net rents under which Narandas was to have a preferential 6 per cent. on his capital expenditure, any deficit being made good by the appellant and charged on his moiety of the property, for the creation of a reserve fund, for auction between the parties if either wished to sell his share, and for arbitration in case of disputes. The property was described in a schedule to the agreement as a parcel of land containing by admeasurement 101 square yards or thereabouts "with the messuage tenement or dwelling-house standing thereon," situate at Champa Gully, and bounded, etc.

There is, no doubt, therefore, that the sale was to be of a small but valuable plot with an existing building upon it, and that before the appellant (the vendor) could demand completion and payment of the Rs. 1,90,000 he would have to comply with the terms of the municipal notice above referred to. Their Lordships think that having regard to the reference in clause 2 to "repairs and works" the intention was that the appellant should not merely pull down the portions referred to in the notice, but should also make them good again.

Within a few days after the execution of this elaborate document the parties agreed to a variation, which is the cause of all the difficulty. This new agreement was, unfortunately, not put in writing, and its bearing on the other terms of the original document was not considered. The variation was in effect that instead of complying with the terms of the municipal notice the building should be pulled down and a new building erected on the site, the costs of rebuilding being shared by the parties equally. What the new building was to be, who was to be responsible for its erection, and what it was to cost were matters apparently left over for future discussion, and it is obvious that if the question were whether either of the parties could specifically enforce the agreement as it then stood the answer must be in the negative. But this is not the question which the Board have to decide. The old building was demolished and their Lordships think it is established that this was done by Narandas; a new building was erected by the appellant according to plans approved by Narandas, and the whole cost was paid by the appellant. A conveyance was not executed, though the title-deeds had been with Narandas's solicitors for its preparation since the 20th December, 1920, and no demand was made by the appellant for completion until the 26th March, 1922, when the building itself was nearly finished. From this date onward the appellant, who was anxious to leave for Europe, continued to press, as his letters show, for a conveyance and payment both of the Rs. 1,90,000 and half the building costs. It seems clear, however, that Narandas was not anxious to go on. Probably land values were depreciating and the prospects of the joint venture were fading. On the 7th July his solicitors wrote that the requirements of the municipal notice had not been complied with, and that, therefore, under clause 4 the time for completion had not arrived. To this the appellant replied in effect that clause 4 had no application to the new building.

On the 12th July Narandas's solicitors gave the appellant notice that he must complete the building and get it tenanted within 15 days, failing which their client would hold him responsible for all loss caused thereby. On the 19th July they wrote again to the same effect, but extending the time for completion to the end of that month. There were difficulties as to drainage, and the appellant thought that Narandas was putting obstacles in his way. In August there was a reference to arbitration which dragged on till February, 1923, but proved abortive. The drainage difficulty was still unsolved as the municipality refused to pass the appellant's proposals. On the 28th March, 1923, Narandas's solicitors wrote:

"We are instructed to give you notice to complete the necessary drainage work, obtain the completion certificate and get the property tenanted within three months from the receipt hereof by you, time being the essence of the contract, and we have further to give you notice that if you fail to comply with the above requisitions within the time aforesaid our client will cancel the contract."

This seems to have brought matters to a head, and on the 5th* April, 1923, the appellant started the present proceedings on the Original Side of the High Court. In his plaint he vouched the original agreement, stated that by a subsequent agreement the old building was pulled down and a new one built upon the site, and that it was agreed that the costs of construction of the new building should be shared between him and Narandas. The drainage difficulties were referred to, the alleged obstruction by Narandas, the arbitration proceedings and the depreciation of the property, and the appellant prayed that Narandas should be ordered specifically to perform the original written agreement and to pay to him the Rs. 1,90,000 as the price of the half share sold, and also half the costs of the new building. Other reliefs were asked for which are not now material.

Narandas defended the suit. In his written statement he admitted the agreement of the 18th December, 1920, and the subsequent variation. He denied that he had obstructed the appellant in any way; he relied upon his solicitor's notice of the 28th March, 1923, and said that owing to the appellant's failure to complete the building within the time thereby limited he had cancelled the contract, and he accordingly denied that the appellant was entitled to any relief and claimed the dismissal of the suit.

Paragraph 6 of his written statement with reference to the variation was as follows:—

“After the agreement (meaning the agreement of the 18th December, 1920) was entered into it was agreed between the parties that instead of complying with the terms of the municipal notice the building should be pulled down and a new building should be erected on the site. The original agreement stood varied accordingly.”

No reference was made to the agreement for sharing the costs of the new building, but it was admitted before the Trial Judge and has not been disputed before this Board.

In the Court of Appeal the appellant amended his prayer and asked for specific performance of the original agreement as varied. Their Lordships are somewhat embarrassed by the fact that the actual amendment made is not printed in the record, there being only a quite inaccurate reproduction of the Chief Justice's note of the application to amend.

On the 26th June, 1924, before the suit came to trial Narandas died and the respondents now represent his interests.

The principal question which has been argued in the present appeal is whether clause 4 of the agreement of the 10th December, 1920, applied after the variation. At the time the suit was instituted it is admitted that the new building was still without drainage and was untenanted, and in fact, untenantable. The contention of the respondents was that the effect of the parol variation was merely to substitute the erection of a new building for the partial demolition, and repair of the old building, so that the new building, not having been erected within the two months allowed by the first part of clause 4, the completion of the sale of the half share of the property would have to wait until the building was finished and fully tenanted. Much reliance was placed by the respondents' counsel upon the words in Narandas's statement above quoted (which it was said both Courts had accepted) that “the original agreement stood varied accordingly,” as meaning that apart from the substitution of new erection for repair all the terms of the original agreement were to stand. If this is the true effect of the agreement which the parties made, it is clear that the suit as a suit for specific performance of the contract of sale was premature and must fail; it being admitted by the appellant that the suit was one for specific performance only and not for damages.

The appellant, however, contended that clause 4 had no application to the varied contract and that the effect of the agreement to erect a new building was to relieve him altogether of his obligation to do the repairs necessitated by the municipal notice, and that, therefore, the term for completion fixed under the original agreement as dependent upon the repairs must go out altogether leaving only the implication of law that the contract was to be completed within a reasonable time (Indian Contract Act, section 46). He did not allege any specific agreement that clause 4 should be deleted any more than the respondents alleged a specific agreement for its retention. His contention was that it ceased to be applicable and necessarily disappeared: that its disappearance was consequential upon the dropping of the repairs, and was in no way inconsistent with the statement that "the original agreement stood varied accordingly". This apparently was the effect of the appellant's amendment, and if it is the true construction, it is, in their Lordships' opinion, almost equally clear that the appellant must succeed.

Elaborate and carefully argued judgments were delivered by the Trial Judge and by the two Judges of the Court of Appeal, and upon this point, which, in their Lordships' view, is the pivot upon which the decision of the case must turn, they differed fundamentally. Talyarkhan, J., by whom the suit was tried, sums up his conclusions as follows:—

"For the reasons stated above I find that clause 4 did not apply, and the contract, therefore, became one to be performed within a reasonable time, and, as already stated, all that the plaintiff had to do was to execute the conveyance on receipt of the consideration which both his evidence and his correspondence show he was always ready and willing to do."

The Chief Justice in the Court of Appeal says:

"In the result then I would hold that clause 4 applied to the varied agreement, and that in the events which happened the second branch of that clause applied, and consequently, completion was not to take place until two weeks after the new building had been completed and fully occupied by tenants."

And his colleague, Crump, J., is to the same effect:

"If there was a contract, and admittedly there was, my conclusion is that the time fixed by clause 4 was intended to be applicable mutatis mutandis, and that plaintiff was not entitled to demand a conveyance until the new building was completed and fully tenanted. The plaintiff's suit was therefore bad at the date of the institution. The plaintiff at that date had not performed his part of the contract."

Sir George
Lowndes;

Each of the three judgments discussed at length the conduct of the parties subsequent to the varied agreement. The learned Trial Judge thought it important to see whether their conduct and acts were consistent with the applicability of clause 4, and he was satisfied that neither of them acted in this belief. The Chief Justice, though evidently doubting whether in such a case subsequent conduct was relevant, came on his own analysis of the facts, as disclosed by the voluminous correspondence, to exactly the opposite conclusion, and his learned colleague in the Court of Appeal was of the same opinion; but in their Lordships' view where, as in the present case, the question is one purely of construction, the subsequent conduct of the parties is irrelevant. There is no difficulty here as to the meaning of words, and such cases as *Attorney-General for East African Protectorate v. Watchman*¹ have no application. It may well be, as the correspondence suggests, that Narandas's advisers thought that clause 4 was applicable, and that the appellant thought it was not, and that each acted upon his own belief. The fact that the appellant made no demand for completion of the sale until the new building was nearly finished was not necessarily inconsistent with his present claim. He was trying to induce Narandas to take the other half of the plot off his hands, and may have been waiting for this to eventuate. If he had demanded completion before the new building came into being he might have been met with the objection that the agreement was one and indivisible and too uncertain to enforce. In the same way the fact that Narandas himself demolished the old building and quite possibly kept the proceeds of demolition, and that he retained the title-deeds of the property would be by no means conclusive of his part ownership.

Their Lordships, however, feel no doubt that the question propounded must be decided upon the terms of the written agreement and of the agreed variation construed, so far as may be, in the light of the surrounding circumstances. They feel that there is force in the respondents' argument that the subject of the agreement was essentially something capable of producing profits and that until this was brought into being, either under the original agreement by making the old building tenantable, or under varied agreement by the erection of a new building he was under no obligation to buy. They think that this was so under the original agreement; it seems to be implicit in clause 8; but to say that, therefore, it was of the essence of the varied agreement, comes very near to begging the question. If it were so why was not the obligation to erect the new building laid in terms upon the appellant? Yet, even as pleaded by Narandas in his written statement, no such obligation was imposed, nor was there any indication of what the new building was to be. It was contended in the Courts in India that rebuilding was covered by the terms of the original agreement, but this argument was rightly rejected in both Courts. Before the Board the contention was that as the variation merely substituted rebuilding for repair the obligation was necessarily upon the appellant inasmuch as he had agreed to do the repairs, but this again seems to their Lordships to be rather a forced deduction.

On the best consideration which their Lordships can give to a question of much uncertainty they think that this argument cannot prevail. The subject-matter of the varied agreement—a new building of unknown character and extent, of unknown cost, and to be erected by one or other of the parties, or possibly by both together—was such an entirely different proposition from the execution of certain definite repairs to an existing building to be done by the owner under the requisition of a public authority, that it is, in their Lordships' opinion, impossible either to deduce from the facts or to assume that conditions which were to apply to the latter case would be equally applicable to the former. Their Lordships find themselves unable to draw this conclusion either from the terms of the variation as pleaded by Narandas or from the silence of the parties as to the details of the new scheme. The surrounding circumstances to which it is legitimate to resort throw no light upon the question. It is true that prior to the original agreement the appellant had had plans for a new building prepared, but they had been rejected by the municipal authorities, and it is not suggested that Narandas had agreed to them or that the varied agreement had any relation to them. All that the parties had agreed to was that there should be a new building, the character and cost and the responsibility for the erection of which were left indefinite.

In particular with regard to clause 4 of the original agreement, their Lordships are unable to hold that it was, or must have been, intended to remain applicable to the new development. The appellant may well have been content to wait for his purchase money—for that is all that completion meant to him—until he had done the comparatively small repairs which the old building required; they were quite definite, and apparently could be done without difficulty in the two months; but it can hardly be assumed that he would be equally content to defer his right to payment as indefinitely as the varied contract with clause 4 applying mutatis mutandis would necessitate. Had this been in any sense the intention of the parties their Lordships think that there must have been a much more definite specification of the new building and much more definite provisions as to its erection. That the original agreement was to "stand varied accordingly," if this is to be taken as part of the actual agreement come to and not merely as Narandas's understanding of what was implied, meant no more, in their Lordships' opinion, than that such terms as were applicable to the new scheme should stand, and such as were inapplicable, should go out, leaving it, in the event, for the Courts to decide which were and which were not so applicable.

The result is, as their Lordships hold, that no time was fixed for completion of the sale under the varied contract, and that it must be implied that it was to be completed in a reasonable time, which had clearly elapsed by the date of the institution of the suit.

It was argued by the respondents that even assuming this to be the case the appellant had lost his right to specific performance by his delay. This is in one sense a curious argument: the main defence with which their Lordships have dealt in detail was that the suit was premature; this alternative contention would make it too late. But it is not suggested that the position of the purchaser had been so prejudiced by appellant's delay in seeking specific performance that it would be inequitable to enforce it, and apart from this the Indian Limitation Act* allows him three years to sue. Their Lordships also doubt whether all the delay, such as it was, can be ascribed to the laches of the appellant, who was left to finance the rebuilding without any assistance from his would-be partner, and it is obvious that he was faced with considerable difficulties. It is also clear from Narandas's notice of the 28th March, 1923, that he was professing willingness to complete only a few days before the present proceedings were commenced. Their Lordships think, therefore, that there is no substance in this alternative plea.

The Trial Court and the Court of Appeal differed, as they did on most points, on the question whether the three months limited by this notice was reasonable, but, on the view which their Lordships take of the construction of the contract this question is immaterial.

In the result their Lordships hold that the appellant is entitled to specific performance of the contract of sale and to payment of a half share of the costs of rebuilding.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court, dated the 5th December, 1927, should be varied by reinstating the decree of the Court of first instance dated the 21st January, 1927, the reference therein to the agreement of the 18th December, 1920 being qualified by the addition of the words "subject to the variation referred to in the 6th paragraph of the plaint as amended" but maintaining the High Court's dismissal of the appellant's appeal to them, Appeal No. 14 of 1927. The case will be remitted to the High Court to apportion the costs incurred in the two Appeals Nos. 14 and 22 of 1927, and the appellant will pay to the respondents the costs properly attributable to Appeal No. 14 and will receive from the respondents the costs of Appeal No. 22 together with three-quarters of his costs before this Board. He will pay to the respondents such costs as they may have incurred on this petition for the admission of further evidence.

The question whether there had been such a sale or not is a question of fact, and it does not cease to be such a question merely because some of the items of evidence adduced to prove the sale consist of entries in the record of rights prepared under the Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887).

The question whether a statutory presumption is rebutted by the rest of the evidence is always a question of fact.

Questions of law and fact are no doubt often difficult to disentangle, but, as regards jurisdiction to interfere in second appeal under S. 100 of Civil Procedure Code, the following propositions are clearly established:—

(1) There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of erroneous finding of facts, however gross the error may seem to be.

(2) The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law, but the question whether a fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact.

(3) Where the question to be decided is one of fact, it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which were not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundations of rights but were really historical materials, have to be construed for the purpose of deciding the question.

(4) A second appeal would not lie because some portion of the evidence might be contained in a document or documents and the first Appellate Court had made a mistake as to its meaning.

Judgment of the High Court affirmed.

Appeal No. 31 of 1929, by special leave, from a decree of the High Court, Lahore (Broadway and Fford, JJ.), dated the 3rd January, 1924, affirming a decree of the Additional District Judge of Sheikhpora, dated the 26th March, 1923, which reversed a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Sheikhpora, dated the 20th January, 1923.

The facts of the case may be summarized as follows:—

The plaintiffs-respondents were the mortgagors of the lands in dispute, which they mortgaged to one Miran Bakhsh with possession for Rs. 1,200 by a registered deed of mortgage, dated the 15th March, 1880, for a term of 20 years. The mortgagee agreed to take the rents and profits of the property in lieu of interest on the mortgage-debt, and it was provided that the mortgagors would be entitled to redeem the mortgage after the expiry of 20 years. On the 17th November, 1920, the mortgagors (plaintiffs-respondents) filed the present suit to redeem the mortgage on payment of the mortgage-debt of Rs. 1,200 against the mortgagee and the appellants, who were the purchasers of the rights of the mortgagee.

The appellants (defendants) denied the right of the plaintiffs to redeem the mortgage on the ground that they (the defendants) had purchased the equity of redemption from the mortgagors by an oral sale for Rs. 800 in or about 1892. The mortgagors denied this allegation, and this question was the sole issue for determination between the parties and was found against the appellants (defendants) by the Additional District Judge on first appeal, and the High Court held that it had no jurisdiction to interfere with the said finding of fact on second appeal.

The learned Trial Judge put the issue between the parties in the following words:—

1. Does the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exist between the plaintiffs and defendants 3 to 7?

4. Was the land in suit sold to defendants 3 to 7 by the mortgagors Sultan and Mohammad Bakhsh?

Both parties produced oral and documentary evidence. The plaintiffs (mortgagors) objected at the trial that oral evidence of the sale of the equity of redemption was inadmissible, but the objection was disallowed, and the evidence was recorded.

In proceedings under the provisions of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887, the appellants (defendants) were recorded as landowners in respect of the mortgaged lands in certain revenue papers prepared under section 31 of the Act. The section provides that the record of rights for an estate shall include the following documents, namely:—

(a) Statement showing so far as may be practicable—

(1) the persons who are landowners, tenants or assignees of land revenue in the estate, or who are entitled to receive any of the rents, profits or produce of the estate or to occupy land therein;

(2) the nature and extent of the interests of those persons, and the conditions and liabilities attaching thereto.

Section 44 of the Act provides as follows:—

“An entry made in a record of rights in accordance with the law for the time being in force, or in an annual record in accordance with the provisions of this chapter and the rules thereunder, shall be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved or a new entry is lawfully substituted therefor.”

After examining the evidence the Trial Judge delivered judgment on the 20th January, 1923. He found the first and fourth issues mentioned above against the plaintiffs on the ground that section 44 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887, was presumptive evidence of title in favour of the appellants (defendants). He, therefore, made a decree dismissing the plaintiffs' suit and from that decree the plaintiffs appealed to the Additional District Judge, who delivered judgment on the 26th March, 1923.

After considering the authorities the learned Additional District Judge summed up the effect of the mutation proceedings in the following words:—

"From a consideration of these rulings it seems to me clear that though an entry in a revenue record is presumed under section 44 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act to be true, such entry of itself confers no title, and it is sufficient to prove that possession was originally obtained as a mortgagee to shift the onus so as to require the mortgagee to prove that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee has ceased to exist and he has secured a valid title as owner. I, therefore, hold that when the present defendants admitted the factum of mortgage the onus lay on them despite the revenue entries in their favour to prove that they were in possession not as mortgagees but as owners."

The learned Appellate Judge then examined the evidence and came to the following conclusion:—

"The rulings already referred to by me, however, make it clear that the mortgagee cannot rely on presumptions, but must prove an out and out as well as valid sale before he can be allowed to usurp proprietary rights in the land mortgaged with him.

"In my opinion the evidence adduced by the defendants fails to discharge the onus laid upon them.

"In their pleas the defendants urged that the land was sold by Mohammad Bakhsh and Sultan for Rs. 2,000 and was then redeemed from Miran Bakhsh (the mortgagee). The evidence, however, is to the effect that the mortgagee rights of Miran Bakhsh were purchased four or five months prior to the acquisition of the equity of redemption.

"When there is a discrepancy in such broad facts what reliance can be placed on oral evidence relating to minor points in the transaction?"

"Finding that the onus lay on defendants to prove that the mortgage no longer subsists, and that they have failed to discharge such onus, I accept the appeal."

The Additional District Judge, therefore, made a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiffs, and from that decree the defendants appealed to the High Court, Lahore, and the appeal was heard by Broadway and Fforde, JJ., who delivered judgment on the 3rd January, 1924. It was contended before the High Court that

"the learned Additional District Judge had not attached that weight to the presumption of correctness of the entries that was due to them owing to the provisions of section 44 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887."

But the learned Judges of the High Court repelled the contention, observing:

"Now it cannot be denied that such revenue records as have been produced show the appellants (defendants) as owners of this land and section 44 of the Land Revenue Act undoubtedly enacts that entries in such records shall be presumed to be correct. The learned Additional District Judge has, however, fully realized this aspect of the case and has considered and weighed this evidence with all possible care."

The High Court concluded their judgment in the following words:—

"Mr. Hasan Imam (counsel for the defendants) admitted that the onus of proving the sale lay on his clients. Whether a sale had or had not been effected is a question of fact and this question has been decided against the appellants (defendants) by the learned Additional District Judge. In coming to his decision the learned Additional District Judge has not contravened any legal principles and we are not, therefore, competent to examine the correctness of his finding."

Against the decree of the High Court dismissing the defendants' appeal, they now appealed, by special leave, to His Majesty in Council.

The judgment of the High Court is reported in I.L.R. 5 Lah. 84.

The facts out of which this present appeal arises, are shortly as follows:—

By a registered deed, dated the 15th of March, 1880, and executed by Sultan and Mohammad Bakhsh, certain lands and wells were mortgaged to the aforesaid Chaudhri Miran Bakhsh in consideration of the sum of Rs. 1,200. The mortgagees went into possession, and it was a term of the mortgage that the mortgagors would not be competent to redeem the mortgaged premises until after 20 years from the date of the mortgage.

About the year 1891 Miran Bakhsh transferred his interest to Wali Mohammad, Ali Mohammad, and Mohammad Bakhsh, sons of Dare Khan, all named in the above-named genealogical tables, and they went into possession after their purchase.

It is alleged by the defendants that the mortgagors Mohammad Bakhsh and Sultan sold their equity of redemption about the year 1891 or 1892 to the defendant No. 3, and the said Ali Mohammad and Mohammad Bakhsh for Rs. 1,200 and Miran Bakhsh released the mortgaged premises to them.

The plaintiffs, who are the mortgagor Mohammad Bakhsh and the descendants of Sultan, denied such sale, and instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sheikhpura on the 17th November, 1920, against the sons of Miran Bakhsh and the present appellants for the redemption of the mortgaged premises. The only point discussed before the Board is whether the appellants have proved the sale.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case held that the alleged sale had been proved. From his judgment and decree there was an appeal to the Additional District Judge of Sheikhpura (hereinafter referred to as the Appellate Court) who came to an opposite conclusion. There was a second appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Lahore, and they held that the question whether there had been a sale or not is a question of fact, and that it was not open to them to reconsider the evidence, as the Appellate Court had not contravened any of the provisions of section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The first question, therefore, for their Lordships' consideration is whether the decision of the Appellate Court, namely, that there had been no sale, is a pure question of fact, for, if that is so, then its decision was final.

In the Punjab the sale might have been oral, as it was not governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The case for the appellants is that the sale was oral, and the mortgagors on such sale executed a receipt showing that Rs. 800 had been paid to them and Rs. 1,200 to Miran Bakhsh. The appellant Wali Mohammad gave evidence and called witnesses to prove the execution of the receipt, but both the trial and the Appellate Court held that the receipt had not been proved.

The appellants' case further was that on the sale there was mutation in favour of Wali Mohammad and his brothers, but that the mutation records had been burnt during the Gujranwala riots in the Punjab in 1919. They, however, relied on a number of entries in the record of rights prepared under the Punjab Land Revenue Act, being Act No. XVII of 1887, and they contended that these entries recognised the appellants or their predecessors as the owners of these properties, and that such entries duly made under S. 44 of the said Act are to be presumed to be correct as to the facts they record until the contrary is proved. The Appellate Court held that the mortgage being admitted, the onus was on the appellants to show that the mortgage had been extinguished by subsequent sale. Their Lordships agree with the High Court that the Appellate Court was right in its view on the question of onus.

In the view of the latter Court some of the entries in the record of rights were proved to be wrong, and after considering the evidence, both oral and documentary, and giving effect to the statutory presumption, it held that the onus upon the appellants had not been discharged. The first question, therefore, for consideration is whether its decision that the sale has not been proved is a question of fact or involves any question of law. It has been argued by the counsel for the appellants that the inference drawn from the various entries in the record of rights is a question of law, and that the Appellate Court drew a wrong inference from them. The respondents contended that these various entries are merely links in the chain of evidence to prove the sale and that the question whether there was a sale or not is a pure question of fact.

Section 100 of the present Code of Civil Procedure has replaced section 584 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. These sections are substantially the same in their terms and have often been considered by the Board and the different High Courts in India. No doubt questions of law and fact are often difficult to disentangle, but the following propositions are clearly established:—

(1) There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of erroneous finding of facts, however gross the error may seem to be. (See Musunnat Durga Choudrao v. Jawahir Singh Choudhri.¹)

(2) The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law, but the question whether a fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact. (Nafar v. Shukur.²)

(3) Where the question to be decided is one of fact, it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which were not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundations of rights but were really historical materials, have to be construed for the purpose of deciding the question. (See Midnapur Zamindary Co. v. Uma Charan Mandal.³)

In the last cited case the question the Board had to decide was the date of the origin of an under-tenure. The first Appellate Court fixed the date from the contents of some documents. No oral evidence had been called in this case.

(4) A second appeal would not lie because some portion of the evidence might be contained in a document or documents and the first Appellate Court had made a mistake as to its meaning. (See Nowbutt Singh v. Chutter Dharee Singh.⁴) The judgment in this case was delivered by Sir Richard Couch, under section 372 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, but it has repeatedly been followed in decisions under the Civil Procedure Codes of 1882 and 1908.

Great reliance was placed by the appellants' counsel on Dhanna Mal v. Moti Sagar,⁵ but there the tenancy was admitted and the question was whether it was permanent or not, and the solution of it depended upon what was the legal inference to be drawn from proved facts, or, in other words, the question was what was the legal effect of proved facts. The question whether a statutory presumption is rebutted by the rest of the evidence, as is the case here, is always a question of fact. (See Kumeda Prosunna Bhuiya v. The Secretary of State for India in Council.⁶)

This case was recently approved by the Board in the case of Midnapur Zamindari Co., Ltd. v. The Secretary of State for India.⁷

Their Lordships are of opinion that whether there was a sale or not is a question of the fact. In this case both parties led evidence oral and documentary. The Appellate Court, as has already been stated, held that many of the entries, notwithstanding the presumption under section 44, were incorrect. The entries relied on by the appellants were not the foundations of their title but were mere items of evidence adduced by them to prove the sale. The only question as regards the entries is their evidentiary value on the fact in issue, viz. the sale. Their Lordships, therefore, have no hesitation in holding that the finding of the Appellate Court that there was no sale is final, and that the judgment of the High Court is right. The appeal should, therefore, be dismissed with costs and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

There may be a valid executory contract for the allotment of shares in a Company constituted by offer and communicated by acceptance before allotment is made. If, however, the only facts are that there is application for shares to a Company, and nothing further is done by the Company but allotment, there is no concluded contract until the allotment is communicated to the applicant. The offer of a Company to allot preference shares to creditors for their claims can only mean for their just claims, not for what they may put forward as their claims.

Held, on the evidence, that there was a concluded contract between K and the respondent Company to take preference shares for the amount which he should be entitled to claim.

Consolidated appeal No. 118 of 1927 from three decrees of the High Court, Bombay (Marten and Fawcett, JJ.), dated the 8th October, 1924, reversing three decrees of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, dated the 10th July, 1922 and dismissing three suits which he had decreed.

The material facts of the case, for purposes of the present report, are sufficiently fully stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The appellants-plaintiffs claimed from the respondent Company preference shares asserting that the Company had agreed in the year 1912 to issue to them so many preference shares as would at their par value satisfy their claims under deposit receipts of the Company, dated the 31st October, 1911, and issued to the appellants—in order of their appeals—for Rs. 50,000, Rs. 75,812-8-0 and Rs. 11,605-2-8, respectively.

— The High Court (differing from the Trial Judge) held that the appellants had not proved any agreement by the Company to issue to them preference shares in respect of the said deposit receipts, Mr. Justice Fawcett concluding his judgment in the following words:—

"I do not think that the resolution of 20th April, 1912, could confer any right on Kevaldas (the plaintiff) to get such (i.e., preference) shares, and the circumstances were not such as to bind the Company to issue preference shares to him to the extent of his just dues as a creditor. There would really only be a contract to do so when the Company had actually allotted him the shares and communicated this to him. As laid down in Gunn's case,¹ if a man applies for shares in a Company, and the directors allot them to him, and after the allotment, but before it is communicated to the applicant, he withdraws the application, there is no complete contract and he is not bound to accept them. Similarly here, there was, I think, no contract binding the Company to give the preference shares until at any rate the agents had actually allotted them under the authority conferred on them by the resolution. I think the minutes show that the question put to Kevaldas was only whether he would be willing to take preference shares, if allotted to him, and that there was no definite undertaking to allot such shares."

Against the judgment of the High Court dismissing their suits, the plaintiffs preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Lord Atkin.

LORD ATKIN.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad and dismissing with costs a suit brought by the appellants against the respondent Company. There has been much litigation between the parties and others which is relevant to the issues that arise in these suits. The course of the litigation has been carefully and adequately set forth in the judgment appealed from of the present Chief Justice of Bombay, who has appended to his judgment a valuable table of the relevant dates and decrees. The facts have also been fully set out in the judgments below. In the view taken by their Lordships it becomes unnecessary to discuss many of the matters that were in contest in the Courts below and before the Board, and their Lordships will proceed to state only so much of the facts as is essential to explain the reason for their decision. The respondent Company, the Bharatkhand Cotton Mills Company, Limited, was formed in 1896. The appellant Kevaldas had from the beginning a substantial interest in it. He was chairman and manager, and his firm, who for this purpose may be treated as synonymous with himself, was at all material times until the end of 1911 secretary, treasurer and agent of the Company. In that capacity a running account existed between Kevaldas and the Company, running into large figures, in which Kevaldas appears at sometimes debtor, at others creditors of the Company. In the year 1905 Kevaldas started on his own behalf a weaving factory on land which he took on lease. The weaving factory was run in close co-operation with the spinning mills, which were the business of the Company, and no doubt might legitimately serve the Company's interests. In January, 1909, however, one of the shareholders, suing for himself and the other shareholders, commenced a suit against Kevaldas for a declaration that the weaving factory was built out of the Company's money and was the property of the Company, and for an account of the profits made by Kevaldas out of the Company's money used by him. The claim to the factory was not persisted in, but on January 26, 1910, a preliminary decree was made declaring that Kevaldas was liable for profits made by the use of the Company's money and directing the necessary accounts and inquiries. In April, 1914, the Subordinate Judge, on consideration of the report of the Commissioner who took the account, dismissed the suit, but in August, 1916, the Company's appeal was allowed by the High Court, and a decree made in favour of the Company for Rs. 1,46,453, with interest at 9 per cent. as from May 15, 1910. This money decree was executed against Kevaldas's property between 1916 and 1920, and a sum of Rs. 47,677 was realised. In June, 1923, this Board dismissed an appeal by Kevaldas against the decree*.

Meantime the circumstances had arisen out of which the present claim by Kevaldas arises. In May, 1910, the Company confirmed a special resolution for the purchase of the weaving factory from Kevaldas for a net sum of Rs. 3,51,000, "to be brought to account in his name," and took over the factory as from May 15, 1910. The validity of this sale was challenged in subsequent litigation between Kevaldas and the Company, but without success, and the debt so created for the purchase price must be taken to be established. The result of bringing it into account with Kevaldas, together with a further sum of Rs. 87,975, which was credited as the price of stores, etc., taken over, was to convert a debit of nearly a lac and a half into a credit to Kevaldas of nearly 3 lacs. This sum was reduced by drawings until in September, 1911, it stood at something over a lac. On September 1 Kevaldas issued a deposit receipt in the name of the Company to himself, which later he endorsed to his wife, and for which a few days later he substituted a deposit receipt in the name of his wife. The account, however, was still running, and on October 31, 1911, he cancelled the existing deposit receipt and issued three deposit receipts in varying amounts to his wife and his daughter-in-law and himself amounting in all to Rs. 1,37,417, which was the balance then standing to his credit. It is not disputed that the wife and daughter-in-law were nominees for Kevaldas, and that the rights of the parties must be determined as though Kevaldas alone had held the receipts. In August, 1911, the Mills had been destroyed by fire, and later in the year Kevaldas decided to retire from the position of secretary and agent, a position which he ceased to hold on December 31, 1911.

The point of time is now reached at which the alleged cause of action in this suit arose. The Company, being in some financial difficulty, determined to reduce its capital and to make an issue of preference shares. Of the preference shares some were to be allotted to creditors in satisfaction of their debts; the balance was to be available for the purpose of raising further working capital. Kevaldas alleged that he agreed with the Company to have preference shares allotted to him to the nominal value of the debt owing by the Company to him and his nominees, represented by the amount of the deposit receipts, with accrued interest and some addition to the current account, which was incurred between October 31, 1911, and the actual date of his resignation. In the present suit he claims specific performance of the agreement or, alternatively, damages for non-delivery. As the Company attained considerable prosperity during the war years and after, the preference shares, with arrears of dividend, represent a value much greater than the original debt. The Company deny that there ever was a concluded agreement to allot shares to Kevaldas; but if there were, they say that the result of the shareholders' action brought in 1909 was to show that there never was in fact any balance due in 1911, and therefore the deposit receipts must be taken to be given without consideration; or, in the alternative, they say that the shares were only to be given for the ultimate nett indebtedness of the Company on all accounts; and as against the debt due on the deposit receipts there must be set off the balance of the amount of Rs. 146,453-0-2 and interest due on the decree of August, 1916. The Subordinate Judge found in favour of Kevaldas that there was a binding agreement to allot preference shares in satisfaction of the debt substantially represented by the deposit receipts, and decreed specific performance accordingly.

The learned Judges of the High Court found that the result of the decision of the High Court in the shareholders' action was to negative the existence of any debt which could support the deposit receipts; for the amounts found due to the Company should have been credited in the current account, and would have resulted in a debit balance to Kevaldas instead of a credit. This view disposed of the action, but they proceeded to express their opinion that there was no concluded contract. The opinion of the Chief Justice was that there was no consideration for it; a view which does not dispose of an alleged contract to allot shares for such an amount as should be found to be due in the future. Mr. Justice Fawcett held that there could be no concluded contract until after allotment in fact and communication of the allotment to the proposed shareholder. Their Lordships cannot uphold this view of the law. There may be a valid executory contract for the allotment of shares constituted by offer and communicated acceptance before allotment is made. If, however, the only facts are that there is application for shares to a Company, and nothing further is done by the Company but allotment, there is no concluded contract until the allotment is communicated to the applicant. These are the facts in *Gunn's case*¹ relied on by the learned Judge; but they are not the facts alleged in this case.

There is no very clear evidence of the contract. It consists of the minutes of meetings of the shareholders of the Company and of the subsequent conduct of the parties. The material meeting is of April 20, 1912. A resolution was proposed that: "The secretaries, treasurers and agents are hereby authorised to allot at the par value of the shares to Kevaldas and to other creditors of this Company for their claims so many of the preference shares as would be sufficient to satisfy their claims." After certain amendments were moved, the minute records: "Mr. Kevaldas Triphovandas, on being asked, said that he agrees to take preference shares in respect of moneys which may be found due on making account of the moneys which may be claimable in his own name, in the name of his wife, and in the name of his son, making up the amount by calculating interest at 6 per cent." Later, on a submission of May 11, 1912, Kevaldas went to arbitration with Mulchand, his then successor in the office of secretary and agent, as to the right to have preference shares, and an award was made that Kevaldas, his wife and daughter-in-law were bound to take preference shares "for the amount which may be due to them by the Company." There may be some doubt whether this award, to which the Company were not in terms a party, was in itself evidence on the issue; but Kevaldas subsequently applied to the Court to have the award filed in Court, and thereby clearly made it evidence against him. As far as the Company was concerned, they retained preference shares to meet any possible claim by Kevaldas, and kept dividends in reserve accordingly. The directors' report for the year ending December 31, 1919, shows a sum of Rs. 9,000 "to be kept credited for payment of dividend and shares, which would on a rough estimate come to this amount, till the disposal of that suit; that is pending against the family of Kevaldas and others in the event of its being held that shares should be given to them." In the present suit the Company, pleading before the decree of August 22, 1916, had been given in their favour, alleged in para. 30 of their written statement that though nothing was due to the plaintiff, "yet if on accounts being taken (if any amount be found due to him) we were and are always prepared to give him preference shares for the amounts which may justly be found due to him, and to accept such preference shares he has given his consent." It appears to their Lordships, on consideration of the whole of the minutes, correspondence and other facts, including those above referred to, that there was a concluded contract between Kevaldas and the Company to take preference shares for the amount which he should be entitled to claim.

But in ascertaining what that amount is their Lordships have no doubt that the balance of the sum due on the decree must be taken into calculation. The offer of the Company to allot preference shares to creditors for their claims can only mean for their just claims, not for what they may put forward as their claims. It appears to their Lordships to have been accepted in this sense by Kevaldas. There was at the time of the offer the suit pending by the shareholder, which claimed that Kevaldas was indebted to the Company, and though at the time a majority of the shareholders were hostile to the suit proceeding, they were powerless to stop it, and, in fact, it continued. The present suit was brought in 1914, and it appears to their Lordships that the defendants were clearly entitled to raise the question what the true amount of the claim was, and though when they pleaded originally the shareholders' suit had been dismissed, yet after the appeal was allowed in 1916 and a decree for Rs. 1,46,453 given, they were entitled by amendment to bring that sum into the account, and their Lordships entirely approve of the decision of the High Court to admit the amendment. In this view of the case it is immaterial to decide whether there have been in existence two debts, one due by Kevaldas to the Company, and another due by the Company to Kevaldas, or only one, the balance of a current account in which the items relied on appear on either side. The substance of the matter is that the Company only agreed to satisfy the creditors' just claim: such a claim as he might have proved in a liquidation, and that in the present case Kevaldas's claim can only be ascertained by deducting from the amount owed to him by the Company the amount he owes the Company. Inasmuch as the balance is in favour of the Company the suit fails.

Their Lordships ascertained from counsel for the Company that they were prepared to accept this view of the case, which their Lordships had formed on the conclusion of the appellants' arguments. It became unnecessary, therefore, for their Lordships to form a final opinion upon the view expressed by the learned Judges of the High Court that the Company were entitled to treat the items making up the amount for which the decree was obtained as items which should have been included in the current account between Kevaldas and the Company, so that the credit balance for which the deposit receipts were given disappeared, and counsel of the Company were not asked to support this finding. Their Lordships content themselves with saying that, as at present advised, they find it difficult to see how the Company can consistently use the items to destroy contra credits, and at the same time obtain a money decree for the full amount of the items and proceed to execute it accordingly. If the case had turned on this they would have required further argument.

A further complication arose in the suit, which might well have disposed of the plaintiffs' claim at an early stage. It appears that, on April 12, 1912, Kevaldas mortgaged by assignment the three deposit receipts in question to one Tulsidas to secure a pre-existing debt, and notice of the assignment was duly given to the Company. Tulsidas was a party to the present suit and obtained from the Subordinate Judge a decree for the full cash amount due on the receipts. On appeal the High Court intimated that Tulsidas took subject to equities, and thereupon by consent of all parties a consent decree was made which, as amended on March 2, 1922, provided that the Company paid Tulsidas the balance due to him, Rs. 86,444, with interest at 7 per cent. from October 31, 1920. This payment was subject to the right of the Company to be credited with the amount against any sum that should be found to be due to Kevaldas on the deposit receipts, and was to be without prejudice to all other contentions which might be raised by the parties. The assignment to Tulsidas would appear to preclude any right of Kevaldas to put the deposit receipts in suit in 1914, and if the payment by the Company to Tulsidas was on the footing of an assignment by Tulsidas of his rights on the deposit receipts, Kevaldas would be in difficulty in asserting any claim. The compromise is inartificially stated; but it appears to their Lordships that the true view is that, as far as the rights of the parties in this suit are concerned, Tulsidas disappears as though there never had been an assignment to or by him, and that Kevaldas acknowledges that the Company are entitled to recover from him by deduction from the deposit receipts if possible, if not, by any other way the amount which they paid to Tulsidas under the compromise. In the view taken by their Lordships this sum falls to be deducted in the first instance from the sum due to the deposit receipts.

On the conclusion of the arguments for the appellants their Lordships gave the parties an opportunity of agreeing the figures if possible on the footing of the view of the case expressed above. Unfortunately, agreement as to the exact amount could not be reached on the information available in England. All parties, however, have assented to the convenient procedure adopted by the Court of Appeal of expressing, in one decree the financial result of the relations between the parties including decrees now standing against either party. Their Lordships are unable to ascertain the precise figures, a task which will devolve upon the Courts in India. The decree of the High Court requires to be varied, but the appellant substantially fails, and must pay the costs of the appeal. An account must be taken to ascertain how much should be credited to Kevaldas in respect of the dividends claimed to be deducted by the respondents in the execution schedule, the dividends to be credited as they fall due with interest, if any interest is payable under the articles. On the other hand the Company are entitled to be credited with the payment to Tulsidas with interest in accordance with the consent decree of March 2, 1922. They are also entitled to their decree, dated August 22, 1916, for Rs. 1,46,463, with interest from May 15, 1910, less the sums realised on execution which must be ascertained and capital sums and interest adjusted accordingly. It is desirable that the balance so ascertained should be the only sum for which execution should be permitted under the decree of August, 22, 1916: and the Court will determine the form of decree by entering up satisfaction or otherwise which will best achieve this result. There should be a stay of execution of the decree of August 22, 1916, until any further order which the Court in its discretion may make. In the result the decree of October 8, 1924, is varied by the omission of paragraphs 2 and 5 otherwise it will stand. The case is remitted to the High Court to be dealt with in accordance with their Lordships' judgment. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), S. 23—Market value of land acquired—High Court's decision as to, reversing Special Judge and restoring Collector—Privy Council's interference, with—Conditions.

In an appeal under the Land Acquisition Act from the decision of the High Court which reversed the judgment of the Special Land Acquisition Judge and affirmed the award of the Collector, the appellant was unable to make out that there was any wrong application of principle by the High Court in rejecting the evidence of an expert on which the Special Judge chose to act, or that any important point in the evidence was overlooked or misapplied. Following the principles enunciated in *Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State*¹ as governing their Lordships' Board in dealing with questions of that kind their Lordships refused to disturb the conclusion of the High Court.

Appeal No. 26 of 1929 from a decree of the High Court, Calcutta, dated the 23rd May, 1927, which varied a decree which had been made by the Special Land Acquisition Judge, 24-Perganas, on the 18th March, 1925, on a reference made under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894.

The Special Judge having enhanced the award made by the Land Acquisition Collector, the Secretary of State for India appealed to the High Court. The Judge's finding as to the market value was based entirely on the evidence of an expert witness, Mr. Johnstone. The High Court having rejected this evidence upheld the award of the Collector, concluding their judgment as follows:

"There is only one other piece of evidence in the case and it is important. Under section 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (Act III of 1899) the market value of the land for the purposes of acquisition shall, until the contrary is shown, be presumed to be twenty-five times the annual value of the property as entered in the assessment book. In the absence of any evidence in the case it seems to us that this would be a safe guide in ascertaining the value."

From the said decree of the High Court the present appeal was preferred to His Majesty in Council.

awarded by the Special Land Acquisition Judge. The presumption under the Calcutta Municipal Act had been misapplied by the High Court. The evidence of our expert witness was sufficient to rebut the presumption.

[LORD TOMLIN.—The only question involved in this appeal is one of valuation of land, and all necessary principles applicable were considered and applied by the High Court. Under these circumstances the Board does not usually interfere: Narsinghi Das v. Secretary of State.¹]

1st May, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD TOMLIN.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 23rd May, 1927, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, by which a judgment and decree, dated the 18th March, 1925, of the Special Land Acquisition Judge at Alipur was varied.

The nature of the case is this: The Municipality of Calcutta required certain land in Michael Dutt Street in Calcutta, and accordingly invoked the machinery of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for the purpose of securing the property. Under that Act anybody seeking to acquire land sets the Government Collector in motion by means of a number of declarations and notifications which need not be specifically referred to. Under section 11 of the Act, on a day which the Collector fixes, the Collector proceeds to inquire into the objections, if any, raised by the persons interested. He inquires into the value of the land and the nature of the interests therein. It is his duty to make an award as to the true area of the land, the compensation which in his opinion should be allowed for the land, and the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested. Section 18 provides:

"Any person interested who has not accepted the award may by written application to the Collector, require that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, whether his objection be to the measurement of the land, the amount of the compensation, the persons to whom it is payable or the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested."

Under sub-section (2) of the same section the application must state the grounds on which objection to the award is taken. Then the matter goes to the Special Land Acquisition Judge, and under section 23, sub-section (1), in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for the land acquired under the Act the Court has to take into consideration the market value of the land at the relevant date.

Section 25, sub-section (1) provides:

“When the applicant has made a claim to compensation pursuant to any notice given under section 9 the amount awarded to him by the Court shall not exceed the amount so claimed or be less than the amount awarded by the Collector under section 11.”

It is necessary also to refer to the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899. Section 557 of that Act provides:

“Any land or buildings which any municipal authority is authorized by this Act to acquire may be acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and for that purpose the said Act shall be subject to the following amendments.”

The amendments include one [sub-section (d)] to this effect—

“The market value of the land or building shall until the contrary is shown be presumed for the purposes of the said clause first of sub-section (1) of section 23 ‘(i.e., of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894),’ to be twenty-five times the annual value of the property as entered in the assessment book prescribed by this Act.”

Under the Calcutta Municipal Act provision is made for the maintenance of a book in which the assessments of lands and buildings are entered, and section 151 of the Act defines how the annual value of the buildings and lands is to be ascertained.

What happened was this: The Collector in due course made an award, and the amount of his award was Rs. 69,778 for the land. There was something else awarded in respect of the structures. The appellant, who was interested in the land, was dissatisfied with the award, and under section 18 he claimed a reference to the Special Land Acquisition Judge. The matter accordingly came before that Judge, and evidence was called before him, and he ultimately awarded Rs. 81,773. In making that award he proceeded upon the footing of accepting the evidence of a Mr. Johnstone, a civil engineer, who was called as an expert by the persons interested in the land, and who gave evidence as to the value of the land. The Special Land Acquisition Judge accepted Mr. Johnstone's figures with one variation, namely, an increase in the amount of certain deductions by substituting for a 6 per cent. basis a 10 per cent. basis.

An appeal was taken to the High Court, and the High Court reversed the judgment of the Special Land Acquisition Judge and affirmed the award of the Collector. In doing that they proceeded upon the footing (1) that they were not prepared to accept the evidence of Mr. Johnstone, and that the presumption which arises under section 557, sub-section (d), of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, therefore operated; and (2) that though the amount awarded by the Collector exceeded the amount calculated in accordance with the presumption his award must stand having regard to section 25, sub-section (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

The principles which govern their Lordships' Board in dealing with questions of this kind were stated by Lord Buckmaster in the case of Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India in Council.¹ In the judgment this passage occurs at page 135:—

"The matter, therefore, must be considered and determined in the same manner as if it were a judgment from a decree in an ordinary suit, but it has been repeatedly laid down by the Board that in such cases they will not interfere with judgments of the Courts in India as to matters involving valuation of property and similar questions where knowledge of the circumstances and of the district may have an important bearing on the conclusion reached, unless there is something to show, not merely that, on the balance of evidence, it would be possible to reach a different conclusion, but that the judgment cannot be supported as it stands, either by reason of a wrong application of principle, or because some important point in the evidence has been overlooked or misapplied."

An examination of the judgments of the High Court shows that they had before them in regard to value the evidence of Mr. Johnstone and no other expert evidence at all, that they considered and criticised Mr. Johnstone's evidence, and that in the end they came to the conclusion that they could not accept his view as to value. Further, there being no evidence of value other than Mr. Johnstone's evidence, they took the view that in those circumstances the presumption must prevail.

Their Lordships are of opinion that it has not been made out that there was any wrong application of principle by the High Court in the rejection of Mr. Johnstone's evidence or that any important point in the evidence was overlooked or misapplied. In these circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that they are not in a position to disturb the conclusion at which the High Court arrived. The appeal must be dismissed with costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), Ss. 3 (11), 3 (15), and 56—Sale of a portion of ryoti land—Contract between land-holder and the purchaser that the portion of land should be used for building purposes instead of agricultural purposes in consideration of annual payments—Validity—Annual payments, if rent—Purchaser, if a ryot—Suit for specific performance of the contract—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

There is nothing in the Estates Land Act to prevent the land-holder and the purchaser of a portion of the ryoti land in his estate from entering into a contract with each other that that land in future should be held or used not for agricultural purposes but for building purposes. The consideration for the landholder agreeing to the same may be either a lump payment made to him or annual payments. Such annual payments are not "rent" within the meaning of S. 3 (11) of the Estates Land Act nor the persons agreeing to pay them ryots. A suit for specific performance of such a contract is not a suit to enforce acceptance of patta by a ryot within the meaning of S. 56 of the Estates Land Act and is, therefore, maintainable in the ordinary Civil Court.

The Court delivered the following.

Wallace, J.

JUDGMENTS: Wallace, J.—The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are: The defendants are the proprietors of a rice mill. They purchased for the purpose of erecting and working a mill 3.26 acres out of S. No. 179 in the suit village which lies within the estate of the Zamindar of Pithapuram, who is the plaintiff. The defendants' vendor was the ryot who held S. No. 189 on patta from the Zamindar. When the Zamindar's thanedar informed the defendants that buildings should not be erected on ryoti land, the defendants petitioned the Zamindar and came to an agreement with him that they should be left undisturbed promising to pay him three times the ordinary cist. The Zamindar accordingly ordered his officials to sub-divide the 3.26 acres from the main holding and have that registered as a separate holding in the names of the defendants, and directed that a draft patta and a muchilika should be prepared. When the muchilika was offered to the defendants, they refused to accept it, on the ground, that the Zamindar could not charge them more than the ordinary cist. The plaintiff has accordingly filed this suit for specific performance of the agreement. Both the Lower Courts have decreed the suit and the defendants appeal.

Wallace, J.

Clearly on the equities they have no case, but they stand on the technical ground that this suit is, in effect, one to enforce a patta and, therefore, cannot be brought in a Civil Court. The answer to this contention seems to me to be that the defendants are not "ryots" within the definition of that term in the Madras Estates Land Act. They are not persons who ever held or are now holding this ryoti land under the plaintiff for the purpose of agriculture. They never wanted so to hold it. They did not buy the land for that purpose. Their avowed purpose in purchasing the land was for erecting the mill upon it, and their arrangement with the plaintiff was that they should be allowed to retain it for building purposes and they have in fact built upon it. In these circumstances it seems to me impossible to hold that the defendants are ryots within the definition in the Act. Since they are not ryots, whatever recognition the Zamindar has made in the matter of consenting to the sub-division of the land and to its being held under him for rent is not a recognition by him of the defendants as his ryots. It does not advance the case of the defendants that they purchased the land from a ryot. Whether the Zamindar chooses to eject that ryot under section 151 because he has impaired the value of his holding for agricultural purposes by sale of 3.26 acres of it to the defendants is a matter entirely between the plaintiff and that ryot and is no concern of the defendants. For a similar reason there is no question here of any enhancement of a ryot's rent. The rent of that ryot who holds patta for the land has not been enhanced,

Venugopala
Rice Mill

v.
Rajah of Pithapuram.

Wallace, J.

and the rent claimed from the defendants is therefore not an enhancement of the ryot's rent. The rent payable by the defendants is the matter of a separate contract between them and the Zamindar, and it is not "rent" under the provisions of the Estates Land Act. See *Ramachandra Mardaraja Deo v. Dukko Padhano*¹. The defendants, then, not being ryots, section 55 of the Estates Land Act, which is the section enabling a suit to be brought to enforce a patta on a ryot, has no application. There is no reason, therefore, for holding that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of the plaint agreement, which is in essence merely a contract between the landlord and those who have bought out the original occupancy-holders. I, therefore, see no reason to interfere with the decree of the Lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

C.R.P. No. 878 of 1926 follows and is dismissed with costs.

krishna
Aiyar, J.

Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—I agree. The defendants (Sree Venugopala Rice Mill, Pandalapaka, and the shareholders thereof) are the appellants in this second appeal. S. No. 179 was Jeroyati land under wet cultivation, of the extent of 56 acres, paying rent at a particular rate per acre to the plaintiff, the Rajah of Pithapuram. The defendants purchased 3 acres from the ryot who owned S. No. 179 and wanted to use the same for non-agricultural purposes by constructing buildings thereon for use as a rice mill. When the defendants proceeded to erect buildings on the 3 acres purchased by them in 1916, the plaintiff's officials obstructed the defendants from proceeding with the building on the ground that the defendants were not entitled to use the 3 acres of land, which were actually under wet cultivation, for building purposes unconnected with the agricultural use of the land. The defendants, thereupon, petitioned the plaintiff for permission to use the land for non-agricultural purposes and for using the same for building purposes, offering to pay three times the rent that was being paid in respect of the land. The plaintiff agreed to the said offer and directed proper house-site patta and muchilika to be executed by both parties. The buildings having been evidently completed in the meantime, the defendants wanted to back out of the agreement; they denied to do anything further in the matter. The plaintiff filed the original suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Rajahmundry for specific performance of the agreement between the parties. The defendants pleaded coercion, misrepresentation, etc.; and both the Lower Courts found against the said contentions of the defendants. The defendants also pleaded that the suit was for enhancement of rent and that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Both the Lower Courts disallowed these contentions also, and decreed the suit in plaintiff's favour. The defendants have preferred the present second appeal.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, the learned Advocate who appeared for the appellants, argued that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, that the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was only to take ejectment proceedings under section 151 of the Estates Land Act, if the use of 3 acres out of 56 acres for building purposes be considered to be "materially impairing the value of the holding for agricultural purposes," and further that the suit was really for enhancement of rent. He referred to section 189 of the Estates Land Act and also to section 11 as regards the right of the ryot to use the land "in any manner which does not materially impair the value of the holding or render it unfit for agricultural purposes;" he relied also on section 27 as regards the rate of rent payable by the ryot. He also referred to section 56, under which the landholder should proceed in the Revenue Courts to compel the ryot to accept patta and to execute muchilika. He also argued that in spite of buildings being raised on the land, the land remained "cultivable" land, and that the landholder was only entitled to recover the mamool rent payable in respect of the lands, and that, if the landholder wanted "enhancement of rent," he was bound to proceed under the provisions of Chapter III of the Estates Land Act.

On behalf of the respondent the learned Advocate-General argued that the three acres in question were purchased by the defendants under Exhibits II and II(a) from the original ryots who owned 56 acres in Survey No. 179, and under section 145 it was open to the landholder to sub-divide the original holding and recognise the 3 acres as a separate holding; that the effect of Exhibits A and B (the application by the defendants and the order by the plaintiff) was to recognise the transfer and to treat the three acres as a separate holding; that no question of the applicability of section 151 of the Estates Land Act arose since the three acres in question should be deemed to be a separate holding after Exhibits A and B, and that the questions whether use of 3 out of 56 acres of wet land for building purposes was reasonable or not, and whether the same materially impaired the value of the holding for agricultural purposes or rendered it substantially unfit for such purposes, did not arise for consideration in this case. He contended that this was a case of the whole of the three acres of wet land included in a holding being built upon, in which case it could not be doubted that such user was not permissible on the part of the ryot, and the land-holder could have sued to eject the defendants under section 151 of the Act. The land-holder had valuable rights in the land to prevent the use of wet land for building purposes by the defendants; while the defendants also were greatly benefited by being allowed to use these lands for building purposes. In the circumstances, both parties agreed that the land should not in future be held for agricultural purposes, and they agreed to convert the same into building sites and to have buildings erected thereon. He contended that there was nothing in the Estates Land Act which prevented the parties from agreeing to do so. The amount to be paid in future in respect of such land would not be "rent" within the definition of section 3 (11) of the Act, which defines "rent" as "whatever is lawfully payable in money or in kind or in both to a landholder for the use or occupation of land in his estate for the purpose of agriculture;"—so that, if the land is not held for purposes of agriculture, the payments could not be said to be "rent" within the meaning of the Estates Land Act. He similarly contended that the defendants could not be said to be "ryots" within the definition of section 3 (15), since they did not hold the land 'for the purpose of agriculture' on condition of paying to the landholder the rent which is legally due upon it. The amount to be paid by the defendants is not "rent," and the defendants themselves are not "ryots," after the plaintiff and the defendants agreed that the land should not be used for agricultural purposes but should be used for putting up buildings. He also argued that no provisions of the Estates Land Act prevented the parties from entering into such a contract or from fixing the amount payable by the one party to the other.

We think that the contentions raised by the appellants are not sustainable. We take the result of Exhibits A and B to be that the plaintiff recognised the defendants' purchase, and also agreed to treat the 3 acres in question as a separate holding. When both the parties agreed to utilise the land for building purposes, and not for agricultural purposes, the amount payable by the tenant under the contract could not be called "rent" within the meaning of the Estates Land Act; nor could the defendants be said to be "ryots" within the meaning of the Act. It is only a suit to enforce acceptance of patta by a "ryot" that has to be instituted in Revenue Courts under section 56. For the same reason section 189 also does not apply. The amount not being "rent" within the definition of the Act, no question of "presumption as regards the rate of rent" arises under section 27; nor does any question of "enhancement of rent" arise within the meaning of Chapter III of the Act. We think that it was open to the parties to enter into the contract evidenced by Exhibits A and B. Valuable consideration moved from the landholder to the defendants, and we do not think that the legal objections raised on their behalf by their learned Advocate before us are tenable. The scheme of the Estates Land Act seems to be to protect persons who hold lands "for the purpose of agriculture". When the lands are not held for agricultural purposes, our attention has not been drawn to any provision of the Act which prevents parties from entering into any contract which it would otherwise be open to them to enter into. In *Meera Kasim Rowther v. Foulkes*² the Court held that a custom or contract entitling a ryot of agricultural land to erect buildings thereon is not opposed to the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act, and can be enforced against the landlord, though such erections may impair the value of the holding for agricultural purposes. At page 434, the learned Judges—Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., observed that

"Section 11 does not deprive the ryot of the benefit of a contract or usage which would entitle him to use it in a manner which might impair the value of the land for agricultural purposes. . . . It would, no doubt, probably have the effect, in case of relinquishment of the land by him, of depriving the landlord of the benefit of letting it out again for agricultural purposes. There is, however, nothing in the Act which renders such a contract or custom unenforceable against the landholder."

In *Ramachandra Mardaraja Deo v. Dukko Podhano*¹ Abdur Rahim and Spencer, JJ., held that money due for occupation of land let for the purpose of building houses is not "rent" within the meaning of section 3 of the Madras Estates Land Act, and that a suit to recover the same is cognizable by the Civil and not by the Revenue Court. The reasoning of the learned Judges in that case supports the view we take.

In our view there is nothing in the Estates Land Act to which our attention was drawn which would prevent the parties from entering into a contract with each other that the land should in future be held or used not for agricultural purposes but for building purposes. The consideration for the landlord agreeing to the same may be either a lump payment made to him or annual payments. Such annual payments are not "rent" within the meaning of the Estates Land Act, and a suit for specific performance of such a contract between the parties is not a "suit to enforce acceptance of patta" within the meaning of section 56 of the Estates Land Act. Such a suit is maintainable in the ordinary Civil Courts, and the objection as to jurisdiction accordingly fails. There is no question of "enhancement of rent" within the meaning of Chapter III of the Estates Land Act in the present suit, as contended for by the appellants.

We may state that we put the learned Advocate for the appellants the question as to what procedure should be followed by the landholder and the ryot in case both of them wanted to have such land held and used in future for building purposes, and, having regard to the benefit that would accrue to both the parties, the one agreed to make increased annual payments to the other. The learned Advocate, with his usual candour, answered that the Estates Land Act stood in the way and that such a contract would be invalid under the Act. We naturally were unwilling to accept such a result unless there be anything specific in the Estates Land Act which would necessitate the same. Our attention was not drawn to any such provision by the learned Advocate, and we are not ourselves aware of any.

It has been held that the amounts payable to landholders in respect of grazing fees, and the like, are not "rent" within the meaning of the Act, since the same are not paid for the use or occupation of land for the purpose of agriculture. In Bengal, it has been held that lands held for building, mining, or quarrying purposes are not lands held for agricultural purposes, and are not governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See *Umrao Bibi v. Mahomed Rojabi*³ and Ranigunj Coal Association, Limited v. Judoonath Ghose.⁴ Sections 7 and 186 of the Estates Land Act refer to mining rights, and in cases, where the ryot has any right in the minerals, the Court is directed to award compensation for such right when the landholder acquires the land under section 186 for the opening and working of mines. Surely the landholder and the ryot, in cases where the ryot has a right in the minerals, could agree, as between themselves, as to the amount to be payable by the one to the other, in cases where minerals are to be worked. They are not bound to go to Court even if they could agree. This also indicates that it is open to the land-holder and the ryot to enter into contracts relating to the user of land for other than agricultural purposes. The result of accepting the appellant's contention would be to make it impossible for the land-holder and the ryot to agree to put up buildings unconnected with agricultural purposes on ryoti lands, wet or dry. In many districts, ryoti lands—mostly dry—are often purchased by persons for building houses thereon after paying money to the land-holder and to the ryot in possession. In the view presented by the appellants, the title of such purchasers of ryoti land from both the land-holder and the ryot, who build houses on such land, would be illusory since the land-holder could eject them under section 151 of the Estates Land Act, if—as is alleged—the contract be invalid in law.

It is clear that, unless we are driven to such a conclusion, we should avoid such a result; and we have not been referred to any provision of law which compels us to come to such a conclusion.

The general principle "once ryoti, always ryoti" is not violated in such cases, since the incidents of ryoti land would at once attach to such lands, should they subsequently, for any reason, again be held for agricultural purposes.

Chapter XIV of the Estates Land Act relating to restrictions on contracts between land-holders and ryots does not in any way invalidate such a contract as the one before the Court.

There is no merit in the appellants' contentions, nor in our view any law in their favour.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the second appeal fails, and I would dismiss it with costs.

C.R.P. No. 878 of 1926 is against the decree awarding the plaintiff the amounts due for faslis 1332, 1333 and 1334; the same is also dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), S. 23—Criminal prosecution—Dropping of—Consideration of—Award or agreement founded in part on—Evidence of—Invalidity of award or agreement in case of—Prosecution not in fact started—Effect—Commencement of prosecution—Issue of summons—Necessity—Award—Incomplete award—Invalidity of.

If it is an implied term of a reference to arbitration or of an ekrarnamah executed to give effect to the arbitrator's award that a complaint of a non-compoundable offence will not be further proceeded with, then the consideration of the reference or the ekrarnamah, as the case may be, is unlawful, and the award or the ekrarnamah is invalid, quite irrespective of the fact whether any prosecution in law had been started.

It is unlikely that an ekrarnamah will expressly state that a part of the consideration for it is an agreement to settle a criminal prosecution. It is enough in such cases if evidence is given from which the inference necessarily arises that part of the consideration is unlawful.

Held, on the evidence that it was an implied, though not an expressed, term, of an ekrarnamah that part of the consideration for it was that a criminal prosecution should not be further proceeded with.

Quaere, whether a prosecution only commences after a summons is issued, and whether before that stage is reached a complainant cannot be said to have dropped a prosecution under the Code.

An award which is incomplete because the parties whose presence was absolutely necessary to make it valid were never before the arbitrator is not valid.

Appeal No. 17 of 1928 from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Calcutta (Walmsley and B. B. Ghose, JJ.), dated the 28th May, 1925, reversing a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Court of Dacca, dated the 3rd January, 1922.

The material facts of the case are sufficiently set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The principal point for determination on this appeal was whether there was any reference to arbitration and whether the alleged arbitration and award thereon and ekrarnamah had any real basis; and assuming that they were so, whether they were void being contrary to public policy.

*P.C. Appeal No. 17 of 1928.
Beng. Appeal No. 61 of 1925.

21st January, 1930.

The Trial Judge held that the agreements in question were to stifle a criminal prosecution for a non-compoundable offence (forgery, etc.) and that the plaintiffs could not get any relief on the basis thereof. The High Court took the contrary view. After referring to section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and illustration (h) thereto, the learned Judges proceeded:

"The essential element in what is described by English lawyers as 'stifling a prosecution' is the tampering with the administration of justice by a private individual. It is quite true that in this case a complaint of a criminal offence was laid by the plaintiffs' servant against several of the defendants, and that after the award had been made, no steps were taken to produce the evidence for which the Magistrate had called. The defendants, however, were never brought before the Court as accused persons. On the contrary the learned Magistrate expressed grave doubts about the truth of the complaint, and directed the complainant to establish a prima facie case before he issued process; and he dismissed the complaint under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code, when the complainant said that his witnesses had been gained over. In these circumstances I do not think it can be said that a prosecution was dropped; still less do I think that there was any tampering with the administration of justice by the complainant or that the complainant usurped the functions of the Judge. Again, looking at the broader features of the case I should be very reluctant to hold that the institution of the complaint rendered void the reference to arbitration. On the one side the defendants had recourse to the summary provisions of the Registration Act, and afterwards to a suit under section 77 of that Act, while the plaintiffs filed a complaint about the truth of which the Magistrate was not satisfied. It would be carrying the doctrine of public policy to absurd length to hold that the presentation of the complaint debarred the parties from resorting to the sensible method of arbitration. In my opinion, therefore, the agreement to refer the dispute to arbitration cannot be treated as void."

Against the said judgment of the High Court the defendants preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

P. V. Subba Rao for appellants.

The respondents were not represented at the hearing.

SIR BINOD MITTER.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—

The Basu family referred to in the pleadings in the suit owned Taltola Hat and Bazar, which was an old and established Hat of considerable repute. It was originally held on land owned by the Basu family on the bank of the River Dhateswari. The site of the Hat had to be changed from time to time owing to the action of the river, and ultimately, in the year 1916, there was no land owned and possessed by the family on which the Hat could be held and it was removed to some lands belonging to a Mussalman family. There was a great scramble for the purchase of such lands from the different members of the Mussalman family amongst the plaintiffs on the one hand and the principal defendants on the other. One Abdul Aziz purported to execute conveyances in favour both of the plaintiffs and the principal defendants in respect of the same land, and in the course of the proceedings taken by both parties to have their respective documents registered, he sometimes admitted and sometimes denied the execution of such documents before the Sub-Registrar.

On the 14th December, 1916, one Rohini, a servant of the plaintiffs, and on their behalf, complained before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Munshigunj, against various persons, including some of the principal defendants, namely:—

Paresh Chandra Basu, defendant No. 16.

Gopal Chandra Basu, defendant No. 13.

Benoy Chandra Basu, defendant No. 14.

Krishna Kumar Basu, defendant No. 18.

Kamini Kumar Basu, now defendant No. 2 (son of Ananta Kumar Basu, since deceased, who was originally defendant No. 2 in the suit).

Charging them with having committed offences under sections 465, 467, 193 and 194 of the Indian Penal Code, all of which offences were non-compoundable. The persons against whom the complaint was made are referred to for the purposes of the judgment as the accused in the criminal proceedings. The Magistrate did not issue any summons, but directed the complainant to prove his case on the 8th January, 1917.

The criminal proceedings served to bring matters to a head, and after its institution Ananta, whose son, Kamini, was accused No. 6, became exceedingly alarmed, and was very anxious to have all the disputes settled between the plaintiffs and the defendants, including the criminal proceedings. He desired that the disputes should be referred to the arbitration of A. C. Basu, a relation of the parties, and one of the pro forma defendants in the suit.

The disputes as to the title concerned the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 21. A. C. Basu in his deposition stated that at the time of the reference there were only present the plaintiff Birendra, Ananta and the accused Benoy, Paresh and Krishna. The reference was oral, and only two sittings were held, namely, on the 27th and the 29th December. The only persons who attended both days were the plaintiff, Ananta, and the accused, Benoy, Paresh, Krishna and Kamini (son of Ananta). A. C. Basu further stated that no evidence, oral or documentary, on the question of title was produced before him, and on the 29th December he delivered an oral award which was followed by a written memorandum, which is not forthcoming. A memorandum purporting to be a copy of the award, and dated the 12th August, 1917, signed by one A. C. Samanta, and the arbitrator, is on the record. The arbitrator further stated that it was provided by the award that all the interested persons, and not merely those who made the reference or who appeared before him, would execute an agreement embodying the result of his decision. According to him the award had declared that the plaintiff and the principal defendants 1 to 21 would get 3 annas 12 gundas and 12 annas 8 gundas shares respectively, of the proprietary interest of the Hat land. The award also purported to deal with certain pecuniary interests of the pro forma defendants (Nos. 22—72).

On the 8th January, 1917, the criminal proceedings came up before the Magistrate, but, at the instance of the parties, were adjourned to the 24th January.

On the 23rd January, 1917, after 9 o'clock in the evening, an ekrarnama was executed by Ananta, his son Kamini, his brother Joyanta, defendant No. 3, and defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 10, i.e., Debendra Kumar Basu, Surendra Kumar Basu and Sanat Kumar Basu. They were very near relations of Ananta. By this ekrarnama its executants admitted that the plaintiffs have title and possession to 3 annas 12 gundas share of the land in suit. The ekrarnama further provided that if the other co-sharers of the land did not join with the executants in executing a solehnama or other appropriate deed within six weeks from the date thereof, then the executants would execute a proper deed in favour of the plaintiffs, making up their aforesaid share of 3 annas 12 gundas out of their own share. None of the executants except Ananta had taken any part in the arbitration proceedings, and were in no way bound by them.

On the 24th January the complainant Rohini put in a petition before the Magistrate, alleging that his principal witnesses had been won over by the accused, and he further alleged that the dispute had already been settled. On this petition the Magistrate dismissed the case under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code for non-production of evidence.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the real object of the reference to arbitration was not to get a judicial decision on the question of the right and title of the plaintiffs in the lands in dispute, but to placate the plaintiff Birendra, and induce him to withdraw from the criminal proceedings. He further held that the ekrarnama was not a bona fide settlement of the dispute, but was executed with a view to securing the withdrawal of the criminal proceedings on charges of forgery and other non-compoundable offences, and that the consideration wholly or in part, of this agreement, was unlawful and, therefore, the agreement was void.

The High Court disagreed with the learned Subordinate Judge, and held that the reference to arbitration was a bona fide one for the settlement of the disputes as to title. They further held that the persons against whom the complaint was made were never brought before the Magistrate as accused persons, and that as the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution could not be said to have been dropped, implying thereby that the stage at which a prosecution could be said to have commenced had not been reached within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code. They further held that in the circumstances aforesaid there was no tampering with the administration of justice by the complainant or that he usurped the functions of the Judge. The High Court, on the basis of their findings that the award and ekrarnama were valid, gave certain relief to the plaintiffs against the persons who had taken part in the arbitration proceedings or who had signed the ekrarnama. From this judgment and decree of the High Court the defendants, the representatives of Ananta, and defendants Nos. 3, 5, 6, 10, 14, 16 and 18 have appealed to this Board.

It may quite well be that a prosecution only commences after a summons is issued, and that before that stage is reached a complainant cannot be said to have dropped a prosecution under the Code. (See Golap Jan v. Bholanath.¹)

Their Lordships are not called upon to express any opinion on this point, nor are they doing so. The real question involved in this appeal on this part of the case is whether any part of the consideration of the reference or the ekrarnama was unlawful, and not whether any prosecution within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code had been started or dropped. If it was an implied term of the reference or the ekrarnama that the complaint would not be further proceeded with, then in their Lordships' opinion the consideration of the reference or the ekrarnama, as the case may be, is unlawful (see *Jones v. Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society*²) and the award or the ekrarnama was invalid, quite irrespective of the fact whether any prosecution in law had been started.

With regard to the award there is a further question, namely, whether, assuming that there was a valid reference, the award was capable of being enforced against any of the defendants.

Their Lordships will first of all determine the validity of the ekrarnama.

In a case of this description it is unlikely that it would be expressly stated in the ekrarnama that a part of its consideration was an agreement to settle the criminal proceedings. It is enough for the defendants to give evidence from which the inference necessarily arises that part of the consideration is unlawful. There is, however, in this case, the evidence of Sasanka, who acted as a pleader for the plaintiffs, and was called by them in this suit. He stated before the learned Subordinate Judge as follows:—

"The former case was withdrawn the day after the execution of the agreement, at the time of which there had been an understanding between the parties that the parties would withdraw from their respective criminal cases. I understand that the result of the agreement would be to settle all disputes including the criminal cases."

Amulya, another pleader also called by the plaintiffs, stated:

"I know that the object of the compromise was to bring about a reconciliation including the dropping of the prosecution."

There is no doubt that the parties had agreed not to proceed with the complaint, as the complainant in his petition, dated the 24th January, stated to the Magistrate that the dispute had been settled.

The fact that the ekrarnama was executed only by Ananta and his very near relatives, none of whom was bound by the arbitration proceedings, is very significant. The only question is whether the agreement settling the criminal proceedings was arrived at before or after the execution of the ekrarnama. The ekrarnama, as has already been stated, was signed after 9 P.M. on the 23rd January, and it is hardly credible that after its execution the plaintiffs for the first time decided not to proceed with the complaint. Their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that, prior to the execution of the ekrarnama, it was an implied though not an expressed term, that in consideration of the executants admitting the shares of the plaintiffs they would not proceed with the charges laid by them against the accused. It is also a significant fact that when after the execution of the ekrarnama and the dismissal of the criminal proceedings the executants of the ekrarnama did not carry out its terms, the plaintiffs took steps to revive the criminal proceedings, though without success. For these reasons the ekrarnama is not enforceable against its executants.

The next question that calls for determination is whether any part of the consideration for reference to the arbitration was unlawful. The only persons amongst the principal defendants who joined in the reference were Ananta, Benoy, Krishna and Paresh. The criminal proceedings were pending at the time of the reference against the last three mentioned persons and the son of Ananta. The dispute affected the other principal defendants, as also the pro forma defendants, and no proper settlement could have been reached unless the other defendants joined in the reference.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the arbitration proceedings were "hasty and rapidly run through somehow to placate the plaintiff Birendra and to induce him to withdraw the criminal case."

Nothing was done to give effect to the award, and the proceedings were adjourned from the 8th to the 24th January, on which date*, as has been stated, the ekrarnama was executed, which in effect took the place of the award.

Their Lordships have set forth in the early part of the judgment the circumstances under which the reference was made and the manner in which the arbitration was conducted, and they are of opinion that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the reference was not a bona fide reference for settlement of civil disputes only is amply borne out by the evidence in the case. Their Lordships are also of opinion that the award was incomplete and that the parties whose presence was absolutely necessary to make it valid were never before the arbitrator.

*The ekrarnama was executed on the night of the 23rd January.—K.J.R.

For these two reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the award is not valid. The suit, therefore, so far as it is based on the ekrarnama and the award, should be dismissed.

The plaintiffs' suit was based upon their alleged title by purchase, and, alternatively, upon the award and the ekrarnama.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had succeeded in proving their title of purchase to the extent of 1 anna 4 pies share of plots Nos. 472, 473, 474 and 842. The High Court did not think it necessary, by reason of its findings on the award and the ekrarnama, to determine this question. Their Lordships think that this part of the case, not having been investigated by the High Court, should be remitted to them for further investigation. It does not appear that the plaintiffs ever gave up this part of their case.

For the reasons stated above their Lordships think that the decree of the High Court should be set aside. The defences raised by the appellants were not commendable although they are compelled to give effect to them upon grounds of public policy indicated in their judgment. They will, therefore, not give any costs of the appeal before them or before the High Court. The learned Subordinate Judge did not give any costs to any of the parties and their Lordships think that his direction as to costs was right and they will not interfere with it. The costs of the further investigation of the title will abide the result.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

--Agent of surety—Arrangement with creditor by—Binding nature on surety of—Agent principal debtor himself—Effect.

An arrangement made on behalf of the surety by an agent in that behalf previously authorised or whose purported authority is afterwards ratified is as binding upon the surety as if in the first instance the arrangement had been made by himself and none the less because the surety's representative in the arrangement with the creditor was the principal debtor himself.

For the price of goods supplied to G.H.L., he made a promissory note, which was endorsed over by the respondent, his brother. Default having been made in the payment of the note, the due holder thereof commenced an action against both the brothers on the amount of the note. When the plaintiff was in a position to enter judgment for the amount claimed, the brothers executed a deed, expressed to be made between them, as grantors, of the one part, and the plaintiff, as grantee, of the other part. It recited that the respondent was the owner of the chattels scheduled to the deed; that "the grantors are jointly and severally indebted to the grantee in the sum of £5,280," and witnessed that in consideration of that sum then owing by the grantors to the grantee "(as they do and each of them doth hereby admit)," the respondent assigned to the grantee the scheduled chattels by way of mortgage only for the purpose of securing its repayment with interest in the manner thereafter provided, and the grantors jointly and severally covenanted inter alia for repayment on or before a specified date in the manner provided by the deed.

Held, that the position of the respondent under the above-mentioned deed was that of a principal debtor and not that of a surety only for his brother.

Wilfred Greene and J. H. Stamp for appellant.

Respondent in person.

13th June, 1929. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord
Blanesburgh.

LORD BLANESBURGH.—The action out of which this appeal arises was in 1927 commenced in the Supreme Court of New Zealand by the appellant as plaintiff against the respondent and his brother, George Henry Lysnar, as defendants. Its purpose was to enforce so far as then unperformed the obligations of the defendants under a deed of security and joint and several covenant, dated the 21st December, 1923, and made by them in favour of one Charles John Dunlop Bennett, to whose rights thereunder the appellant had succeeded by a deed of transfer duly registered on the 7th August, 1924. The defendant George Henry Lysnar at the trial submitted at last to judgment, and he has disappeared from the subsequent proceedings. The respondent's main defence was that he was no more than a surety for his co-defendant in respect of their joint and several covenants contained in the deed, and that he had been discharged from all liability thereunder by reason of a certain arrangement for giving time alleged to have been come to between the appellant and the principal debtor without the respondent's "approval or consent," a somewhat ambiguous phrase.

The Courts of the Dominion, perhaps accepting the allegation at its face value, assumed, as it would appear, without any definite inquiry into the circumstances, that the arrangement alluded to was one for which George Henry Lysnar was solely responsible, and they did not concern themselves to ascertain how far, in fact, the respondent was cognizant of and had become bound by its terms. In consequence they occupied themselves chiefly with the question—in their eyes the most important—whether notice of the position of the respondent as a surety only could properly at the date of the arrangement be imputed to the appellant. And in the result these Courts were in difference as to the proper answer. The learned Trial Judge held that such notice could not be so imputed and decreed the action against the respondent. The Court of Appeal, on the other hand, being of opinion that the appellant must at the critical date be fixed with notice of the respondent's position as between his brother and himself, adjudged the respondent to be discharged by the arrangement referred to from all further liability under the deed, and by an order of the 18th October, 1927, dismissed him from the action with costs. Hence the present appeal.

In the course of the arguments before the Board, not only this question on which the Dominion Courts were divided, but many others of interest in connection with the law of suretyship, were fully canvassed. A review of the whole case has served, however, to make it clear to the Board that such questions may not survive for determination by them if an affirmative answer is, on investigation, given to the fundamental inquiry not so far judicially pronounced upon, viz., whether the respondent must not be held to be as completely committed to and bound by the arrangement referred to as was his co-defendant who concluded it. In the review of the facts to which their Lordships now proceed they will not stop until they have examined those upon which the answer to this preliminary and, it may be, decisive inquiry must depend.

The debt secured by the deed of the 21st December, 1923, originated in a promissory note for £5,215 1s. 10d., dated the 24th May, 1922, made by George Henry Lysnar, and endorsed by the respondent, in favour of a firm of Bennett & Sherratt. The note was for the price of goods supplied to George Henry Lysnar. On the subsequent dissolution of the firm of Bennett and Sherratt the above-named. Charles John Dunlop Bennett became its holder in due course. Default was made, and on the 26th October, 1923, Mr. Bennett, having failed to obtain payment, commenced an action against both of the Lysnars for the amount of the note.

No defence was put in by the defendants and the plaintiff being thus in a position to enter judgment for the amount claimed, intimated to each defendant by identical letters of his solicitors, Messrs. Burnard & Bull, that, failing payment by the morning of the following 20th December, 1923, judgment would be entered and proceeded upon without delay.

These letters brought both defendants to the solicitors' office on the date named. There they had an interview with Mr. Burnard, in the course of which the respondent explained that it was then inconvenient to find cash for the amount due, and he offered to furnish security from his own property if time for payment were given and judgment in the action not taken. This was agreed to by Mr. Burnard on Mr. Bennett's behalf subject to the execution by the respondent and his brother of a deed embodying the terms then foreshadowed. Instructions to prepare such a deed were given by Mr. Burnard to his partner, Mr. Bull, and the actual deed of the 21st December, in which the final terms are embodied, shows on its face the alterations before execution made in the draft as so prepared.

The deed executed is expressed to be made between the two brothers, as grantors, of the one part, and Mr. Bennett, as grantee, of the other part. It recites that the respondent is the owner of the chattels scheduled to the deed: that "the grantors are jointly and severally indebted to the grantee in the sum of £5,280," and witnesses that in consideration of that sum now owing by the grantors to the grantee "(as they do and each of them doth hereby admit)," the respondent assigns to the grantee the scheduled chattels by way of mortgage only for the purpose of securing its repayment with interest in the manner thereafter provided, and the grantors jointly and severally covenant inter alia for repayment on or before the 20th December, 1926, of the £5,280 in the manner following:—

- (a) £1,000 on or before 20th January, 1924.
- (b) £1,000 on or before 20th January, 1925.
- (c) £1,000 on or before 20th January, 1926.
- (d) The balance on or before 20th January, 1927.

The principal moneys outstanding are also expressed to carry quarterly payments of interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, reducible on punctual payment to 8 per cent.

It is not questioned—it has, indeed, been admitted by the respondent—that the deed on its face contains no indication or suggestion that his position thereunder is that of a surety only. On the contrary, his part in the transaction is to all appearance that of protagonist. His name is first in the order of liability. It is his separate property which is made security for a debt recited as being one for which each obligant is at the moment of execution jointly and severally liable. And the significance of all this is the more marked when it is remembered that the liabilities of the respondent to the grantee were not by the deed being assumed for the first time. Indeed, to their Lordships it seems clear that the liability which was then being dealt with was treated as the equivalent of the liability on the part of the grantors which would have been constituted by the mere formality of entering judgment against them in the pending action. In other words, their former obligations in respect of the note were treated as having ripened into a joint and several debt of agreed amount immediately exigible. If that debt was not at once to be enforced, then, in respect of it, new obligations had to be entered into and security for its repayment provided. All of which was the purpose of the deed.

To meet these obstacles to the success of his main defence the respondent at the trial was concerned to prove that as between himself and his brother he had been and that, in respect of the new covenants, he remained, no more than a surety, and, further, that notice of that fact was expressly given by him to Mr. Burnard prior to the execution of the deed. Upon much of this, as it turned out, there was no real contest. It was not seriously disputed that the respondent's original liability under the promissory note transaction had been that of a surety only, while his statement that, by later arrangement with his brother, it so continued under the deed was not seriously challenged. Further, it may be inferred from the evidence of Mr. Bennett that the position of the respondent as surety under the promissory note ought to have been known to him and also, although this was disputed, to Mr. Burnard as his solicitor. Finally, the appellant accepted the position that any notice or knowledge imputable to her husband was equally imputable to herself.

But here real conflict began. No attempt was made by question or otherwise to establish that Mr. Bennett, on receiving the deed of 1923, had any reason to suppose that as between the grantors the obligations, thereby undertaken were other than they thereby appeared, and the evidence of the respondent, which sought to establish that he had brought home to Mr. Burnard by express statement the fact that he remained a surety only in the transaction was not accepted by the learned Trial Judge. The respondent's recollection, given in evidence, was that in the draft of the deed shown him there appeared a recital that he was a principal debtor, that he insisted on the deletion of that statement, and that after heated words Mr. Burnard agreed to such deletion. But both Mr. Burnard and his partner, Mr. Bull, denied that any draft with any such statement in it ever existed. The only draft was that which became the deed, and alterations made in it before execution showed on examination that it had never contained any such statement as the respondent had deposed to. And Mr. Burnard went further. Not only was no such statement made to him as the respondent had asserted, but had he himself supposed the respondent to be a surety he would have had to take his client's instructions before he accepted any security which did not, like a banker's mortgage, relieve the creditor from all consequential embarrassments. And the learned Trial Judge accepted Mr. Burnard's evidence on this matter, and his findings have not since been questioned. And it was not suggested to him, nor has it with any effect been suggested since, that notice of the respondent's position of suretyship under the deed was at any relevant subsequent date given or imputable to Mr. Burnard, or, through him or otherwise, to the appellant his wife. The question, therefore, whether notice of the respondent's suretyship in respect of the covenants in the deed may properly be imputed to Mr. Burnard at the date of the arrangement, in a moment to be referred to, must now, in the face of his accepted statement that he did not suspect it, be made to depend entirely upon the fact that he knew, or must be taken to have known, that the relation of surety and principal existed between the respondent and his brother in relation to the liability under the promissory note, and that, notwithstanding the obligation into which that liability had ripened, and notwithstanding the readiness of the respondent to execute a security which appeared to negative the continued existence of the relationship, Mr.

Burnard was bound to presume that suretyship persisted until by inquiry he ascertained that it had ceased.

Their Lordships have thought it right to review in detail the facts with reference to which this question of imputed notice must in this case be decided. They have done so because, as they see these facts, the resulting proposition of law is very different from that discussed by the Court of Appeal when that Court decided this issue in the respondent's favour.

But having said so much, their Lordships pass on. They will return to this question if, having examined the later history, they find that any decision of theirs upon it is called for.

That subsequent history is simplified if the fact be borne in mind that, beyond his liability under the deed to Mr. Bennett, Mr. George Henry Lysnar had mortgaged certain of his properties to Messrs. Burnard & Bull to secure a separate indebtedness of his own. With that indebtedness the respondent was in no way concerned, but it is from time to time referred to in, and had considerable influence upon, the correspondence to which attention will presently be directed.

As to the first instalment of £1,000 payable under the deed, no question arises. It was duly satisfied as arranged. No interest, however, was paid in 1924, and on December 22nd of that year the respondent and George Henry Lysnar were notified by Mr. Burnard in identical letters that £1,000 principal was due on the 20th January, 1925, and that, in addition to the overdue interest, payment of that amount would be required on that day. To this demand upon each of them no response was made either by the respondent or George Henry Lysnar.

On January 21, 1925, a further letter was addressed by Mr. Burnard to George Henry Lysnar, and a copy of it sent by him at the same time to the respondent. In that letter Mr. Burnard complained that his letter of the 22nd December had been ignored: interest amounting to £428 had accrued: matters could not be allowed to stand over any longer in that unsatisfactory state, and the security was now overdue: provided, however, that £400 was paid by George Henry Lysnar in respect of his personal mortgage to the writer's firm, and the sum of £428 interest and £600 principal upon the security from the respondent and himself paid, the writer would be prepared to treat that security as current and allow a further three months for payment of the balance of overdue principal, £400. The letter concluded as follows:—

"You will understand that if this proposal is not strictly complied with I shall be obliged to take steps to enforce the security."

It is not suggested that either obligant had any answer to the demand made by the letter of the 22nd December, and the last passage in the letter of January 21st must have shown the respondent, when he read it, that in the absence of some arrangement for postponement the security furnished by himself was at serious risk. In other words, the demand made upon him was direct, and the consequences of neglect serious.

In the similar situation of December, 1923, the demand then made brought, as has been seen, both the respondent and his brother to Mr. Burnard's office, with the result already stated. On this occasion the demands brought George Henry Lysnar alone, and he had several interviews with Mr. Burnard. The arrangement of which so much has been heard in these proceedings was reached at the last of these interviews on the 27th March, 1925. Throughout them all, their Lordships cannot doubt, George Henry Lysnar was present, not only on his own account, but with full knowledge of the respondent, and intent on making, on behalf of both, as he purported to do, the best arrangement possible for postponing payment of what was due.

The arrangement for postponement reached between Mr. Burnard and George Henry Lysnar on the 27th March is correctly embodied, as is agreed, in the memorandum of its terms prepared by Mr. Burnard and sent by him on the same day to George Henry Lysnar in order, as he says, that the signatures of the respondent and himself might be attached thereto, and the document be then exchanged for one in like terms signed by himself.

By the first clause of the memorandum the interest then accrued is agreed at £581. Clauses 2 and 3 are as follows:—

"2. The Messrs. Lysnar are to pay £120 on account of such accrued interest, leaving the sum of £461 to be paid on 1st December next.

"3. The Messrs. Lysnar desire the principal sum of £1,000, which fell due on 20th January last, to remain on until 1st December next. It is agreed that the Messrs. Lysnar shall pay £80 by way of premium and shall pay the said sum of £1,000 on 1st December next, together with the above sum of £461, being the sum of £1,461 in all."

By the final clause it is provided that all further payments of interest and all other obligations under the security are to be duly performed and observed.

The memorandum was accompanied by the following letter addressed to George Henry Lysnar:—

"W. D. AND G. H. LYSNAR TO L. T. BURNARD.

"We enclose herewith statement of agreement regarding this security, the understanding being that, provided your order for £600 on Messrs. Common, Shelton & Co. is duly met, and the sums of £400 owing to Messrs. Burnard & Bull under Memorandum of Mortgage, and of £80 and £120 mentioned in attached memorandum [paid], then the agreement contained in such memorandum shall take effect."

It is not necessary to look beyond this memorandum and its accompanying letter to see that the only agreement there recorded was one with both obligants and that it originated in the expressed desire for postponement, not by one, but by each of them. That such was its nature has never been denied by George Henry Lysnar, who negotiated it, and, as it seems to the Board, it was, in these circumstances, only natural that the record of the agreement as adjusted should be sent to George alone.

It is, however, unfortunate that the precaution of sending copies to the respondent was not taken, for the omission has in these proceedings been magnified by him into a circumstance of decisive importance.

Yet truly it was in the result of no consequence whatever. The respondent has never alleged that because no such duplicates were sent to him he remained in ignorance either of the terms of the documents or of what had happened. Indeed, before the Board he stated that he was willing that his case should be determined on the footing that everything that had passed between Mr. Burnard and George Henry Lysnar was at once communicated to him. And this conclusion their Lordships would themselves have reached, even if the respondent had not expressed his willingness that they should assume it. They have seen the respondent and have had the opportunity of appreciating his intelligence, and they cannot doubt that he speedily informed himself, through his brother, of the terms upon which alone Mr. Burnard's demand for immediate payment and his threat to enforce the security had been withdrawn. Any doubt their Lordships might otherwise have entertained on this subject is dispelled by the respondent's reception of Mr. Burnard's succeeding letters to himself. These letters as the respondent agreed when the question was put to him, are written by one who is assuming, as a matter of course, both the knowledge of the agreement and the adhesion of the respondent to it. And from the respondent there is neither protest against nor disclaimer of that position.

The letters are so striking that their Lordships think it right to refer to them specifically. They feel a satisfaction that their conclusions on this part of the case do not have exclusively to depend on concessions made in the course of argument by a respondent in person.

The first letter is as early as the 1st April, 1925—written, that is to say, before the agreement of March 27th had ceased to be conditional. Messrs. Common, Shelton & Co. had refused to pay over the £600. The letter goes on:—

“This is completely contrary to Mr. George Lysnar’s statement to the writer that the matter had been definitely arranged with Mr. Smallbone, and will make it impossible for the matter to be completed on the lines arranged.

“Under these circumstances, we have to notify you that, failing the matter being carried out as previously arranged by 10 A.M. on Friday next, 3rd inst., we will be obliged to take immediate steps to enforce the security.”

This letter the respondent received in silence. Later George Henry Lysnar paid the £600 in two instalments, and on June 25, 1925, after payment of the second of these, Mr. Burnard sent to the respondent a memorandum of the moneys due to date. “You will recollect,” the letter says, “that under the arrangement made on the 27th March last the arrears of principal and interest due to that date were allowed to stand over until December 1st next, the sum of £1,461 to be paid on that date.”

To this letter again the respondent made no response. There is no correction, protest, nor disclaimer. There is merely the continued enjoyment by himself of the benefits secured by the agreement referred to.

In December the moneys promised were not paid, and on March 26, 1926, Mr. Burnard again wrote the respondent. After saying that Mr. George Lysnar had made a definite promise towards the end of November that the matter would be settled by the middle of December, he continues: “Unless payment is made by 10 o’clock on Thursday next, the 1st April, I shall have to proceed to enforce the security.”

Again no reply from the respondent. But on April 14, 1926, a sum of £1,750 on account was paid to Mr. Burnard, being part of a larger sum of £2,500 then, although unknown to Mr. Burnard, raised for the purpose by George Henry Lysnar on the guarantee of the respondent. And on the same 14th April, 1926, there was sent to the respondent a statement of account showing £3,465 2s. 0d. still covered by the deed, after credit given for the £1,750. Again no response or disclaimer of any kind from him.

And so matters on this subject remained until, this action having been commenced in consequence of further defaults, the respondent in his statement of defence for the first time alleged that the agreement of the 27th of March, 1925, having been made without his approval or consent, he as a mere surety was thereby discharged from all liability under the deed sued on.

Their Lordships on the above review of the facts can have no doubt that this allegation of the respondent's has not been made good. Whether the arrangement was made without his previous approval or consent—which may be all the allegation is intended to convey—they do not pause further to inquire, because they are satisfied that if the arrangement in terms made on his behalf as a party thereto was not previously authorised, it was subsequently ratified by him, so that it became an arrangement with himself as completely as if his signature had been in the event attached thereto. It is only thus that without attributing to the respondent a dishonourable silence which their Lordships would be slow to impute to him, his failure to dissociate himself from the agreement, as an answer to Mr. Burnard's successive letters, can be understood. It is only thus that his joining with George Henry Lysnar as late as 1926 in raising money towards meeting Mr. Burnard's demands can be explained.

The respondent sought to account for his silence and action by suggesting that until by service of the writ a direct demand for payment by himself was made, he had not troubled to investigate and did not really know the facts. It was only after the inquiry which he then made that he came to realise that he had by the arrangement of March, 1925, been completely discharged.

The respondent does not in this statement do himself justice. Direct demands upon him for payment had been made, as has been seen, before the arrangement, on the 22nd December, 1924, and the 21st January, 1925, and, after it, on the 1st April, 1925, and the 26th March, 1926. His knowledge of the arrangement itself he has never denied. This inquiry of his after writ could not have brought him knowledge of any relevant fact that he had not thoroughly known all along. What may well have been suggested to him by it was the view of the law, since apparently entertained by him, that, notwithstanding all the circumstances just stated, he was as a surety discharged because notice of the arrangement had not been directly sent him on the appellant's behalf, and because he had not expressly agreed to be bound by its terms after such notice had been so given him. And this was his contention before the Board.

But the view of his legal position, as so contended for by him, has, in their Lordships' view, neither principle nor authority to support it. An arrangement made on behalf of a surety by an agent in that behalf previously authorised or whose purported authority is afterwards ratified is as binding upon the surety as if in the first instance the arrangement had been made by himself and none the less because the surety's representative in the arrangement with the creditor was, as here, the principal debtor himself.

Their Lordships accordingly do not find it necessary, so far as this defence of the respondent is concerned, further to consider the question of notice which they have reserved.

Nor, although for a different reason, is this necessity imposed upon them by a further defence to the claim against him put before the Board by the respondent, but not dealt with either by the learned Trial Judge or by the Court of Appeal. George Henry Lysnar had, the respondent suggested, at a later date been given further time by the appellant without his knowledge or consent, and he, as a surety, was thereby discharged. On April 14, 1926, when Mr. Burnard was paid by George Henry Lysnar, as above appears, £1,750 on account, there was then due, not only principal and interest in arrear amounting in all to £2,474 2s. 0d., but the whole amount secured by the deed. That had become immediately payable by reason of default in payment of the overdue instalments. In these circumstances, so the respondent contended, not only did Mr. Burnard agree that the balance then due of £724 2s. 0d. should stand over until the 20th January, 1927, but he renounced his right to immediate payment of the whole debt then unpaid. To all of which the answer is that no such agreement to postpone has either been proved or found, while, as to the so-called renunciation, a reference to the deed already set forth shows quite clearly that default in payment of instalments at their due date does not accelerate any instalment not then payable.

Before the Board the respondent also rested this part of his case on a statement of Mr. Burnard's in a letter to George Henry Lysnar of November 27, 1927: "We are, however, prepared to wait until 20th January for payment of the whole of the remaining principal." And that money was due and payable, so says the respondent; on the previous 20th December, 1926.

To which the answer is that it was not so payable, and that the view of George Henry Lysnar in his letter of 26th November, 1926, and accepted by Mr. Burnard, was quite correct. Whatever effect might have to be given to the provision of the deed that the principal sum of £5,280 as one sum was to be paid on the 20th December, 1926—its retention in the deed is an obvious oversight when the original is looked at—it remains the fact that for payment of the last instalment as such no date earlier than the 20th January, 1927, is fixed.

Moreover, their Lordships can in this statement find no agreement at all to postpone—certainly none supported by any consideration. This contention, which was almost trivial, fails the respondent also, and no other answer to the claim against him being put forward by the respondent before the Board, it follows that the appeal succeeds.

To the respondent's case the appellant had further answers, to which no allusion has here been made. It is not, in the circumstances, necessary for the Board further to, consider these.

On the whole case their Lordships are of opinion that the order of the Court of Appeal of the 18th October, 1927, should be discharged, and that the order of the learned Trial Judge of the 12th April, 1927, should, for the reasons just given, be restored. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The respondent must pay to the appellant her costs in the Court of Appeal and of this appeal.

In a suit for the dissolution of a partnership and for accounts the Court passed a final decree which besides containing certain provisions such as normally find place in a final decree for the dissolution of a partnership further directed that "the first defendant do take the good outstandings due to the firm as found in the Commissioner's report and that he do account to the other partners for the same." The decree was passed on 22nd March, 1915, but no attempt was made by any of the parties to enforce the direction given to the first defendant till 14th October, 1925, when an application was made by one of them for the passing of a final decree in pursuance of the direction.

Held, that the direction in the final decree was of an interlocutory character, that by force of it the suit continued to be pending and that the later application being one for the passing of a final decree was not subject to the law of limitation.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Devakotta, dated 30th June, 1927, in I.A. No. 574 of 1926 in O.S. No. 31 of 1913 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad.

C. S. Venkatachariar for appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition is presented against the order of the Principal Subordinate Judge of Devakotta in the following circumstances. The suit out of which it arises was instituted for the dissolution of a partnership and for accounts in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad. It was transferred to the then existing Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad and he passed a preliminary decree, on 23rd October, 1913, dissolving the partnership from the date of the plaint and appointing a Commissioner to examine and report upon the accounts. The Commissioner presented his report on 14th January, 1915, and the Temporary Subordinate Judge passed a final decree on 22nd March, 1915. It is with the legal aspect of a passage in this decree that we are now concerned. The decree contains certain provisions such as normally find place in a final decree for the dissolution of a partnership and then occurs the following passage:

"This Court doth further direct that the 1st defendant do take the good outstandings due to the firm as found in the Commissioner's report and that he do account to the other partners for the same."

This is based upon a passage in the judgment which says:

"As the 1st defendant has always been the managing partner and as he has been instituting suits for recovery of all outstandings, etc., the good outstandings due to the firm as found in the Commissioner's report will be taken by him and he will account to the partners for the same."

It appears from the Commissioner's report that the parties failed to assist in the realization of the assets and the settlement of their accounts and accordingly he had to propose to the Court the appointment of a receiver for this purpose, and the Court decided to take the course above-mentioned. The 1st defendant appealed against this decree to the High Court but died before the appeal was disposed of. Nevertheless, the above-quoted passage was reproduced in the appellate decree. So far as we are concerned, it is agreed that we may disregard the appellate decree in this respect and may base ourselves upon the terms of the decree, dated 22nd March, 1915. No attempt was made by any of the parties to enforce the direction given to the 1st defendant until 14th October, 1925, when the 6th defendant, son of one of the partners, applied to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura to pass a final decree in pursuance of that direction. About a year later the application was returned by the Additional Subordinate Judge on the ground that he had no jurisdiction and it was represented to the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Devakotta.

I will deal first with an objection, which, however, has not been strongly pressed, that the Lower Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the suit. I have said that it was originally disposed of by the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad. That Court was abolished on 1st January, 1926, two Subordinate Judges being attached to the Sub-Court of Ramnad at Madura from that date. The application now in question had been filed before the change took place and assuming that the suit to which it related was a pending suit, it should have been transferred to the Ramnad or to the Devakotta Court, since in the case of a pending suit a transfer of territorial jurisdiction will not per se result in a transfer of the suit: *Subramania Aiyar v. Swaminatha Chettiar*¹ and Chokkalinga Pillai v. Velayuda Mudaliar.² I infer that what took place was that all suits at the time pending before the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad were distributed between Ramnad and Devakotta, but that, inasmuch as the present suit had to all appearances been disposed of, no such order was made with regard to it. Section 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure would have sufficiently provided for any subsequent proceedings if the suit had already been disposed of; but if, as I propose to hold, the suit was still pending, a transfer order was technically necessary. Since, however, it has now been dealt with by the Court which has jurisdiction over the place where the cause of action arose, and to whose file it would certainly have been transferred if any transfer had been ordered, I think that the irregularity is no more than technical and does not form a fit subject for revision.

In the order under consideration the learned Subordinate Judge has given reasons for holding that the direction in the final decree is of an interlocutory character, that by force of it the suit is still pending, and that the application, which is in its nature an application to pass a final decree, is not subject to the law of limitation. He has, therefore, decided to take the suit on his file and proceed with it. This order has been attacked on two alternative grounds—

(1) the direction given to the 1st defendant is not in the nature of a preliminary decree, but if it is,

(2) the application is barred under Art. 181 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, as having been made more than three years from the date of the decree.

It was in point of fact made about ten and a half years after the Trial Court's decree and six years after the High Court's decree.

It is contended in the first place that the Code contemplates only one preliminary decree and one final decree, whereas what we must refer to here as the final decree is in fact a composite decree, part final and part preliminary; so that the preliminary portion would require a further final decree to be passed. This position cannot, I think, be substantiated either by the terms of the Code or by any case-law. The definition of "decree" in section 2 (2) concludes with an explanation which says that a decree may be partly preliminary and partly final; and I can find nothing in the Code repugnant to the notion that more than one preliminary or more than one final decree may be passed. There are some observations of Krishnan, J., in Ghulusam Bivi v. Ahamadsa Rowther,³ which deals with a partition suit, to the effect that the Code does not contemplate more than one preliminary decree and one final decree in one suit, and that to have two final decrees and to call the first one a final decree would be a misnomer. I do not think he intended to say that, where circumstances so require, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass a composite decree. A situation rather similar to the present forms the subject of some observations by Mukerjee, J., at page 260, Raja Peary Mohan v. Manohar.⁴ He says:

1. (1928) 28 L.W. 886.

"It may be conceded that the legislature contemplated that ordinarily there should be one preliminary decree and one final decree in a suit; the preliminary decree ascertains what is to be done, while the final decree states the result achieved by means of the preliminary decree. But as observed by Piggott, J., in *Yaqub Husain v. Bharatendu*⁵ there may be exceptions, and the case before us furnishes an instance. Here the original suit was for removal of the shebait, for cancellation of the judicial sale and for recovery of the trust property. The decree made in the suit has directed the removal of the shebait and the cancellation of the sale subject to the investigation of accounts to be rendered by the shebait in a supplementary proceeding. The order which has now been made is in essence a preliminary decree in the supplementary proceeding and will lead up to the final decree to be made therein."

There is another Calcutta case, Jashoda Dasee v. Upendra Nath,⁶ where it was found necessary to pass a supplementary final decree dealing with the portion undisposed of in the earlier final decree, that suit being one for partition. I do not think there can be any serious doubt that there is nothing illegal in passing more than one final decree, and in fact Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar does not go so far as to suggest it. What he does say is that such a course is so unusual that neither the Court nor the parties can be held to have contemplated it, and so far as the Court is concerned he points as an indication of intention to the omission to adjourn to a further date. He supports his argument by reference to Daniell's Chancery Practice, 8th Ed., Vol. I, page 686, where the test whether a judgment is interlocutory or final is said to consist in whether it adjourns

the consideration of the cause or not. Where there is a final judgment, liberty to apply may be given without however altering the final nature of the judgment. I do not think, however, that inferences derived from Chancery practice can be safely applied to procedure in India, and it seems to me that no conclusive inference can be drawn from the mere circumstance that the Court failed to provide for any further hearing. We must, I think, look to the terms of the decree rather than speculate upon the Court's intentions, and ask ourselves what is the nature of this part of the so-called final decree. The plaint was framed in terms customary to a suit of this character and asked for the realization and distribution of the assets. Normally then the final decree should be such as is given in Form No. 22 of Appendix D to the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the distribution of the fund in Court which has been realised by the receiver or otherwise. It is quite clear that the suit, when it was disposed of by the decree on 22nd March, 1915, had not been brought to its natural end, judged by these tests. - In the Privy Council case *Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Abdul Azis*⁷ the Trial Court had originally passed a decree for a declaration and for possession of immoveable property without deciding the question of mesne profits. About the mesne profits, indeed, the decree made no mention. Even so their Lordships held that the inquiry into mesne profits in the suit should proceed; and the following passage deserves quotation:

"The Subordinate Judge had before him a case consisting of two parts: a question of title and an incidental question of account depending largely on the title. It was for the obvious advantage of the parties, and they proposed, that the first should be decided and the second reserved for decision. In point of fact, the first part has been the subject of successive appeals by the defendant who successfully struggled against the trial of the second part pending these appeals. If the Code forbade the parties and the Court so to arrange the disposal of a law suit, it would be a very startling thing. It is not pretended that the Code contains any such prohibition."

These remarks I think apply mutatis mutandis to the present case. A decree means something which "conclusively determines" (a phrase substituted for "decides" by the Code of 1908) "the rights of the parties". Here it has left undetermined and undisposed of the distribution of assets to be realised by the 1st defendant, and the duty of the Court has accordingly not been completely discharged. I hold, therefore, that upon this point the learned Subordinate Judge is clearly right. Even were the correctness of his decision less clear, it would scarcely be for this Court in revision to interfere where the Court below has declared its willingness to conduct the matters outstanding between the parties to their final conclusion.

Ramanathan

Granting then that the direction to the 1st defendant amounts to a preliminary decree, it is further contended that where, as here, there is no adjournment order, further application should have been made within the time prescribed, and Art. 181 is said to prescribe that time. Whether this is so or not depends, I think, on whether it is to be held that between preliminary and final decrees the suit is pending, because it can hardly be contended that an application in a pending suit, as we ordinarily use that expression, is subject to limitation. Mr. Venkatachariar contends that after a preliminary decree has been passed the suit is not pending in the sense that the rights of the parties have still to be decided. Before going through some of the cases cited for this proposition, I will allude to the special case of mortgage suits. It has no doubt been held that applications for a decree absolute and for a personal decree, under Order 34, Rules 5 and 6, respectively, are subject to Art. 181: the decree-holder must apply within three years. (See Ghulusam Bivi v. Ahamadsa Rowther,³ Mummadji Venkatiah v. Bhoganatham Venkata Subbiah,⁸ *Rama Venkatasubba Aiyar v. Shanmugham Pillai*⁹ and Pell v. Gregory.¹⁰) I do not think, however, that from these special cases a general proposition can be deduced. The rules under the Code make express provision for such applications and the Court has no duty cast upon it in the absence of them. The view I take in the present case is that the Court should itself have disposed of the suit, and that the Court, rather than the party, was responsible for further action.

On the question of the pendency of the suit, I have been taken through a number of cases under the old Code, mainly originating in Madras and Calcutta. There was under that Code no such device as a preliminary and a final decree for the trial of partnership and partition suits, and different notions arose as to when the single decree should be passed and how much should be left over for execution, difficulties which no doubt gave rise to the introduction of the preliminary and final decrees. In *Seshan v. Rajagopala*¹¹ the decree passed for partition was in the nature of what we should now call a preliminary decree and the remainder of the operations had to be done in execution. In Appadu v. Venkata Ranga Rau,¹² on the other hand, the view taken was that in a partition suit the decree should ensue upon the actual division. The position was laid down in general terms by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., at page 277 in *Mallikarjunadu Setti v. Lingamurti Pantulu*¹³, with regard to partition suits. He had of course to deal with a single decree, and when he said that a suit terminates only when the decree is fully effectuated and that it includes proceedings in execution, it may be conceded that the terms he used were used in a wider sense than we have to employ them here. The difficulties which arose in dealing with partition suits under the old Code are illustrated in *Latchmanan Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty*¹⁴, where the learned Judges found it impossible to decide what precisely was the decree in the suit. These cases, however, are not of much assistance here. More in point is Srinivasa Mudali v. Ramaswamy Mudali.¹⁵ In that case a compromise decree for partition had been passed, and the question arose whether an application for the appointment of a Commissioner to work out the shares recoverable under it was barred by limitation. This depended on whether the application was in execution or in the suit. The learned Judges held that such an order could have been made by the Lower Court at any time of its own motion as a step in the disposal of the suit, and that there could be no question of any bar of limitation in connection with the application for it.

Turning to the Calcutta cases, *Kedarnath Dutt v. Harra Chand Dutt*¹⁶ related to a partition, and in 1870 a decree was passed directing a commission to issue to effect the partition. For reasons which I need not go into, no effectual steps were taken for over 10 years, when the plaintiff applied for proceedings to continue. He was met by a plea of limitation, but Wilson, J., held that, the application being one in a pending suit, the right to apply was a right which accrues from day to day, and, therefore, it was not barred by lapse of time. It will be noted that this related to a stage in the cause after the only decree then provided for by the Code had been passed.

This case was followed by Stephen, J., in Surendra Keshub Roy v. Khetter Krishto Mitter.¹⁷

In the Full Bench case *Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen*¹⁸ it was held that where the decree provided that mesne profits should be ascertained in the execution department, no rule of limitation attached to an application to ascertain them. The view taken was that for that purpose the suit was still pending, and that the Court was bound, even without any application, to fix a date for the inquiry. The learned Judges say:

“There is nothing in the Code compelling a person having the conduct of a pending suit to make formal applications from time to time, asking the Court to proceed to judgment.”

This case was followed in *Dwarka Nath Misser v. Barinda Nath Misser*¹⁹ in regard to an application to appoint an arbitrator in a partition suit, and printed with the report is a judgment of Prinsep and Ghose, JJ., to the same effect. It follows a fortiori that, on the principles underlying these decisions, an application for a final decree is an application in the suit and is not subject to any limitation.

As regards the position under the present Code, the petitioner relied mainly on the Full Bench case Perumal Pillay v. Perumal Chetty.²⁰ The question referred for decision was whether Order 22, Rules 3 and 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied to cases of death after the passing of the preliminary decree. The answer given was that the provisions did not apply and that the suit did not abate so as to vacate the preliminary decree. This question does not strictly concern us, but Mr. Venkatachariar has sought to derive from some observations of the learned Chief Justice, who delivered the opinion, the principle that a suit for all purposes is concluded by the preliminary decree. I have been unable to discover any such unqualified proposition in the judgment. The principle relied upon was that the right of action had been determined before the death of the defendant by the passing of the preliminary decree and the learned Chief Justice went on to say that this was so because “the final decree is only by way of working out in detail the principles laid down and determined in the preliminary decree”. It is nowhere said that the proceedings which take place between the two decrees are not in the nature of a suit, nor of course is it suggested that all the matters in issue between the parties are finally disposed of by the preliminary decree. Indeed it may often happen that most of the contentious work has to be done after a preliminary decree has been passed, and has to be settled by the final decree. It may be observed that the learned referring Judges in that case assumed that the suit was still pending. In the Privy Council case *Lachmi Narain Marwari v. Balmakund Marwari*²¹ cited in this judgment, a case which related to a dismissal for default of a partition suit after the preliminary decree, the simple principle laid down is that

"after a decree has once been made in a suit, the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed on appeal. The parties have, on the making of the decree, acquired rights or incurred liabilities which are fixed, unless or until the decree is varied or set aside."

I do not find, therefore, that this case is authority for the proposition for which it is cited.

It is clear to me that the suit continues for some purposes at least until the final decree; it would indeed be an anomaly if any decree could be reached by proceedings other than a suit. That being so, I have been shown no authority for the view that an application in a pending suit desiring the Court to proceed to judgment is governed by any rule of limitation. So far as the examples shown to me go, applications which are so governed will be found not to be of this character. In *Kalyani Pillai v. Thiruvankadaswami Aliyengar*²² the application was to bring on record the legal representatives of a respondent to a Privy Council appeal. *Mangamma Nayakuralu v. Ramadasappa Nayanimvaray*²³ related to execution. *Swaminatha Pillai v. Rajagopala Mudaliar*²⁴ was an unusual case where a trustee who had brought a suit died and application was made to transpose a co-trustee defendant as plaintiff. It is difficult to say whether, in the interval between death and transposition, the suit could be held to be pending. The case in *Hindustan Bank v. Mehraj Din*²⁵ related to the Indian Companies Act. Indeed, the only case in point, Srinivasa Mudaly v. Ramaswamy Mudaly,¹⁵ to which I have already referred, appears to me very good authority against the application of the Limitation Act.

I think, accordingly, that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in his view that no question of limitation arises, as well as in the construction which he has placed upon the disputed passage in the decree. In a suit by a Zemindar against several inamdars* to recover compensation for the unauthorised use by the defendant of the water of the plaintiff's tank for the second crop on the defendants' inams, the plaintiff admitted the defendants' right to use the water of the tank for the first crop but denied their right for the second. Held, that the right admitted by the plaintiff and claimed by the defendant was one of easement and that as the evidence established the defendants' user of the water of the suit tank for raising a second crop for twenty years and more the defendants were entitled to an easement by prescriptive right.

Held further that as the whole decree was questioned in the revision petition and the finding of fact related to all the defendants the whole decree of the Court below against all the defendants should, under O. 41, R. 4, Civil Procedure Code, be set aside though the revision petition itself had been preferred by only one of them.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Kanigiri in S.C.S. No. 504 of 1926.

A. Krishnaswami Aiyar for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition is against the decree passed by the District Munsif of Kanigiri in S. C. S. No. 504 of 1926. This Small Cause suit and a number of others were filed by the Raja of Venkata-giri against several inamdars to recover compensation for the alleged unauthorised use by the defendants of the water of the plaintiff's tank for the second crop on the defendants' inams. Such compensation was claimed in the shape of water rate or price for the use of water said to be unauthorisedly used.

The defendants are the inamdars. The plaintiff is the Zemindar. There is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. It is admitted that the tank water which was said to be used by the defendants belongs to the plaintiff. If the defendants used the water of the tank without having a right to do so they would be committing trespass and would be legally liable to pay damages to the plaintiff. But the defendants say that they are entitled to use the water of the tank for their lands. The question therefore to be decided in the case is whether the defendants have any right to use the water of the plaintiff's tank for their lands.

Now the plaintiff admits that the defendants are entitled to use the water of the tank for the first crop but not for the second crop. The right so admitted by the plaintiff and claimed by the defendants, obviously is a right of easement. The only question is what is the extent of that right? Is it limited to the first crop or does it extend to the use of water for all the crops that can be raised by the cultivation of the inams so long as there is water in the tank? The District Munsif has found that there is no evidence on either side as to whether second crops were raised at the time of the grant. If the matter rests there, it would perhaps be a nice question of burden of proof on the pleadings. The District Munsif has considered other circumstances in the case. He first of all referred to the liability to pay water cess in Government villages. In this connection he referred to the Standing Order No. 64 of the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue. The liability of the inamdars to pay water-rate to Government is governed by statute, namely, the Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865), and the non-liability to pay depends upon whether there is engagement to pay at the time of the grant within the meaning of Act VII of 1865. In deciding the case between the Zemindar and inamdars, I do not think we have anything to do with the Irrigation Cess Act or analogies based on it.

The District Munsif next refers to the decision in The Midnapore Zamindary Co. v. Muthappudayan.¹ That is a case of landlord and tenant. The question in that case was whether the additional assessment can be claimed by a landlord in respect of a second crop of paddy raised with the landlord's water by the tenant on his wet holding and the decision of the point depended upon whether any usage disentitled the landlord to the same. It was held that the burden of proof was on the tenant. I do not think that case has anything to do with our case. At the same time I do not mean to decide any question of burden of proof and the Munsif has referred to that case merely for showing that the burden of proof is on the inamdar, just as it lay on the tenant in that case. I do not think it is necessary to decide the question of burden of proof in this case.

Pitchiah
v.
Zamin̄dar of Venkatagiri.

The next point that the District Munsif has adverted to is usage. He begins this portion of his judgment thus:

"As regards usage, it is admitted by the plaintiff's witness that second crop cist was never collected, or claimed by the plaintiff for inam wet lands before Fasli 1332. But except as regards one land, Survey No. 496-4, the subject-matter of S. C. S. No. 504 of 1926, there is no evidence as to how long there has been second crop cultivation on the lands. P.W. 2 is the karnam of the village."

He states in cross-examination:

"Second crop is being raised on the land comprised in S.C.S. No. 504 of 1926 every year for the last 20 years to my knowledge. Second crop was being raised on the other inams also now and then before Fasli 1332. Second crop cist was never claimed or collected for inam lands before Fasli 1332."

I may here observe that the District Munsif obviously accepts the Karnam's evidence. The District Munsif then says in his judgment:

"Only one witness has been examined on behalf of the defendants. He is the 4th defendant in S. C. S. No. 504 of 1926, and he speaks only about his land, i.e., Survey No. 496-4. He deposes that second crop is being raised on that land for the last 25 years to his knowledge. He says that second crop was being raised on the land by his ancestors also but his evidence in this respect is at best hearsay and is therefore valueless."

Here I may observe that the District Munsif accepts the witness's evidence as to 25 years which is not hearsay but only rejects it for the period beyond it. This is also clear from the next sentence which runs thus:

"Assuming that second crop was being raised on the land for about 20 years before Fasli 1332, the mere abstention of the plaintiff from claiming water-rate during that period cannot disentitle him from claiming it now. The evidence is very meagre and insufficient to establish the alleged custom or usage."

This sentence shows that the District Munsif accepts not only the Karnam's evidence but the evidence of D.W. 1 relating to 25 years which is not hearsay, for only in this way can we

v.
Zamindar of

have evidence for 20 years prior to Fasli 1332. As I already pointed out, the question in the case is not one of custom or usage but one of easement. If it is one of custom or usage, I am bound by the District Munsif's finding of fact. But 20 years' enjoyment of the water certainly makes out an easement by prescriptive right as enjoyment has gone up to the end of Fasli 1334 (vide plaint). It is unnecessary in this case to distinguish easement by grant and easement by prescription. The facts justify the finding of the easement by either method. Vide Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein.² On the facts found by the District Munsif, the defendant in S.C.S. No. 504 of 1926 has established a right of easement to use the water of the plaintiff's tank for two crops. I may incidentally observe that the defendants in the other lands have not established such an easement. The result is while all the decisions of the District Munsif are correct, only the decision in this case is erroneous and has to be set aside.

Apparently the land Survey No. 496-4 belongs to defendants 1, 2 and 4. Anyhow the Karnam's evidence relates to all the lands comprised in S.C.S. No. 504 of 1926. Relying on O. 41, R. 4, Civil Procedure Code, that is on the ground that the whole decree is now questioned before me and that the finding of fact relates to all the defendants, I set aside the whole decree and dismiss the suit against all the defendants, with costs of the 4th defendant only throughout.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—(Appeal against an acquittal).

This tree of brothers and sisters gives the personae dramatis.

Chitti, the deceased, was 14 years old. On 17th December, 1928, his corpse was found in the yard of P.W. 5. The medical evidence shows that he was throttled.

He was seen on the evening of 16th December on the verandah of the house of accused 2 with the two accused and the sons of accused 2, P.Ws. 2 and 3.

On the 18th December, these two boys were arrested for the crime; and on 29th December, 1928, they "confessed"; that is to say, statements recorded from them under section 164 were treated as confessions, but their effect is to put the guilt upon the present accused and an oil-monger, and to exonerate the boys. In the committing Court they stood by these statements, and in the Sessions Court they resiled. The present application to admit this appeal is practically a prayer that these depositions and statements may be reconsidered by a Bench of this Court to see if they warrant the conviction of the two accused.

It is quite within the bounds of possibility that these two boys were the actual murderers, and there must have been some suspicion against them when the police investigated, else they would not have been arrested. It is then quite possible that they thought of saving their skins by putting the blame upon their father and cousin. Putting their evidence at its highest they are not very satisfactory witnesses, and it must be borne in mind that the one fact known about them beyond all doubt

The Public Prosecutor
v.

Prosecutor

is that they have committed perjury, either at the trial or at the investigation. The problem then reduces itself to this simple question: Can two men be hanged on the suspect evidence of perjured witnesses? To that question the answer must be "No"; and in this case there is absolutely nothing besides that evidence. There is nothing unusual about Chitti being on his friend's verandah that night, and there is no motive for accused 1 and 2 to have committed the crime. The heirs of Chitti are his two sisters, and accused 1, who is the father of a brother's wife, cannot have any claim, and cannot, I should think, have supposed that he had any claim. The Crown cannot impute ignorance of law as a motive. In the famous case of *Rex v. Monson*¹ the Crown imputed as a motive that Monson's wife held a transfer of the murdered lad's life insurance policy, and Monson did not know that a minor cannot assign an imputation that was not accepted. An accused person must be given the benefit of the assumption that he knows the law.

The assessors are unanimously of opinion that the accused are guilty; but their opinion probably derives support from the popular instinct that after an atrocious murder some one should hang for the vindication of general morality. It is cases like this that illustrate the danger of the jury system. I do not think any Judge could come to an opinion contrary to that of the learned Judge who tried the case and, therefore, do not admit the appeal. The only exception I should take to his judgment is that in discussing the original confessions he seems rather to disregard section 114 (e) of the Evidence Act and to assume irregularity in official acts. He says that the bare certificate in Exhibits D and G does not prove that the statements were voluntarily made, which of course is strictly correct; but it may fairly be assumed that the Magistrate did his best to assure himself that the statements were voluntary, and if he had felt any suspicion he would have placed it upon record. Then he speaks of the best efforts of the Magistrate to remove police and other influences, as if police influence were necessarily bad. There is, so far as I know, nothing upon the record of this case which reflects upon the conduct of the police, and an assumption by the officers of one department that the officers of another department are naturally depraved is quite unwarranted and even offensive.

The appeal is dismissed.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by •

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Odgers dismissing Second Appeal No. 945 of 1924 with costs. The facts are shortly these: the plaintiff is the landlord, the defendant the tenant and the suit is to redeem the kanom for Rs. 200 evidenced by Exhibit A. The plaintiff gave the kanom to one Subramania Pattar and the material terms of Exhibit A which is the melkanom in favour of the 1st defendant are that the kanom in favour of Subramania Pattar should be redeemed by the 1st defendant and that he should pay Rs. 200 towards the redemption of that kanom. As regards the value of improvements which Subramania Pattar was claiming or might claim, Exhibit A also says that the 1st defendant should pay for those improvements if necessary. The material clause is:

“I shall therefore pay up the edukkudi amount of Rs. 200 and also the value of the kuzhikkurs (improvements) effected in the schedule-mentioned properties by the said Subramania Pattar, although there is no necessity to pay the value of the same as they were effected without your permission, the value being paid only to avoid litigation and trouble."

Then the clause proceeds:

"It has also been settled that, if Subramania Pattar does not take the edukkudi amount as mentioned above and surrender the schedule-mentioned properties the said amount shall be paid to you and you should pay off the edukkudi and recover possession of the properties for me, that you should directly recover the arrears of michavaram rent due from Subramania Pattar up to 1081 (1905-06) inclusive, and when the panyam amount and the value of kuzhikkurs that may be ascertained and estimated at the time of causing eviction, if kuzhikkurs are raised, are given, it has been agreed that the properties would be surrendered with the receipt that may be obtained from Subramania Pattar with the release deed and the document, etc."

This translation beginning "and when the panyam amount" was the translation made by the Bench Clerk as the parties were not agreed as to the accuracy of the translation made by the Court translator. The translation of Exhibit A as translated by the Court translator is:

"and that when the mortgage amount, Rs. 200, and, if any kuzhikkur value has been paid, that kuzhikkur value also as estimated at the time the property is recovered possession of is paid, the properties would be surrendered with an Ozhimuri (surrender deed), the receipt obtained from Subramania Pattar and this deed, etc."

"It is not very material to consider this as the contingency contemplated did not arise. A suit was not filed by the Jenmi, the owner. What happened was that Subramania Pattar did not consent to redemption and a suit, No. 535 of 1906, had to be filed. Exhibit B is the decree in the suit. The suit is by the Jenmi as pro forma tenant and the other parties, interested to redeem the present respondent being the 3rd plaintiff. A decree was passed and under that decree plaintiffs 2 to 7 were directed to pay into Court the amount mentioned in the decree and the decree goes on to say that "the defendants do deliver up to the said plaintiffs or to such persons as they may appoint in this behalf all documents in their possession or power relating to the plaint mortgaged properties."

Then the decree goes on to say that

"the defendants shall put the 3rd plaintiff into possession of items 12 and 13 of the mortgaged properties described in the schedule herewith annexed and that, if such payment be not made within the above period, the mortgaged properties be sold. It is further ordered and decreed that the 1st defendant is at liberty to remove his improvements on the said plaint items 12 and 13."

As regards the improvements what happened was that there were two Commissioners appointed. The first Commissioner valued the improvements at about Rs. 70 and odd, the second Commissioner valued them at Rs. 83. Subramania Pattar chose to remove the trees rather than receive compensation and that course was evidently agreed to by the parties interested. He did not remove the trees owing, according to him, to domestic calamities. Evidently he did not think it worth his while to do so. The improvements consequently stood on the land unpaid for. It is not disputed that the present respondent paid the Rs. 200 and redeemed Subramania Pattar and that he has been in possession ever since. The plaintiff now wants to redeem him and the question is whether the respondent can claim any compensation for improvements. It is contended by Mr. Menon for the appellant that Subramania Pattar did not take away the trees on the land as the 1st defendant did not pay Subramania Pattar anything for the improvements. The benefit of this conduct in not taking away the trees should enure to the Jenmi and not the defendant as he is only a kanomdar. This may be so if the law governing the case was the ordinary law of landlord and tenant or that of mortgagor and mortgagee but the question is how far the position of the parties is affected by the Malabar Tenants Improvements Act. The relevant sections for the purpose of this appeal are sections 5, 10 and 13.

Section 5 says:

“(1) Every tenant shall on ejection be entitled to compensation for improvements which have been made by him, his predecessor-in-interest, or by any person not in occupation at the time of the ejection who derived title from either of them and for which compensation has not already been paid; and every tenant to whom compensation is so due shall, notwithstanding the determination of the tenancy or the payment or tender of the mortgage money (if any), be entitled to remain in possession until ejection in execution of a decree or order of Court.

(2) A tenant so continuing in possession shall during such continuance hold as a tenant subject to the terms of his lease or of the mortgage as the case may be.”

Section 10 relates to trees of spontaneous growth and says:

“When the improvement is not an improvement to which section 9 applies but consists of timber trees or of other useful trees or plants spontaneously grown during the period of the tenancy or sown or planted by any of the persons mentioned in S. 5, the compensation to be awarded shall be three-fourths of the sum which the trees or plants might reasonably be expected to realise if sold by public auction to be cut and carried away.”

Section 13 refers to maintenance of trees and the cost of such maintenance. It says:

“When the improvement consists in the protection and maintenance of timber or fruit trees or of other useful trees or plants not sown or planted by any of the persons mentioned in section 5, or of such trees or plants spontaneously grown prior to the commencement of the tenancy, the compensation to be awarded shall be the proper cost of such protection and maintenance ascertained as provided in section 11.”

We think that it is unnecessary in this case to invoke the aid of provisions of sections 11 and 13, because it is nobody's case that the trees for which compensation is now claimed were of spontaneous growth. Both in the prior litigation and in this what was claimed was compensation for trees planted or improvements made by Subramania Pattar, the previous kanomdar, and we agree with Mr. Justice Odgers in thinking that it is not open now in second appeal to raise the question as to the nature of these improvements whether they were of spontaneous growth or whether they were trees planted. Throughout in all the Courts the case went on the footing that the improvements which were effected would come within the purview of section 5 and the question was who was entitled to the benefit of these trees. We think the question turns on the construction of the words in section 5 "predecessor-in-interest", whether it can be said that where one mortgagee redeems another, the latter can be said to be a predecessor-in-interest of the former within the meaning of section 5. If so, there can be no doubt that he is entitled to the benefit of the improvements. The argument of Mr. Menon is that in cases like this where the jenmi creates a kanom and a melkanom it cannot be said that the kanomdar is the predecessor-in-interest of the melkanomdar and therefore section 5 can have no application. For the respondent it is contended that these words are to be construed in a more liberal sense and that the succeeding kanomdar redeeming the predecessor must be taken to be his successor in interest and that he would be so in respect of all the rights and obligations under the previous kanom.

As regards the meaning of the expression "predecessor-in-interest" in section 5 we agree with the observations of Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar in his "Malabar Law" that the words must be used not in a strict sense. We agree with the following observation:

"The words cannot be said to adequately describe the class of persons for whose improvements the tenant in possession is entitled to claim compensation. Unless the word 'predecessor-in-interest' is understood in a somewhat loose way, the section may not include many cases which must obviously have been intended to come within it. The trouble arises, largely from the fact that in drafting this section sufficient attention was not paid to the fact that the definition of the word 'tenant' in the Act is so framed as to include very varying kinds of interest, such as mortgagee's and lessee's interests and even in (sic) cases where the occupant has no lawful title to possession."

Then the learned author goes on:

"In the case of a mortgagee paying off a previous mortgagee, the latter may be regarded as the predecessor-in-interest as under the law the subsequent mortgagee is subrogated to his rights. To cover obvious cases it may be necessary to understand the word 'predecessor-in-interest' as the derivation of the word suggests as meaning 'one that went before him in interest,' some 'tenant' as understood by the Act who preceded him in occupation either immediately or mediately through others without the continuity being broken up (sic) by the intervention of the plaintiff."

The cases reported in *Thekkamannengath Raman alias Kochu Poduval v. Kakkasseri Pazhiyot Manakkal Karnavan*¹ and *Thupran v. Mamad Kasim Sait*² support the view. The former was no doubt a case of compensation for trees of spontaneous growth but the observations at pages 194 and 195 apply equally to cases of compensation for trees planted and the reasoning of the learned Judges applies equally to those cases. In *Thupran v. Mamad Kasim Sait*² the learned Judges observe:

"It is immaterial whether the improvements were made by the 2nd defendant himself or by any other person in possession before him. It is quite sufficient if the improvements are on the land even if they are made by some previous occupant. It was not the case of either party that anybody but the 2nd defendant was in occupation at the time of the suit."

These decisions are authority for holding that the expression "predecessor-in-interest" has to be used not in a strict sense but as meaning a person who claims title from any other by assignment, transfer, gift, etc., and in claiming compensation we think that, where one kanomdar redeems the other, the latter should be treated for the purpose of section 5 as the predecessor-in-interest of the former. In the present case we see no reason why compensation should not be given as claimed by the respondent. We think the decision of the learned Judge is right and dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

plaintiff—Interest on—Plaintiff's right to, only from date of final decree—Value of goodwill of business to be brought into accounts—Share of partner—Concurrent findings as to—Privy Council's interference, with.

The ordinary rule is that a partner is not charged with interest in respect of overdrawings.

In an action to dissolve and wind up the affairs of a partnership, it is impossible to say, until the accounts have been taken, what if anything is due from any partner to his co-partners. Accordingly, in such an action interest should only be allowed to the plaintiffs from the date of the final decree by which the amount (if any) is found due from the defendants to the plaintiffs.

In taking the accounts of a partnership the value of the goodwill must also be brought into the accounts.

Where one of the issues in a suit for dissolution of a partnership and for accounts was as to the share of the defendants in the partnership business, and there were concurrent findings of the Courts below on that issue, held, that there was no reason for departing from the ordinary rule of the Privy Council as to concurrent findings of fact.

Cross-appeal No. 55 of 1929 from an appellate decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, dated the 13th June, 1927, which modified a decree of a Judge of that Court (in its District Court Jurisdiction), dated the 22nd December, 1925, in a suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts.

The material facts of the case appear sufficiently from their Lordships' judgment.

Dunne, K.C. and Wallach for appellants (defendants).

De Gruyther, K.C. and Hyam for respondents in the main appeal and appellants in the cross-appeal.

Dunne, K. C.—The Court was not entitled to allow interest to the plaintiffs from the date of suit till payment on the decretal amount found due to them. No interest from the date of suit was claimed by the plaintiffs in their plaint.

De Gruyther, K. C.—The Court of Appeal was right in allowing interest on the decretal amount from the date of the suit. In the circumstances of the case the plaintiffs were entitled to interest on the sums of money overdrawn by the defendants from time to time as from the date of such overdrafts.

LORD RUSSELL.—The action in which these appeals arise is a partnership action in which the plaintiffs claimed (a) a decree for dissolution, and (b) that the accounts of the partnership be taken. Other relief was claimed in the following terms: “(c) That sums found due to the plaintiffs by the defendants be ordered to be paid by them.”

P. C.
Suleman
v.

Lord Russell.

Up to a point the facts are not in dispute. The plaintiffs, or their predecessors-in-title, had for some years before 1902 carried on a business in Karachi, as partners, in the firm name of A. Haji Dossal & Sons. In the year 1902 the firm acquired a business of dealing in arms and ammunition, which originally belonged to one A. Haji Tar Mahomed and which in 1902 was being carried on by his son Haji Hamad. The firm having acquired the said business, carried it on as a branch or department of their general business which they continued to carry on in their firm name, A. Haji Dossal & Sons. At the time the arms and ammunition business was acquired, the defendants (who were relations of Haji Tar Mahomed and Haji Mahomed and had worked in that business) became associated with the firm, and so continued in association with the firm until the dissolution decreed in this action. It is at this point that the facts cease to be undisputed, the principal issue in the action being as to the position occupied by the defendants in relation to the arms and ammunition branch or department from 1902 onwards.

The contention of the plaintiffs was that from 1902 to 1907 the defendants were employed as paid servants of the firm, that from 1907 to 1911 they were partners in the business of the arms and ammunition branch or department with a 2 anna share on the profits and losses of the said business, and that from the beginning of 1912 onwards their share was increased to 4 annas. The defendants contended that they were partners throughout with a 2 anna share from 1902 to 1911, and an 8 anna share from the commencement of 1912 onwards.

The action was heard in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, the Court having framed the following issues:—

- “1. Is the suit not maintainable?
2. On what terms did the defendants work in the business from 1902 to 1907?
3. What shares did the defendants possess in the business in suit and for what periods?
4. To what amounts are the plaintiffs entitled on the accounts?”

P. G.
Suleman
 v.
Haji Abdul
Rauf
 Lord Russell.

The first issue has become immaterial.

The Additional Judicial Commissioner delivered judgment on the 22nd December, 1925, his findings of fact on the second and third issues being in accordance with the contentions of the plaintiffs.

The preliminary decree under the seal of the Court is (so far as material) in the following terms:—

"It is ordered and decreed that the suit is maintainable and that the share of the defendants in the profits and losses were two annas from 1907 to 1912 and thereafter four annas up to 1922 when the defendants ceased to be active members in the firm.

"It is further ordered that issue No. 4 be referred to Court Commissioner to take accounts and report within two months."

The reference of issue No. 4 to the Court Commissioner appears to their Lordships necessarily to involve the taking of the partnership accounts by that official in the manner customary when a partnership is dissolved by the Court.

In the course of his judgment the Additional Judicial Commissioner directed that the accounts should be taken from 1907, but that nothing was to be taken into account as regards goodwill. He made no provision as to costs, which he said would be provided for in the final order.

An appeal was presented against this preliminary decree, and judgment was delivered thereon by the Appellate Court on the 13th June, 1927. As regards the principal matter of dispute the Appellate Court used the following language:—

"After careful consideration of the evidence we have come to the conclusion that the findings on these issues should be that the defendants worked as servants from 1902 to 1907, and that they worked as 2 annas sharers from 1907 to 1911, and as 4 annas sharers from 1912 to 1922. The conclusion at which we arrive therefore is that the contention of the plaintiffs is correct and that all the conclusions at which the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner arrived as to the shares of the parties, for the reasons given by him in his judgment, are correct."

In addition to the principal issue between the parties the judgment of the Appellate Court dealt with certain subsidiary matters arising on the accounts. It was stated in the judgment (1) that the defendants should not be charged with interest on any drawings by them in excess of their 2 annas or 4 annas share; (2) that in ascertaining the profits of the partnership business nothing should be charged against revenue in respect of rent, light, municipal rates and the like; (3) that goodwill should be brought into account; and (4) that interest at 6 per cent. was allowed to the plaintiffs "from the date of the plaint on the decretal amount found due to them." As regards costs the Appellate Court, having regard to the special circumstances of the case, considered that each party should bear his own costs of all the proceedings up to that time.

The decree made on the appeal runs thus:

"It is ordered and decreed that the case should be sent back to Commissioner who should go into the question of goodwill and decide what the goodwill of the business amounted to and award to the defendants 4 annas share of that goodwill with interest from the date of the dissolution of the partnership and it is further ordered that the defendants are also entitled to 4 annas share of the assets of the firm at the date of the dissolution of the partnership with interest thereon."

"It is further ordered that each party should bear his own costs throughout."

The defendants have appealed to His Majesty in Council against that decree and complain of the findings as regards their shares in the partnership business and of the allowance of interest from the date of the plaint.

The plaintiffs have appealed by way of cross-appeal and complain of the disallowance of interest on the amounts overdrawn by the defendants and of the allowance to the defendants of a share in the goodwill of the partnership business or in the assets thereof.

Counsel for the plaintiffs in the course of the arguments before this Board also contended that in ascertaining the profits of the partnership business something should be charged against revenue in respect of rent, light, municipal rates and the like, but no such point is raised by their case on this appeal, and their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the instructions by the Appellate Court to the Commissioner in this respect must stand.

As regards the appeal of the defendants their Lordships find that upon the main contention between the parties there are separate findings of facts by two Courts, which findings are concurrent and adverse to the defendants, and that no reason can be suggested for departing from the ordinary rule applicable in such circumstances. The appeal must fail so far as it seeks to reverse or alter those findings. In regard to the statement in the Appellate Court judgment that interest was allowed to the plaintiffs from the date of the plaint on the decretal amount found due to them their Lordships are unable to accept the correctness of this view. This is not an action to recover some debt of which it can be said that it was due at the date of the plaint. It is an action to dissolve and wind up the affairs of a partnership; and until the accounts have been taken it is impossible to say what if anything is due from any partner to his co-partners. In their Lordships' opinion interest should only be allowed to the plaintiffs from the date of the final decree by which the amount (if any) is found due from the defendants to the plaintiffs.

As regards the cross-appeal their Lordships agree with the view of the Appellate Court that the defendants were at the date of dissolution entitled to a 4 annas share of the assets of the partnership firm, i.e., the assets properly attributable to the arms and ammunition branch or department. Among these assets must necessarily be included the goodwill attaching to that branch or department, and the value thereof must be brought into the accounts. Their Lordships realise that in the peculiar circumstances of this case the value may not be either large or easy of ascertainment; but what amount should be included is a matter for the Court Commissioner to determine upon proper evidence.

Their Lordships also agree with the decision of the Appellate Court that the defendants are not chargeable with interest on overdrawings. No case is made out or even alleged against the defendants which would justify a departure from the ordinary rule that a partner is not charged with interest in respect of overdrawings.

The net result is that the defendants' appeal fails in so far as it seeks to vary the decree appealed from. It is true that it has resulted in obtaining a correction by this Board of the statement in the judgment of the Appellate Court as to the date from which interest should be allowed in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of any amount found due to them from the defendants, but that statement formed no part of the decree. The defendants' appeal upon the main dispute has failed. The plaintiffs' cross-appeal has also failed. As regards costs the Appellate Court in view of the special circumstances of the case exercised their discretion and imposed upon each party the liability to bear their own costs up to the date of the Appellate Court decree. Their Lordships see no reason for criticising or altering the order so made; indeed, they are of opinion that the example may well be followed on the present occasion and that the parties may be left to bear their respective costs of the appeal and cross-appeal.

Their Lordships have considered whether it is necessary or advisable to incorporate in any order to be made on these appeals any specific reference to the various matters of detail upon which they have indicated their views. They think such a proceeding is unnecessary. These matters of detail form no part of either of the decrees made in this action, and their Lordships feel no doubt that in taking the accounts and working out the rights of the parties the judicial authorities in Sind will act in accordance with the views expressed in this judgment.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion and will humbly advise His Majesty that an order should be made dismissing the appeal and cross-appeal without costs.

The trial against the law of a capital case without a jury is substantial injustice within the rule in *Dillet's case*¹, for the conviction in such a case will be conviction without jurisdiction, and special leave to appeal from such a conviction will be granted.

Once a Criminal Appeal is brought by special leave it is incumbent on their Lordships to examine the judgment as given, even if it appears that the ground on which special leave was granted does not in fact exist in the case. support the verdict, yet they must be satisfied "there is something which in the particular case deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial."

The question whether in a given case a jury trial is practicable or is permitted by local circumstances within the meaning of a statute is a matter to be determined by the local tribunal and not for the Board to form a conclusion upon. And where the local tribunal tries the case without a jury, the maxim Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter acta clearly applies to the case, and the Board will not interfere in criminal appeal with its judgment on the ground that its view was erroneous.

Where, in a capital case tried without a jury, the judgment of the Court below convicting the accused of murder appeared to be vitiated by the fact that the Judge considered that the only alternative to death by accident was murder and that he failed to consider the question as between manslaughter and murder, their Lordships felt themselves bound to consider whether the evidence had reached the standard of proof necessary to involve a conviction for murder, and, being of opinion that it did not, set aside the conviction.

Appeal No. 54 of 1929 by special leave from a judgment of the Chief Commissioner's Court of Ashanti (Eastern Province), dated 23rd November, 1928.

Pritt, K.C. and Horace Douglas for appellant.

The Attorney-General (Sir William Jowitt, K.C.) and C. H. Pearson for Crown.

10th March, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Viscount Dunedin.

VISCOUNT DUNEDIN.—This appeal, for which special leave was granted by His Majesty in Council is against a conviction of the appellant for the murder of his wife, Mrs. Knowles, by the Acting Circuit Judge of Ashanti on the 23rd November, 1928. The case was tried by the Judge without a jury and the appellant was not allowed the assistance of either solicitor or counsel. The grounds of appeal are first, no jurisdiction, and second, that there was no evidence on which a conviction of murder could be maintained.

The Court of Ashanti by which the appellant was tried was established by the Ashanti Administration Ordinance No. 1 of 1902. The sections of the Ordinance, as amended by subsequent ordinances which bear on the method of trial in criminal cases are the following:—

Section 8.—"Where not otherwise provided by some other statute, ordinance, or other law for the time being in force in Ashanti, the Court shall in causes and matters brought or arising before it, be guided by the law in force in the Gold Coast Colony as set forth in sections 14—19 of the Supreme Court Ordinance of the said Colony."

Section 9.—"So far as it is practicable and local circumstances permit, the procedure in the Court, civil and criminal, shall be the same as the procedure in the Supreme Court of the Gold Coast Colony."

Section 10.—"In no cause or matter, civil or criminal, shall the employment of a Barrister or Solicitor be allowed."

It is unnecessary to quote the various sections of the Acts which regulate procedure in the Gold Coast, as it is clear that if the trial had been in the Gold Coast it would have been imperative to have a jury for a capital case and the prisoner would, if he chose, have had the assistance of counsel and solicitor.

The appellant, therefore, contends that a jury for a capital case was a sine qua non, and that a conviction by a Judge sitting alone cannot stand.

The Attorney-General stated, and that it was not denied by the appellant, that as a matter of fact there never has been hitherto trial by jury in Ashanti.

Now the direction that in Ashanti the criminal procedure of the Gold Coast shall be the guide is not absolute, but is qualified by the provisions of section 9. If jury trial is not practicable, or not permitted by local circumstances, then the direction does not apply. Practicability and the state of local circumstances are questions which can only be determined in Ashanti on the spot. It is impossible for their Lordships of this Board to form a conclusion on such matters, and it is not for them to turn themselves into a local tribunal. They are of opinion that this is a matter to which the maxim Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter acta clearly applies, and they are, therefore, unable to sanction this ground of appeal.

Before dealing with the question of the evidence their Lordships think it necessary emphatically to repeat what has been said on many occasions, that they do not sit as a Court of Criminal Appeal. To allow criminal proceedings to be reviewed, to use the words of Lord Watson in *Dillet's case*¹ there must have been "substantial and grave injustice done". In the present case if it had turned out that it was against the law for a Judge to try a capital case without a jury, that would have been substantial injustice, for it would have been conviction without jurisdiction, and it was on that ground that leave of appeal was manifestly granted. But the case once brought up it is incumbent on their Lordships to examine the judgment as given. Even in this somewhat exceptional case, however, their Lordships are still not sitting as an ordinary criminal court of appeal in which case they would be entitled to consider what would have been their own verdict. Though the criterion is hardly as strict as it would have been on an application for leave based on the simple ground that the evidence did not support the verdict, yet they must be satisfied to use the words of Lord Sumner in *Ibrahim v. The King*², "there is something which in the particular case deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial."

Now the facts of the case as proved are simple enough. The appellant and his wife were alone in their bedroom after luncheon. There had been guests at luncheon, and they had gone away shortly after 2 P.M. without anything noticeable having happened. Their native servants heard loud voices suggestive of quarrelling. The appellant and his wife it was proved lived generally on good, and, indeed, affectionate terms, but had occasional quarrels which were greatly induced by the fact that both the appellant and his wife were addicted to the taking of too much liquor, and the appellant drugs, and were often in a drunken or semi-drunken and dazed condition.

The evidence as to the time is confused and contradictory, but somewhere between 4 and 5 the native servants heard a shot and a cry. They were frightened and one of them ran off to the District Commissioner, who had been one of the guests at the luncheon and said what he had heard. The District Commissioner took his car and went off to the house of the accused, whom he saw, and asked if there had been an accident. The accused said it was all right. The District Commissioner then went away. The native servant went back again later and two hours later the District Commissioner wrote a note saying the native servants were very excited, and asking if he could be of any service. To this letter he got no reply. About the same time the native servant was called into the room and told to clean up a pool of blood. The accused said to his wife he would like to send her to the hospital. He then said he would go himself, and went. When he was gone the cook, by desire of Mrs. Knowles, lifted a revolver which was by the bed and put it into a box, locked it, and gave her the key. While clearing up the blood he picked up something which he did not recognise, but which was a revolver bullet.

That evening the accused got a sleeping draught containing morphia from the dispensary of the hospital. Next evening he got a repetition of the medicine and a hypodermic syringe with two ampoules of morphia. About 3 o'clock that day Dr. Gush, who lived at Kumasi, heard that something had happened and in consequence drove down to Bekwai, where the accused lived. He found the accused in a somewhat dazed condition and bearing signs of the results of alcohol and the drugs above referred to. The accused volunteered the information that there had been "a domestic fracas," and showed him his left leg covered with bruises which he said had been inflicted by his wife with an Indian club. He also said that she had been nagging him and he had said if she didn't stop he would put a bullet in her. Dr. Gush asked to see Mrs. Knowles, and heard her say she would like to see him. He then went into the bedroom with the accused and examined the wounds, which he found had been treated with iodine by the accused—a proper, though in the circumstances, scarcely a sufficient treatment. The wound was such a wound as would be inflicted by a revolver bullet. It was in a peculiar direction. The bullet had entered the left buttock and proceeded in an upward direction, and making its exit at the lower side of the abdomen on the right side, having, as was afterwards disclosed at a post-mortem, pierced the intestine, the bladder and the uterus. It was not bleeding directly when Dr. Gush saw it, but there was some blood coming from the vagina.

He asked Mrs. Knowles how the accident happened and she said she had been examining her husband's revolver which had been recently cleaned by the police, that she had put the revolver down on a chair, and shortly after sat upon it, that she tried to remove it from underneath her, but the open-work sleeve of her dress caught in the trigger and the revolver went off.

Dr. Gush said she must go to the hospital but had better have a bath first. He found the accused at the fire quite dazed. He went to fetch his car, and on coming back got the revolver from Mrs. Knowles, and found in it five cartridges and one empty shell. He noticed a hole in the mosquito net which covered the two beds. Mrs. Knowles died the next day, but before she died she made a dying declaration. This was to the same effect as to what she had said to Dr. Gush with two small differences. She mentioned that the revolver had been cleaned, but did not say "by the police," and she said that before it happened the boy had come in with afternoon tea. Other matters to be mentioned are that the mosquito net had several holes in it; that the accused said that on one occasion his wife had put a bullet past him while he was in bed; that another bullet was found by the police and certain marks on the furniture. Further, on the 22nd October the Acting and Assistant Commissioner of Police went to Bekwai and found the accused in bed lying in blood-stained sheets and having on blood-stained pyjamas. He was weak and ill, but they considered him rational. They told him that they were going to detain him on a charge of causing grievous bodily harm and that a dying declaration was to be taken from his wife. He then made several remarks, viz.: "I think she will roll up" (i.e., die), "This is a bad business, I may go to prison," "If she rolls up I am afraid I am for it." He went with them to Kumasi, and in the Assistant Commissioner's bungalow, while the Acting Commissioner went for a warrant, he said, "I don't care what happens to me, I am worried about my wife," and then, "If my wife rolls up it means a murder case," and again, "If my wife rolls up I will be hung by the neck until I am dead."

Their Lordships must now examine the judgment. In the judgment of the Circuit Judge is to be found what to a jury would have been the summing up, and then the verdict. Now the Judge examines at great length the possibilities as to which bullet of the two bullets found, one of which had made dents in the furniture, was the bullet which caused the wound. Upon this question he comes to no certain conclusion, being oppressed by the difficulties as to either theory. In their Lordships' view this enquiry is quite by the mark. It is quite certain that the deceased was killed by a revolver bullet, and there being no certain evidence as to the position of the parties at the time, no conclusions can be drawn from the possible indicia as to the flight of the bullet. The Judge next takes up the story of the deceased as given in the evidence of Dr. Gush, and as given in the wife's dying declaration, and along with it the story as given by the prisoner himself when he gave evidence at the time. That story, abbreviated, is as follows: That he had had a quarrel with his wife about nothing, which ended, that he then went to bed to sleep, that he saw his wife come in and start to undress and afterwards went to sleep, that there was a shot fired which woke him, and he heard his wife say she had been shot, that he jumped up and said, "Show me, show me" (this was a remark heard by one of the servants behind the door), that he plugged the wound and put her to bed, and she said "People will think I have done this purposely," to which he replied she had only to lie quiet and he would take the blame. That he did not trouble about the District Commissioner's note, as being a medical man himself he had done what was needful and that he did not want her disturbed. That afternoon he took drink and drugs, and to use his own words,

"I had the fixed idea of protecting my wife, and didn't realise until later that my statements were dangerous. I had an idea fixed that I would take any punishment if I could save my wife."

As regards the revolver he said that he usually kept it under his pillow fitted in a holster; that on this occasion he took it out of the holster, cocked it and laid it on the book case. The Judge then examines these accounts and finds them unsatisfactory. He is particularly pressed by the statement of Mrs. Knowles as to the servant bringing tea, which was not true, and he saw no reason for the appellant taking out the revolver and cocking it, and points out the discrepancy as to its place, the appellant saying it was on the book case, while Mrs. Knowles said it was on the chair. He lays stress on the various remarks made by the appellant after the event, which he considers were not made, except as to those on the 22nd when in a dazed condition. He thinks it proved that there was a domestic fracas, and considers the remark that he would put a bullet through his wife if she did not stop, very significant. He, therefore, comes to the conclusion that the wife's story was not true, and then he says, "Taken as above the evidence against the prisoner is overwhelming."

Now the learned Judge was entitled to draw his own conclusions as to whether Mrs. Knowles's account was true, and their Lordships, not being as above stated, an ordinary Court of Criminal Appeal, would not consider themselves entitled to set that aside upon the ground that they would come to a different conclusion on the facts as found. Having come to the conclusion that the story of an accident could not be substantiated, and the position and direction of the wound excluding all idea of deliberate self-infliction, he was driven to the conclusion that the shot was fired by the appellant. That there was criminality in what happened is a necessary result of that conclusion. In a fit of drunken recklessness to fire a shot to silence a nagging woman, which shot the woman, even though the shot was not intended to hit her, is a crime. But the fatal flaw in the judgment is that having set aside Mrs. Knowles's account of the occurrence as accident he at once assumed that the only alternative to accident is murder. There is not the slightest inquiry into whether assuming that the shot was fired by the accused, the act amounted to manslaughter and not murder. There is no attempt to face the question of whether the standard of proof required to prove murder as against manslaughter, has in this case been reached. If the case had been before a jury and the Judge had not explained to them the possibility of a verdict of manslaughter, but had said if not accident the only alternative is murder, that would have been an erroneous summing-up. That is what is to be found in the judgment. The question as between manslaughter and murder is entirely undealt with, and their Lordships are, therefore, as the learned Judge failed to consider the question, bound to consider whether the evidence here reached the standard of proof necessary to involve a conviction for murder. They are clearly of opinion that it did not. A conviction for manslaughter might have been a different matter, but that is not before their Lordships. They have therefore humbly advised His Majesty to quash the conviction.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 1, R. 8—Applicability—Managers of religious association in possession through agents—Possession of property from—Suit for recovery of, by person with proprietary title.

The Secretary of State sued to recover possession of certain lands from eight persons described as "all residents and Mahants of Juna Akhara." The Juna Akhara was an unregistered association of a considerable number of sadhus and at the date of suit the defendants were the managers of the institution and were, through their agents, in possession of the suit property. The main question in the case was whether the suit property was granted by the Crown to the Juna Akhara by a sanad. It was found that it was not, and that the proprietary title to the suit property was in the plaintiff.

Allahabad Appeal No. 30 of 1927.

14th February, 1930.

Held, on the above facts, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to obtain leave under O. 1, R. 8 of Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal No. 63 of 1929 from a judgment and decree, dated the 3rd February, 1927, of the High Court, Allahabad, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 31st January, 1923, of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur.

The main question for determination on the present appeal was whether or not certain plots of land situate within the limits of the Municipal Board of Hardwar were "nazul" or Crown lands.

On the 23rd September, 1921, the suit (out of which this appeal arose) was instituted by the Secretary of State for India in Council for the ejectment of the defendants describing them as "all residents and Mahants of Juna Akhara." No leave was prayed for or given as required under Order 1, Rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The defendants filed their written statement of defence in which they pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was not maintainable against them by reason of Order 1, Rule 8, Civil Procedure Code.

It was established in evidence that the Juna Akhara was an unregistered association of a considerable number of Naga Sadhus and that the property of the Juna Akhara belonged to the jamayat (body of people) of the Akhara.

The Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment on the 31st January, 1923, allowing the plaintiff's claim. He held that the defendants could sue and be sued in their own names on the ground that "a shebait of a Mutt represents the property of the Mutt and can sue, and be sued in his own name."

Against the decree of the Trial Judge the defendants appealed to the High Court, contending that the Juna Akhara was not a Hindu Mutt and that the defendants not being shebaites, "the suit was vitiated by reason of the non-compliance of the mandatory provisions of Order 1, Rule 8, Civil Procedure Code." The learned Judges of the High Court, in overruling the defendants' contention as to the maintainability of the suit, said:

"If the defendants do not represent the Juna Akhara, it is difficult to understand why they should have taken the trouble of appealing to this Court. We have not the slightest doubt left in our mind that the eight defendants do represent and are the Mahants in office duly selected by the Juna Akhara. . . This appears to us to be a convincing proof of the defendants being still managers of the Hardwar properties of the Akhara."

In the result, the High Court dismissed the appeal, and the present appeal to His Majesty in Council was preferred by one of the defendants, the other defendants not joining with him, being made pro forma respondents in the appeal.

14th February, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—This is an appeal by Mahant Bhagwanpuri, who was one of eight defendants in a suit instituted by the Secretary of State for India in Council on the 23rd of September, 1921, against a decree of the High Court at Allahabad, dated the 3rd of February, 1927, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 31st of January, 1923.

The Secretary of State appeared as respondent to the appeal. The other seven defendants were added as respondents, but they were not represented at the hearing before the Board.

The suit was brought to recover possession of certain land specified in the plaint, which is situate at Hardwar, within the limits of the Municipal Board of the Hardwar Union.

The main question in dispute is whether the said land was granted by the Crown to an institution or association called the "Juna Akhara" by a sanad, dated the 10th of January, 1854.

Both the Courts in India have held that the said land was not so granted. There is no necessity to enquire into the history relating to the land in suit prior to 1854, for it was agreed at the hearing of the appeal that the above-mentioned main question depends upon the construction of the said sanad of the 10th of January, 1854. The terms of the sanad are as follows:—

"Sanad in favour of the Gosains of Juna Akhara, Hardwar.

"Pursuant to paragraph 4 of G.O. No. 907, dated the 6th of March, 1848, addressed to the Secretary, Board of Revenue, 1000 yards out of 10,455 cubic yards of land, named of Juna Akhara, was, as per enquiry made in 1848, found in your possession. Subsequently the objections were heard and a report was made in this case. In reply to that report the Commissioner sent his letter, No. 30, dated 6th December, 1853, along with other letters of the Board and the Government. It is written in it that this land is only one plot, that it measures 10,455 cubic yards, and that it is called by the name of Juna Akhara and the sitting place of the Faqirs who come here at the time of the kumbh fair. This plot has been relinquished in favour of the jogis in 1315 F. (?)

"Therefore, in accordance with paragraph 7 of the Commissioner's letter to the Sudder Board of Revenue, No. 197, dated 27th of May, 1853(?) which has been sanctioned by the Government—this sanad in respect of 10,455 cubic yards, is given in favour of the Juna Akhara. The object of this sanad is that the Government has no more any claim in respect of the land and the Government has granted this land for the sitting place of the Fagirs. But without the sanction of the Government the Goshains will have no power to transfer it. No. of plot 175.

"Name of house.—Mandir Bhairosi, Mandir Mahadevi and Charan Badgats (?) situate at the Juna Akhara.

"East—West.—41 yards.

"North—South.—255 yards.

"Area in cubic yards.—10,455.

"Approximate cost.

"Eastern Boundary.—Bed of the river.

"Western Boundary.—Nuzul lands.

"Southern Boundary.—Mango and Gular trees.

"Northern Boundary.—Bed of the river, etc.

"Dated the 10th of January, 1854."

The word "cubic" is a mistake for "square"; this mistake is in itself obvious, but a reference to the list prepared by the Collector in 1848 shows that the plot mentioned in the sanad, viz., plot 175, was 10,455 square yards.

It was admitted by the learned counsel for the appellant that the "Juna Akhara" is in possession of land measuring 10,455 square yards, and that the land claimed by the Secretary of State in this suit is no part of the said plot of 10,455 square yards, but is land lying outside the said plot.

It is to be noted that the above-mentioned terms of the sanad have been translated from the original.

In such translation the eastern boundary of the land granted thereby is stated to be "bed of the river," and the northern boundary "bed of the river, etc." The learned Judges of the High Court said that "much of the misunderstanding in this case was due to mistranslation of the boundaries given in the sanad," and they stated what, in their opinion, was the true translation as follows:—

"East.—Arazi Zer Dhank (land on the lower side of the pit).

"West.—Ditch and Nazul land.

"South.—Up to the Mango and Gular trees.

"North.—Dhank Khodana (a mound and pit)."

The learned counsel who appeared for the appellant did not dispute the correctness of the translation adopted by the High Court.

Consequently the description of the boundaries given by the learned Judges must be accepted by this Board.

That being so, the question now under consideration really becomes unarguable, for on reference to the plan which was before the High Court and this Board it is apparent that the boundaries given in the translation adopted by the High Court include plot 175 only, which is not in dispute in this suit, and do not include the land which is in dispute.

The title given by the sanad, therefore, is limited to plot 175 and the 10,455 square yards therein mentioned, and does not extend to the lands claimed by the Secretary of State in this suit.

Inasmuch as the appellant's appeal in relation to this part of the case was based on the construction of the sanad, their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the High Court in respect thereof was correct.

A further point was taken by the learned counsel for the appellant. It is of a technical nature and has no relation to the merits of the case. It was argued that the defendants were not the proper parties to the suit and that no leave was asked for or obtained from the Court as required under Order 1, Rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

It appears that the defendants were elected managers by the akhara at the kumbh in Hardwar in 1915, and on the 9th of May, 1915, a power-of-attorney was given by them to four persons, of whom Hardayalgiirji was one, to act as their general attorneys, and among other matters to file suits, to set up a defence and affix their signature to a written statement, and it was further provided that all such proceedings taken by the said muktars should be admitted and accepted as having been done by the defendants personally in the capacity of mahants.

Hardayalgiirji gave evidence for the defendants to the effect that there was a kumbh every three years at different places, Hardwar, Prayagraj, Nasik and Ujjain, and that different mahants were elected at each successive kumbh at the four places to officiate for three years. He, however, made certain material admissions in cross-examination, and the result was that there were concurrent findings of fact by both the Courts in India to the effect that the power-of-attorney had not been withdrawn, and that Hardayalgiirji was actually managing the akhara properties by virtue of the said power-of-attorney executed by the defendants and was looking after the akhara litigation, and that the defendants were still managers of the Hardwar properties of the akhara.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there was ample evidence to justify the above-mentioned concurrent findings of the Courts in India, and they see no ground for disturbing such findings. Their Lordships agree with the finding of the High Court that the proprietary title to the lands in suit is in the plaintiff, and they are of opinion that the defendants, through their agents, were in possession of the said lands at the time when the suit was instituted, and that they were rightly joined as parties to the suit.

Order 1, Rule 8 contains provisions which enable the Court to grant the permission therein mentioned in a case which comes within the scope of the rule; but, having regard to the facts of this case, their Lordships are of opinion that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to have recourse to the said rule.

The decree of the Trial Court was that the plaintiff be, on dispossession of the defendants, put in possession of the property in dispute, and that the map attached to the plaint should form part of the decree.

This was confirmed by the High Court. Their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court was correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. • and gift for life, distinction between—Principle of effacement—Death of surrenderee in widow's life-time—Widow's rights, if revived—Compromise by father—Release of family interest in property—Liability of father's share.

A settlement of family disputes between the widow and a claimant to the estate which took place more than forty years prior to suit and has not been questioned till the date of suit, must be held to be a settlement of bona fide family disputes binding on the estate, in the absence of anything in the evidence available to suggest the contrary.

Per Reilly, J.—"I do not agree with the suggestion made at one stage of the arguments that because there was this dispute so long ago there is a presumption that it was a bona fide dispute. In such a case, the circumstances must be examined so far as evidence regarding them is available."

If the person putting forward a claim to the estate, believed in good faith that he had some right in the family properties, whether that claim was valid in law or not, and the dispute between him and the widow was compromised with the aid of mediators, that compromise is binding on the reversioners.

The reservation of a small portion of the property for the maintenance of the widow does not affect the validity of the surrender.

Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanubdhari Prashad Singh, (1919) L.R. 46 I.A. 259; I.L.R. 47 C. 466; 37 M.L.J. 513 (P.C.) relied on.

A gift for the daughter's life with reverter to the widow is possible; but it would have to be clearly so expressed.

But the operation of a surrender is to efface the widow completely so far as the estate is concerned, so that her right is not revived by the death, during her life-time, of her daughter to whom she had surrendered her estate but the estate devolves in favour of the next reversioner and the succession cannot be interrupted by the mere fact that the widow is still alive.

Sartaji v. Ramjas, (1923) I.L.R. 46 A. 59 referred to.

A compromise entered into by the father as manager of the family consisting of himself and his sons, by which the father released substantial portions of the family property, is not binding even on the father's share, when it is not shown that the alienation was for necessity or for any other purpose binding on the estate. The equity recognised in favour of the alienee arises only when a decree is passed; it does not follow that the Court will enforce such a compromise before the equity has in fact arisen.

Appeals against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cocanada, dated 15th November, 1923, in O.S. No. 63 of 1921.

The Advocate-General and A. Satyanarayana for appellants.
S. Varadachariar and C. Rama Rao for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Phillips, J.—These are appeals against the decree in O.S. No. 63 of 1921 on the file of the Additional Subordinate Judge's Court of Cocanada, by which the plaintiff as reversioner has been given a decree for recovery of certain properties belonging originally to one Tiruppayya, the last male owner. The facts of the case are somewhat complicated and are as follows:—

Tiruppayya was the son of one Dorayya who died a very long time ago, the exact date being unknown. Dorayya had a sister, Venkamma, who was widowed at an early age and went to live with her brother. Subsequently Ammanna, son of another sister, was taken in by Venkamma and was afterwards described as her foster-son. This Ammanna married Dorayya's daughter, Ademmia, and lived in his father-in-law's house. Venkamma was apparently managing the family affairs while Tiruppayya was young, and Ammanna was also assisting in the cultivation of lands, etc. After Tiruppayya's death in 1880, there was a mediation between Tiruppayya's widow, Venkataramanamma, and Ammanna, and the award of the mediators, Exhibit I, decided that Venkataramanamma and Ammanna should take the moveable and immoveable properties of the family in equal shares. In 1888, Venkataramanamma executed a document Exhibit VIII (a) in favour of Ammanna by which she gave up to him a half of the family properties. On the same day she executed another document, Exhibit VIII, in favour of her daughter Nagayya whereby she transferred the other half of the family properties to her daughter, reserving for herself 6 acres 42 cents of land which should be "under her so long as she lived." Nagayya died about 1904. After her death the properties transferred to her seem to have been enjoyed by her minor daughter, her husband Munnayya and Venkataramanamma. On Munnayya's death he left a will bequeathing some of these properties to a relation and there was a suit between that legatee and Venkataramanamma and Papamma, Munnayya's widow, which was compromised, and in accordance with the compromise the lands were divided between the parties. Venkataramanamma died in August, 1921, and this suit was filed in the following October by the plaintiff as the next reversioner of Tiruppayya.

The questions for consideration are:—

- (1) Whether the settlement of 1880 was valid and binding on the estate.

Veeranna
v.
Sectanna.
Phillips, J

Veeranna
v.
Seetanna.
Phillips, J.

(2) Whether the gift to Nagayya in 1888 was a surrender of the widow's interest in the estate.

(3) Who succeeded to the property on the death of Nagayya? and

(4) Whether the compromise entered into during the pendency of this suit between the plaintiff and defendants 1, 2 and 3 is binding on the defendants.

On the first point it has to be determined whether the compromise of 1880 was in settlement of bona fide family disputes or whether it was a mere alienation by the widow which was not binding on the estate. The case of the first defendant, who is the son of Ammanna, is that his father was the illatom son-in-law of Dorayya and as such was entitled to a share in the family property and that the compromise was arranged in settlement of his claim. The Subordinate Judge has found that Ammanna was not the illatom son-in-law of Dorayya and certainly the evidence adduced to prove the illatom transaction is inadequate. This is not surprising considering the very long time that has elapsed since those events took place. It is certainly true that Ammanna married Dorayya's daughter and came to live in his father-in-law's house. Whether it was before or after the death of his father-in-law is not certain as the evidence on the point is very conflicting. In any event, he seems to have been treated as one of the family, for he gave up his rights in his natural family and looked after the affairs of Dorayya's family helping his aunt and foster-mother Venkamma. It has also been shown by the plaintiff's own witnesses that Dorayya became divided from his brothers and that his estate was considerably augmented by the exertions and care of Venkamma. It is not clear whether she applied any of her own money towards these acquisitions or whether it was merely her care and attention that increased the family properties. On this point it is impossible to secure any definite evidence after the lapse of at least 60 years. We have these facts which support the theory that it was intended to introduce Ammanna into the family as the illatom son-in-law. We also have the fact that Venkamma was in possession and urged her claim to some of the family properties and her claim must be deemed to be the claim of Ammanna, for it was as her foster-son that Ammanna put forward his claim before the mediators. The mediation was quite open and in settlement of disputes between the parties as admitted by the plaintiff's own witnesses. It took place more than 40 years before the suit was filed and has not been questioned till now, when it is very difficult to ascertain accurately details of the dispute and the grounds on which Ammanna put forward his claim. In view of the circumstances which we do know, and of the fact that the transaction has been unquestioned for over 40 years, I think it must be held that Ammanna had a bona fide claim and this settlement, therefore, was a settlement of bona fide family disputes and would, therefore, be binding on the estate which was represented by the widow in that dispute.

v.
Seetanna.
Phillips, J.

It is contended by Mr. Varadachariar for the respondents (1) that the so-called award, Exhibit I, is merely a division of the properties and not an award in settlement of disputes, (2) that Ammanna had no legal title to the properties when he put forward his claim and that, therefore, the compromise is invalid so far as the estate is concerned. The first contention must clearly be negatived for the plaintiff's own witnesses admit that the mediators settled all the disputes between Ammanna and Venkataramanamma, and, if the award were merely a partition of the properties between them which had already been arranged, we should have expected to find a partition of the properties by metes and bounds. It is clearly not such a partition for there is a recital in the document, "the parties having had disputes in the division of moveable and immoveable property they owned the mediators decided as follows:—" and what follows is consistent with a definite settlement of the claims of the respective parties but not with a mere partition by metes and bounds.

As regards the second contention, Mr. Varadachariar relies on the decisions of the Privy Council in *Kondama Naicker v. Kandasami Goundar*¹ and Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh,² but in these cases the claimant knew that the title he put forward was an untrue one and it was consequently held that the compromise of the claim was not one that would bind the estate. The real question is whether the dispute is a bona fide dispute and these cases are merely authority for holding that if the dispute is not bona fide, it is not binding on the reversion. In the present case I have discussed the circumstances and come to the conclusion that Ammanna did put forward a bona fide claim, believing that he had some right in the family properties. Whether that claim was valid in law or not (and after this long interval it would be very difficult to elicit the facts necessary for deciding such a matter) is not material, for if the claim of Ammanna was put forward in good faith and had some foundation, and the dispute between him and the widow was compromised with the aid of mediators, that compromise is binding on the reversioners.

This compromise being valid, the transfer of the remaining properties by the widow to her daughter Nagayya amounted to a transfer of the whole estate remaining to her. The reservation of 6 and odd acres for the widow's enjoyment is a small reservation for her maintenance and does not affect the validity of the surrender which otherwise included the whole estate. Mr. Varadachariar has sought to draw a subtle distinction between a gift by the widow of the whole estate to her daughter and a surrender of the same, his contention being that Exhibit VIII was only a gift for the daughter's life and that the property would revert to the donor on the daughter's death. It is possible that such a gift might be made, but it would have to be clearly so expressed. A surrender is tantamount to a gift and may be effected either by gift or by relinquishment of rights. The widow's gift was to the next reversioner and must be deemed to be a surrender of the widow's whole estate. The reservation of some immoveable property for her own enjoyment during her life-time does not invalidate the surrender. For this we have the authority of the Privy Council in Bhagwat Koer v. Dhamukdhari Prashad Singh.³

The next question for consideration is, who became entitled to the properties enjoyed by Nagayya on her death. It is contended for the respondents that when Nagayya died those properties would devolve on the heir of the deceased Tiruppayya and that therefore as his widow was then alive she would again succeed to the properties. It has, however, been held that when a widow surrenders her estate she effaces herself so far as that estate is concerned and the estate of the deceased husband is opened to his next heirs at that date, or to put it in the language of the Privy Council in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden.⁴

"It is the effacement of the widow—an effacement which in other circumstances is effected by actual death or by civil death—which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date."

It is not said that the effacement amounts to civil death and that the widow is, therefore, incapable of holding any property at all, for that would be inconsistent with the reservation of any property for her maintenance or with her ability to hold moveable property after surrendering immoveable property, which has been held to be possible under another system of Hindu Law. If the widow is effaced so far as the estate is concerned, there is no ground for holding that her right is revived by the death of her daughter during her life-time. The effacement is made in order to accelerate succession to her husband's estate. On the surrender, therefore, the next heir takes the property and when that heir dies, the devolution must continue in favour of the next reversioner and the succession cannot be interrupted by the mere fact that the widow is still alive. After the daughter, the deceased's estate must go to the next reversioner and it cannot be contended that the widow is in any sense a reversioner. To allow her, therefore, to revive the rights which she has deliberately surrendered would be to retard succession rather than to accelerate it. There is only one direct authority on this point and that is *Sartaji v. Ramjas*⁵, where it was held that upon the death of the daughter the rights to the property vested in the next reversioner to her father and not in her mother. On Nagayya's death, therefore, the right to succeed to the property devolved on the plaintiff as the next reversioner and his suit in respect of that property is barred by limitation as being brought more than 12 years after the daughter's death.

v.
Seetanna.
Phillips, J.

A further contention is raised that in respect of the 6 and odd acres left in the widow's possession, the plaintiff's right to sue for possession did not accrue until after the widow's death. Undoubtedly he could not sue for physical possession, for this provision for maintenance was binding on the estate and, therefore, was binding upon the plaintiff when he became entitled to that estate; but, although he could not get physical possession, yet he could ask for symbolical possession, namely, such possession as was capable of being given, but this is in effect really a declaration that he is entitled to the property. He is not bound to bring such a suit, but can wait until the widow's death and then bring a suit for actual possession to which he would then be entitled. Plaintiff's claim in respect of the acres 6, cents 42 is not barred by limitation.

The next point relates to the compromise entered into between the plaintiff through his guardian and the 1st defendant for himself and as guardian of defendants 2 and 3. Under Order 32, Rule 7, a guardian cannot enter into a compromise of a suit on behalf of a minor except with the permission of the Court. In this case leave to compromise was not granted. The

v.
Seetanna.

Phillips, J.

compromise, therefore, is certainly not binding on defendants 2 and 3 and must be set aside so far as they are concerned.

The more difficult question is whether that compromise is binding on the 1st defendant so far as his share of the family property of himself and defendants 2 and 3 is concerned. The same question was under consideration by the Privy Council in Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row.⁶ I am unable to distinguish this case from that. In that case a father entered into a compromise on behalf of his minor son whereby he gave up his right under certain decrees in favour of the other party and it was held that not only was the compromise not binding on the minor son but that it was not binding on the share of the father. The reason given for this decision is at page 306:

‘Rajaram Row, unless he was attempting to divide the joint family, could only deal with this property with the consent of his son or in his capacity as manager of the estate. In his capacity as manager of the estate he was only able to deal with it for certain limited purposes, and none of those purposes are, or can be, suggested as the consideration why these considerable sums were released. It follows, therefore, that the attempt to alienate, or to release, from the estate these substantial portions of the joint family property failed, and that there was no efficacy given to the arrangement that was then contemplated.’

The only difference between that case and the present is that there the property was money due under decrees and here it is immoveable property. It has not been shown that the alienation of this immoveable property was for necessity or for any other purpose binding upon the sons. The compromise did not purport to alienate the father's share alone but the whole of the family interest in the property. It would, therefore, not be binding on the family. Although in somewhat similar circumstances, when such an alienation has been effected, the Court will enforce an equity in favour of the alienee to the extent of the alienor's share, it does not follow that the Court will enforce such a compromise before the equity has in fact arisen. It is only when the decree is passed that such an equity can arise and, therefore, the Court should refuse to validate a transaction which would necessitate a further equitable relief to one of the parties. The compromise is, therefore, not binding on any of the defendants 1 to 3 and the decree passed in accordance therewith must be set aside. The compromise relates to the properties obtained by the 1st defendant's father in 1880 or 1888 and the plaintiff's right to recover them has been held above not to exist.

In the result both the appeals must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed so far as these appeals are concerned except in respect of acres 6, cents 42, in Appeal No. 309. Each party will pay and receive proportionate costs.

Appeal No. 310 of 1924. Reilly.—In this case the appellants are defendants 1—3, the successors-in-title of Ammanna, to whom Venkataramanamma gave up half the property standing in the name of her deceased husband Tiruppayya. In my opinion we should certainly not be justified in differing from the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the story that Ammanna was adopted as illatom son-in-law of Dorayya is untrue. Six witnesses for the plaintiff have given evidence that it was only after Dorayya's death that his daughter Ademmma was married to Ammanna. On the other side we have the evidence of D.Ws. 3, 4 and 9. D.W. 3 says that the marriage was before the death of Dorayya, and his evidence implies that he was present at it, though he does not say so explicitly. In examination-in-chief he states that Ammanna was taken as Dorayya's illatom son-in-law; but in cross-examination it appears that he was only told of this by his father-in-law. He is under obligations to defendant 1, and the Subordinate Judge does not regard his evidence as of any value. D.W. 4 says that Dorayya brought Ammanna from his native village and that Ammanna lived with Dorayya both before and after his marriage; but he gives no evidence that there was any illatom adoption. D.W. 9 speaks of Ammanna as illatom son-in-law of Dorayya but admits that he knows nothing personally about the adoption. When this is the state of the oral evidence, the facts that in Exs. I, I-B and VIII-A there is no mention of Ammanna being illatom son-in-law of Dorayya and that on the contrary in Ex. I he is described as the adopted son of Venkamma and in Ex. I-B as her foster-son are ample basis for the finding that the story of an illatom adoption is an after-thought. No reasonable explanation why Ammanna was not described as illatom son-in-law of Dorayya in those documents, if he was so, has been suggested. If that were the basis of his claim, it would almost certainly have been put in the forefront instead of being altogether forgotten. And, if the Subordinate Judge was right, as in my opinion he was, in rejecting the story of an illatom adoption, he was clearly wrong in finding that Venkataramanamma gave half of Tiruppayya's property to Ammanna because Tiruppayya had directed her orally to do so. That Tiruppayya gave such a direction in respect of his property is recited in

Reilly, J.

Ex. VIII-A, which was executed 8 years after Exs. I and I-B; but it was not put forward by defendants 1—3 in their written statements as a basis for their claim. Indeed they could not put it forward, as, if the story of an illatom adoption was true, then Ammanna was entitled to half of the family property and that half was not Tiruppayya's to dispose of. I agree with Mr. Varadachariar that it was not open to the Subordinate Judge to set up a case for defendants 1—3, not only not set up by them, but contradictory to and destructive of the case with which they came to Court.

But it was pleaded by defendants 1—3 that after Tiruppayya's death there were disputes between his widow Venkataramanamma and Ammanna and that those disputes were settled by mediators, in accordance with whose award the property in question in this appeal was allotted to Ammanna. I am not prepared to dissent from my learned brother's view that this can be regarded as a settlement of a bona fide family dispute, which should not now be upset. I do not agree with the suggestion made at one stage of the arguments that because there was this dispute so long ago there is a presumption that it was a bona fide dispute. In such a case the circumstances must be examined so far as evidence regarding them is available. When we find on the one side Tiruppayya's elderly aunt, Venkamma, who had been managing the household for years, and Ammanna, then a middle-aged man, whom this aunt had brought up and who had been attending to the cultivation of the family land, and on the other side Venkataramanamma, a young widow, whose husband had died 2 years after their marriage, there is certainly no presumption that any claim to the family property put forward by Venkamma and Ammanna, who were in such a dominating position, was made in good faith. It was an occasion on which a young widow might easily have been overborne and have been unable to assert her rights effectively. In such a case it is the duty of the Court to investigate the circumstances as carefully as possible and to beware lest an unrighteous claim is accepted as having been made in good faith merely because it is ancient history. But in his reply the learned Advocate-General has drawn our attention to evidence which makes it probable that Ammanna had an honest basis for his claim. P.W. 8 says that, when Ammanna joined Dorayya's family, with whom it is not now disputed he lived for many years, he left his own family property to his brothers. P.W. 2, Dorayya's niece, says that when Dorayya was divided from his brothers, he got 8 acres of land; but, when Tiruppayya died, the extent of the family property had increased to about 44 acres. P.W. 2 also says that her aunt Venkamma managed the household and after Tiruppayya's death asserted that she had acquired most of the family property and insisted that some of it should be given to Ammanna, which was the origin of the dispute between Venkataramanamma and Ammanna. P.W. 4 also says that Venkamma objected to Venkataramanamma conveying Tiruppayya's property to her daughter because Venkamma had acquired some of the property, and so half was allotted to Venkamma and enjoyed by Ammanna. This is evidence given by the plaintiff's witnesses. It appears probable that the large increase in the family property was due to the good management of Venkamma assisted by Ammanna. When we remember that Anunanna had left his own family and abandoned his claim to a share in their property and that the division recorded in Exhibit I, by which Ammanna got half the property standing in Tiruppayya's name, was settled by mediators of other families, I think there is as much evidence as can reasonably be required at this distance of time to show that Ammanna had a moral claim, which he and Venkamma urged in good faith, and that the settlement of the dispute so caused was a proper and honest family settlement, which should not now be disturbed.

In this appeal the only remaining question is whether the compromise between the plaintiff and defendants 1—3, on which the Subordinate Judge based his decree, can be upheld to any extent. As it was not sanctioned by the Court it is ineffective against the minors, defendants 2 and 3. It is urged for the plaintiff that the compromise is binding on the defendant 1's share of the property in the possession of defendants 1—3, which share would not fall far short of the 8 acres to be given to the plaintiff under the compromise. But I agree that even in respect of the share of defendant 1 the compromise cannot be enforced by the plaintiff. If the compromise fails in part, then the whole contract falls through. Defendant 1 did not bargain to transfer the whole of his share of the property in dispute in order that the shares of defendants 2 and 3 should be saved. As my learned brother has pointed out, this transaction is not similar to one in which an alienee from a manager of joint family property for valuable consideration not binding on the family is allowed to enforce his claim against the manager's share. That is done because the manager has received

v.
Seetanna.
Reilly, J.

Veeranna
v.
Sectanna.
Reilly, J.

consideration and must make good his alienation so far as it is within his individual power. But here defendant 1 did not get the consideration for which he bargained. Indeed the compromise being invalid against the plaintiff, who, like defendants 2 and 3, was a minor, cannot be regarded as any consideration at all. And the decision of the Privy Council in Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row^a is against the contention of the plaintiff.

I agree that the appeal must be allowed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal No. 309 of 1924.—This appeal relates to the other half of Tiruppayya's property, which Venkataramanamma gave up to her daughter, Nagayya, by Ex. VIII. I agree that that transaction must be regarded as a surrender of the widow's interest to her daughter. That the document is in the form of a deed of gift is of no importance. Nor does the reservation of 6.42 acres for her life appear to me to be more than a reservation for maintenance—and not an excessive reservation—though maintenance is not mentioned in the document. When we are examining what purports to be a surrender by a Hindu widow to the next male reversioner, we have to assure ourselves that it is a real surrender and not a devise either to divide the property with him explicitly or by means of some undisclosed consideration or to insure the succession of a particular reversioner for reasons of partiality. But, when the surrender is to the widow's daughter, who in the great majority of cases, is likely to outlive the widow and whose immediate succession is not likely to affect the ultimate devolution of the property to one male reversioner rather than another, it is unnecessary to scrutinize the surrender with suspicion so long as in effect the widow's estate is wiped out but for a reasonable provision for her maintenance. That appears to have been the effect of Exhibit VIII. Its language, which is that of an absolute gift, is not strictly suitable to a surrender. Nor it is suitable to a transfer of the widow's interest for the life of the daughter with a reversion to the widow if she survived the daughter. The only reasonable construction of its absolute terms, considering the person in whose favour it was executed, is in my opinion that the widow surrendered her widow's interest and stepping aside let in her daughter. That being so, when, as it happened, the daughter died before the widow, I cannot accept either of Mr. Varadachariar's suggestions for bringing the property back again to widow—that she succeeded her daughter as heir or that she again came in as the widow of Tiruppayya, the last male owner. Either suggestion is inconsistent with the theory of a widow's effacement. When once a widow has effaced herself, has stepped aside and has surrendered her widow's estate in favour of a male or female reversioner, I do not see how that widow's estate can ever be revived. See Sartaji v. Ramjas.⁵

The right of the plaintiff's predecessor to possession began when Nagayya died, and for the property which went to her under Ex. VIII, except the 6.42 acres reserved for Venkataramanamma, his claim is clearly time-barred. But for possession of the 6.42 acres reserved for Venkataramanamma time did not begin to run against the plaintiff or his predecessor from Nagayya's death. Certainly, so long as Venkataramanamma was in possession, no reversioner had a right to possession, and so time could not begin to run against him. In respect of the 6.42 acres the plaintiff's suit is in time.

I agree, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed except in respect of the 6.42 acres and that the parties should pay and receive proportionate costs in both Courts.

Lingayats of North Canara—Law applicable—Adoption of married man—Validity—Proof of custom.

Lingayats are bound by Hindu Law except in so far as it is modified by custom. Thus in the case of Lingayats governed by the law of the Madras Presidency the adoption of a married man is invalid. A person who sets up a custom to the contrary has to prove it.

Held, on the evidence in the case, that such a custom was not proved.

In the absence of proof that in any particular case parties have changed their personal law, Lingayats of North Canara continue to be governed by the law of the Madras Presidency and the Mayukha law has no application to them even though the District of North Canara has been transferred to the Bombay Presidency for administrative purposes.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor in O.S. No. 14 of 1919.

S. Varadachariar, P. Kameswara Rao and E. Krishnamurthi for appellants.

The Advocate-General (A. Krishnaswami Aiyar) and B. C. Seshachala Aiyar for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Defendants 2, 4 and 6 are the appellants and the facts which led up to this appeal are as follows:—

The parties to the suit who belong to the Lingayat community are members of the Punganur Zemindar's family. Punganur was permanently settled in 1861. It is an impartible estate governed by the law of primogeniture.

On the 22nd of December, 1896, the then Zemindar, Raja Immadi Sankara Royal Yasavanta Bahadur, executed a will marked as Exhibit Y in the case. It recites that he transferred the estate to his eldest son Raja Immadi Veera Basava Chikka Royal Varu, and that he the eldest son should be the head of the Samasthanam and after him his eldest son and so on in succession. After giving certain directions and after giving certain legacies, he gave monthly allowances to his second and third sons.

[After referring to the terms of the will and subsequent legal proceedings their Lordships proceeded as follows:—]

The upshot of these proceedings was that the plaintiff and his descendants were to get Rs. 100 a month as Thevvajji or allowance as provided for in the will of his father and that in lieu of the lands referred to in the will and the decree of the District Judge giving him lands of the value of Rs. 35,950 he was to get a sum of Rs. 125 a month.

The decree of the High Court was in 1906. About September, 1907, the 1st plaintiff and his mother went to North Canara and were staying in the house of one Subhadrammayi, who was a relation of the 1st plaintiff's mother and, according to the appellants, the 1st plaintiff was taken in adoption by that lady and a regular deed of adoption (Exhibit 17) was executed and registered, the 1st plaintiff himself presenting it for registration. Exhibit 17 is a registration copy of the deed of adoption. It is executed by Subhadrammayi, who was the widow of one Basavalinga Raja of Biligi, Siddapur Taluk, in favour of the 1st plaintiff, who is the 1st respondent before us. It recites that the 1st respondent was taken in adoption. This document was executed in North Canara, and it is not disputed that the properties which are referred to in this document as having passed to the adopted son are situate in North Canara. Though the factum of the adoption seems to have been disputed in the Lower Court, the Judge finds that the adoption was made in fact. We shall assume without deciding the point that the adoption was as a matter of fact made. Its validity, however, is disputed on the ground that the 1st respondent the adopted son was then a married man and that consequently the adoption is invalid. And in fact the whole of this appeal practically turns on the invalidity of the adoption owing to the adopted son being a married man at the time of adoption.

Somasekara
Royal
v.
Mahadeva

Though the 1st plaintiff was taken in adoption by the deed, dated the 19th of September, 1907, the parties seem to have changed their minds probably because the Biligi Samasthanam did not turn out to be as valuable as it was supposed to be.

In 1908 the 1st plaintiff and his mother again went to Biligi, and a release deed Exhibit CC, dated the 28th of November, 1908, was executed by the 1st plaintiff the adopted son in favour of the adoptive mother. The deed states that when the 1st plaintiff and his mother went to see the waterfall during the Bhādrapada month of the Plavanga year, the adoptive mother learning of the arrival of the son (1st plaintiff) and the mother sent for them and on account of the old relationship and on account of "emotion" executed a document on 13th Bhādrapada, Suddha corresponding to 19th September, 1907 and had it registered and that the 1st plaintiff and his mother went away to their native place Punganur. It states that nothing took place according to the usage and law as stated in the document, that the adoptive mother herself has been managing the properties and that the climate of Biligi does not suit the 1st plaintiff. It winds up by saying "we with your consent have hereby relinquished to you our ownership, etc., rights passed to us under the aforesaid document." Then the property is described.

In 1912, i.e., about 5 years after the adoption and 4 years after the relinquishment, the 1st plaintiff filed a suit (O.S. No. 46 of 1912) for arrears of maintenance. The plaint in that suit is marked as Ex. C. It sets out the rajinama already

v.
Mahadeva

referred to giving him Rs. 100 a month for allowance and Rs. 125 a month in respect of the lands relinquished and claimed Rs. 6,695-13-4 after giving credit for the amounts the 1st plaintiff had received. In the meantime the Zemindar of Punganur who was a party to the agreement died and his son was brought in as the defendant. He filed a written statement stating that the agreement made by his father was not binding on him and setting up various other defences. His defence was not accepted and a decree for the arrears of maintenance was passed. In that suit there was no defence raised that the plaintiff having been adopted into another family ceased to be entitled to any maintenance even if the agreement of compromise giving him the rights claimed was valid and binding on the defendant. There was an appeal (No. 325 of 1913) against this decree, but it was dismissed by the High Court. The decree was executed and the plaintiff got his money.

Suit No. 14 of 1919 out of which the present appeal (No. 354 of 1926) arises was filed on the 1st of March, 1919, by the 1st plaintiff to whom under the rajinama Rs. 100 a month for allowance and Rs. 125 in respect of lands was agreed to be paid and by the widow of the late Zemindar who claimed Rs. 40 a month payable to her. The amount claimed was for the period subsequent to the period covered by the previous suit for the recovery of arrears of maintenance which was decreed. There were various defences raised, but the main defence with which we are concerned in this appeal is that the plaintiff having been adopted by the Rani of Biligi is not entitled to claim anything from the Zemindar either under the deed of Rajinama arrangement or otherwise. To this the answer was that there was no adoption as a matter of fact and secondly, the adoption even if it was true is invalid in law because the 1st plaintiff was at the date of the adoption a married man about 23 years of age.

The suit was originally laid against the 1st defendant only, the Zemindar, but pending the suit he died and defendants 2 to 6 were brought on record as his legal representatives and they adopted the written statement of the 1st defendant. A plea was raised by the 4th defendant that the maintenance should be reduced to Rs. 70 and Rs. 75 as the income of the estate had considerably fallen.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit. As regards the factum of adoption he held that the adoption was in fact made. He was of opinion that evidence oral and documentary in support of the factum of adoption amply supported

Royal
v.
Mahadeva
Royal.

the factum of adoption. As in our view the adoption even if true is invalid it is unnecessary to give a finding on this point.

As regards the validity of the adoption, two questions arise, namely, (1) whether the plaintiff was married at the time of the adoption, and (2) whether the adoption of a married man among Lingayats is valid.

It is admitted that the 1st plaintiff was a married man at the time of the adoption. The parties are Lingayats and the question is whether the adoption of a married man by a Lingayat is valid.

The Subordinate Judge held that as the adoptive mother belongs to North Canara which was part of the Madras Presidency before it was transferred to the Bombay Presidency in 1861, the law applicable to the parties is the law as applied in the Madras Presidency, that as the adoption of a married man has been held to be invalid, the 1st plaintiff's adoption was invalid and inoperative and that he, therefore, remained a member of his natural family and was entitled to the rights conferred on him by the Rajinama.

North Canara originally formed part of the dominion of Hyder Ali and his son Tippu, who were the Rulers of Mysore, and in 1799, on the fall of Tippu Sultan, North Canara and other territories were ceded to the East India Company and formed part of the Madras Presidency till 1861, when for administrative purposes the administration of that district was transferred to the Bombay Presidency.

So far as the Presidency of Madras is concerned the law has always been that the adoption of a married man is invalid. The latest decision of this Court is Lingayya Chetty v. Chengalammal.¹

Except in the Bombay Presidency where the Mayukha prevails, it has been held by the Courts in all the provinces in India that the adoption of a married man even though he happens to be a Sudra is invalid. The decisions are referred to in Lingayya Chetty v. Chengalammal.¹ It is argued for the appellants that the decisions to the effect that in the case of Sudras the adoption of a married man is invalid are wrong. We see no reason to differ from the current of authority which so far as we can see is uniform and is also supported by the Smriti Chandrika and other texts.

Somasekara
Royal
v.
Mahadeva
Royal.

So far as the Bombay Presidency is concerned, in places where the Mayukha is followed as the paramount authority, it has been held that the adoption of a married man is valid. We may refer to *Kalgavda Tavanappa v. Somappa Tamangavda*² and Manikbai v. Gokuldas.³ This is not by reason of any custom in derogation of the law but by reason of the express text of the Mayukha to the effect that a married man may be adopted.

It is argued for the appellants that as North Canara has been incorporated in the Bombay Presidency from 1861, the law as administered in the Bombay Presidency should be the law to be administered to Lingayats in the Bombay Presidency where the adoption of married men has been held to be valid. An alternative ground has been taken that among the Lingayats, wherever they are, whether in the Madras Presidency or the Bombay Presidency, the adoption of a married man is valid by custom, that evidence of such a custom has been adduced in this case and that the Judge was wrong in holding that the custom has not been proved.

When the North Canara District formed part of the Madras Presidency, the law as administered by the Madras High Court was that the adoption of married men was invalid; and it would have been necessary for a person there who sets up a custom to the contrary to prove it. The transfer of North Canara to the Bombay Presidency for administrative purposes would not by itself change the personal law of persons residing in the North Canara District. Whether it is a case of an individual migrating from one province to another or a case of territory where he resides being transferred from one province to another, the presumption until the contrary is shown is that he carries his personal law with him, and it is difficult to see how the Mayukha can be said to apply to the North Canara District, simply because it was transferred to the Bombay Presidency. We may in this connection refer to *Huro Pershad Roy v. Shibo Shunkuree Chowdhraim*⁴ and Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao.⁵

Turning to the custom set up, the custom alleged is a custom among the Lingayat community to which the parties belong, permitting the adoption of married men. It is a general custom alleged that Lingayats, wherever they are, are permitted to make adoptions of married men.

Before dealing with this question it is necessary to refer shortly to the Lingayat community. The Lingayats who were originally Hindus are a body of dissenters and the founder of their religion was one Basava who was born about 1100 A.D. Their religion is correctly summarised by Thurston in his Castes and Tribes of Southern India, Vol. IV, at page 236 as follows:—

"Their religion is a simple one. They acknowledge only one God, Siva, and reject the other two persons of the Hindu Triad. They reverence the Vedas, but disregard the later commentaries on which the Brahmins rely. Their faith purports to be the primitive Hindu faith, cleared of all priestly mysticism. They deny the supremacy of Brahmins, and pretend to be free from caste distinctions, though at the present day caste is in fact observed amongst them. They declare that there is no need for sacrifices, penances, pilgrimages or fasts. The cardinal principle of the faith is an unquestioning belief in the efficacy of the Lingam, the Image which has always been regarded as symbolical of the God Siva."

Mysore, the Southern Mahratta country and the Bellary District contain most of these Lingayats. Though the sacred thread is not worn by the Lingayats, a ceremony called Deeksha ought to be performed about their 8th year, but as in the case of Upanayanam it is often performed much later. The sacred mantra is whispered in the ear by their Guru and this ceremony corresponds to Upanayanam among the Brahmins. We may also refer to *Virasangappa v. Rudrappa*⁶, where some of the Lingayat tenets are set out.

It is conceded in this case that so far as their religious duties are concerned, the Lingayats have got Agamas or sacred books which are of primary authority. One of such books is Vathulagama which has been filed as Exhibit Q in this case. It deals with adoption. These Agamas are dialogues between Siva their chief God and his consort Parvathi. As regards adoption this is what it states:

"The wise should take a boy possessing all the limbs, clean, endowed with beauty, born of the same gotra, having a liking to good conduct, aged five years excluding the eldest, of good conduct, highly intelligent, of sweet speech, tender hearted."

So far as the age limit is concerned, this age corresponds with the age given in Dattaka Chandrika. As regards the ceremonies of adoption which appear after this passage, homam is performed with Vedic mantras. As regards the age of five years, custom has relaxed that rule and the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses in this case is that adoption can be made before the Deeksha ceremony is performed. The question, however, is whether custom has relaxed the rule that an adoption cannot be made after a person is married.

In the case of Jains it is undoubted law that in the absence of any custom to the contrary which has to be set up and proved, they are subject to the rules of Hindu Law. We may refer to *Gettappa v. Eramma*⁷ where the authorities are collected. The Jains do not worship Siva nor do they recognise the authority of the Vedas. But in the case of Lingayats whose only God is Siva and who acknowledge the authority of the Vedas they are all the more bound by Hindu law except in so far as it is modified by custom.

As regards the evidence of custom the Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the custom has not been made out. The custom pleaded, as said before, is a general custom among the Lingayats and not a special or local custom in North Canara, or in the family of the adoptive mother. A large number of Lingayats are found in the Mysore Province, Bellary, and the Southern Mahratta country. The Zemindari of Punganur is on the borders of the Mysore Province. So far as the Mysore Province is concerned, it has been held by the Chief Court of Mysore that the adoption of a married Lingayat is invalid. The judgment of the Chief Court is marked as Exhibit WW in this suit. The learned Judges of the Chief Court observed:

"It is, however, desirable to say a few words on the validity of Kariappa's adoption which is referred to in the first and second grounds of appeal. It is found that Kariappa was married but the Courts have held that it was not a disqualification as he was a widower at the time of his adoption by the 1st defendant. The parties are Lingayats. Even if it be held that the law governing Sudras applied to them, according to Mr. Mayne, 'as regards Sudras, adoption could be performed effectually till marriage.' And in another place he quotes the Pandit's opinion that the period fixed for adoption is 'with respect to Sudras, prior to their contracting marriage,' page 178 (6th Edition). See also reference at page 179 to the case of Papamma v. Appa Rau.⁸ Though there is no express authority on the point, having regard to the fact that the questions of age, marriage, etc., are determined in the texts on the consideration of certain rites, such as Upanayanam, marriage, etc., having to be performed to the individual to be adopted in the adopted family, there is strong reason for holding that marriage is a bar in spite of the fact that the person concerned was a widower at the time of adoption."

So far as Bellary which is part of the Madras Presidency is concerned, we have not been referred to any decision where the adoption of a married man among the Lingayats in Bellary was upheld. As North Canara was part of Mysore and Madras Presidency, at least for 80 years, the presumption is that the rules as to adoption which are prevalent in the other parts of the Presidency and which are based on the Smritis are current in this Presidency and Mysore.

8. (1893) I.L.R. 16 M. 384 at 396; 3 M.L.J. 80.

Somasekara
Royal
v.
Mahadeva
Royal.

Though the Lingayats in the Vathulagamā which, as the witnesses state, is binding on the Lingayats, fixed the fifth year as the proper age for a boy to be adopted, and though amongst the Lingayats and other communities adoption may by custom take place at a later age, there is no reason to suppose that there is a custom among the Lingayats in the Madras Presidency or in Mysore or in North Canara which was part of the Madras Presidency and Mysore, to so extend the age as to render valid by custom the adoption of a married man. It has, therefore, to be proved that in North Canara, where the adoption took place and the adoptive mother was living, there was a custom among the Lingayats by which the adoption of a married man was legal.

So far as the plaintiffs' witnesses are concerned, their evidence is that such an adoption is not valid, but the defendants' witnesses speak to instances of adoptions of married men and those witnesses are defendants' 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, 8th to 15th and 21st witnesses. The difficulty in the case of some of these witnesses is that there is nothing to test their general statement that the adoption they speak to was that of a married man. There must have been deeds of adoption but no deeds are produced and such deeds, if the adopted boy was a major, would disclose the fact, as there would be no guardian mentioned and generally it may be taken that any boy over 18 would be married. The cross-examination of some of the witnesses when they speak of the man adopted being married shows that they have no conception of the years which they were speaking of.

The Subordinate Judge deals with the evidence of the witnesses in detail in paragraph 33 onwards of his judgment and it is not necessary for us again to refer in detail to it. He observes in conclusion:

"I have shown that the evidence adduced to establish the custom alleged is not convincing nor clear. The custom has not obtained any judicial recognition so far either in Bombay or in Madras. In Bombay adoptions of married men have obtained judicial sanction, not because they are customary but because the Mayukha law approves of their validity. In the Mysore Province, such adoptions have been declared invalid by the Mysore Chief Court."

Somasekara
Royal
v.
Mahadeva
Royal.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge that as a custom it has not been proved. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the argument of the learned Advocate-General that as the adopted son, i.e., the 1st plaintiff, was a resident of Punganur in the Madras Presidency, it is his personal law that should govern the adoption, and that even if the adoptive mother belonged to North Canara and the custom as to adoption was proved, the adoption would still be invalid. It is also unnecessary to consider the argument that the defence based on the validity of the adoption is res judicata by reason of the fact that it was not set up in the previous suit for recovery of arrears upon the agreement now sued on, as the knowledge of the defendant would not affect the question of res judicata, or the further question that even if the adoption is valid, the rights created by the agreement could still be enforced. As regards the questions raised in the Memorandum of Objections as to the amounts payable under the agreement being payable to the plaintiff's descendants also, we think it unnecessary to express any opinion and leave the question open. As regards claims of hunting and forest rights, it is conceded that plaintiff will be entitled to them under the agreement. Plaintiff will be entitled to interest at 6 per cent. on the amount claimed from date of suit to date of payment. No order as to costs on Memorandum.

We think the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the custom as to the validity of the adoption of a married man has not been proved. The 1st plaintiff, therefore, continues to be a member of the Punganur family and the agreement entered into is enforceable by him.

We think the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and dismiss the appeal with costs.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE REILLY AND MR. JUSTICE CORNISH.

C. Meenambal Ammal .. Appellant* (Respondent)

v.

Aburubammal .. Respondent (Plaintiff-Applicant).

Meenambal
Ammal
v.

Aburubammal

Hindu Law—Widow—Suit on promissory note executed by widow—Consent decree charging one of the properties in her possession with the payment of the decree amount—Subsequent surrender of that property and other properties comprising her husband's estate to the next reversioner—Alienation of the charged property by the reversioner to a stranger—Subsequent death of widow—Application by decree-holder to execute the decree and sell the charged property—Objection by the purchaser that the charge did not persist after the death of the widow—Onus of proof on the decree-holder—Duty of executing Court to decide the question—Right of decree-holder to rents and profits of the property charged till the widow's death—Validity of the widow's surrender—Right of the purchaser to insist on the transfer after the reversion fell in on the death of the widow—Transfer of Property Act, S. 43.

Meenambal
Ammal
v.
Aburubammal

In a suit upon a promissory note executed by a Hindu widow, a consent decree was passed by which the decree amount was made a charge upon one of the properties in her possession in which she held a widow's estate. Subsequently, she surrendered her interest in that property and in her husband's estate to her husband's reversioners who later on sold that property to a stranger who took possession of it. The widow died afterwards and the decree-holder applied to execute the decree and recover the amount by selling that property. The purchaser in possession raised the objection that the charge did not persist after the death of the widow.

Held:—(1) that the onus was on the decree-holder to show that the charge was created for necessity legally sufficient to give it effect on the husband's estate after the widow's death or at least to show that the decree-holder took the charge in good faith that it was of that nature after making reasonable inquiries,

(2) that, as the decree-holder brought the purchaser of the property from the reversioner as the legal representative of the widow and the purchaser denied that she was the legal representative, that question must be decided by the executing Court by going into the question whether the widow created the charge validly so as to make it persist after her death,

(3) that the decision of this question by the executing Court did not amount to going behind the decree but only to construing the decree, and

(4) that the decree-holder was not entitled to recover the rents and profits of the properties charged up to the date of the widow's death as the charge gave only a right to recover the debt by sale of the property.

Obiter (by Reilly, J.):—A Hindu widow cannot, by surrendering her widow's interest in her husband's property to her husband's reversioners, defeat the charge which had been created on the property by a consent decree against her.

Where a Hindu reversioner professed to be the owner of the property on the ground that the reversion had fallen in to him by means of a surrender by the widow, and as such to sell his ownership right to a stranger, and the surrender is invalid in law, the purchaser can call upon the reversioner to make good the transfer, if the reversion falls in to him on the death of the widow, under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act.

On appeal from the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Beasley (now Chief Justice), dated 28th March, 1929 and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in E.P. No. 148 of 1928 in C.S. No. 758 of 1924.

K. Ramanatha Shenai for respondent.

Meenambal
Ammal
v.
Aburubammal
Reilly, J.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Reilly, J.—This appeal is against an order made by the learned Chief Justice as Mr. Justice Beasley in execution proceedings. In November, 1921, one Thayammal, who was the widow of Munuswami Mudali, with her brother Kanniappa Mudali jointly executed two promissory notes in favour of Aburubammal, who is the respondent before us. Kanniappa Mudali became an insolvent, and Aburubammal brought a suit against Thayammal on the notes. That suit was compromised in April, 1925; and on the basis of the compromise a consent decree was made, under which Thayammal had to pay Rs. 1,750 in instalments and the whole amount was made a charge upon a house in Madras called "Ganesa Vilas". In December, 1925, Thayammal surrendered her interest in that property and in her husband's estate to his reversioners; and they a month or so later sold the house to Meenambal, who is the appellant before us. In June, 1926, Thayammal died; and the execution petition with which we are concerned was put in on the 30th March, 1928. At one stage it was asserted by Aburubammal that this house, "Ganesa Vilas," was the absolute property of Thayammal; but it has been admitted before us that Thayammal got it from her husband, whose property it was. How after being her husband's property it became her absolute property there is no evidence, and it has not been explained to us. Before Mr. Justice Beasley the whole case proceeded on the assumption that Thayammal had only a widow's interest in this house; and in the circumstances we also must proceed on that assumption. Mr. Justice Beasley eventually made an order that Aburubammal was permitted to execute the decree against the assets of Thayammal in Meenambal's hands and that the house should be sold in execution of the decree. It is against that order that Meenambal appeals.

It has been admitted before us that Meenambal has had nothing to do with any assets of Thayammal other than this house; and it is clear that Meenambal cannot be the legal representative of Thayammal except as the person owning or possessing the house. A large part of the judgment of Beasley, J., is taken up with the consideration of the question whether by surrendering her widow's interest to her husband's reversioners Thayammal could defeat the charge made by the consent decree on this house. I am inclined to agree with Beasley, J., that Thayammal's surrender could not have that effect, though I do not think it is necessary for the disposal of this case to express any final opinion on that.

Meenambal
Ammal
v.
Aburubammal
Reilly, J.

But Mr. Ramanatha Shenai, who appears for Aburubammal, has taken a new point before us. He has drawn our attention to a decision of Phillips and Odgers, JJ., in Vijayaraghavachariar v. Ramanujachariar,¹ according to which, having made this alienation by way of a charge on the house, Thayammal had put it out of her power to make any surrender to the reversioners at all. In that decision the learned Judges follow the decision in Sakharam Bala v. Thama.² If that view is correct, then, as Mr. Ramanatha Shenai contends, the surrender made by Thayammal was invalid, and on the strength of that surrender the reversioners could not convey a good title to Meenambal. But that difficulty, I think, could be answered for Meenambal by calling in aid section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. Mr. Ramanatha Shenai has contended that a transfer or attempted transfer of their expectancy by reversioners cannot be validated under the provisions of that section and has quoted Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti.³ But that was an entirely different case. In that case certain defendants, who were in the line of succession to a Zemindari, purported to mortgage their expectancy, and the learned Judges held, no doubt rightly, that that was prohibited by section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. But here the reversioners did not purport to transfer any expectancy to Meenambal. They professed to be the owners of this house on the ground that the reversion had fallen in by the surrender and they professed to sell their present right in the house to Meenambal. If the true view is that the surrender was invalid, they had not a present right in the house. But, when Thayammal died, the reversion did fall in apart from the surrender, and Meenambal, if the conditions of section 43 of the Act are fulfilled, could call upon them to make good the transfer which they erroneously professed they were able to make at the time of their sale.

But that is really a by-path in this case. Anyhow it is admitted that Meenambal is in possession of the house, and the real question is whether the charge, which was created by the decree, is one which persists after Thayammal's death. If Thayammal had only a widow's estate—and on that assumption we must deal with the case—the charge would not persist beyond her death unless it was made for legal necessity. Beasley, J., in his judgment mentions that Meenambal did raise this objection, that the charge could not extend beyond Thayammal's death; but he says the question was not argued before him. But, if that contention was raised for Meenambal, no argument, so far as I can see, at that stage would be necessary. If Thayammal had nothing more than widow's estate in this house, all that Meenambal need do was to raise that contention and then wait for the decree-holder to attack the position by showing that the charge was created for necessity legally sufficient to give it effect on the husband's estate after Thayammal's death or at least to show that she took the charge in good faith that it was of that nature after making reasonable inquiries. The burden was obviously upon Aburubammal. Mr. Ramanatha Shenai admits that that is the well-known rule on the matter and that the burden would be upon his client if this was a suit. But he contends that the whole position is different because these are execution proceedings and that Meenambal cannot question the nature of the charge in execution proceedings. His argument is first that the Court in execution proceedings cannot question the validity of the decree. That is not a proposition which anybody has disputed before us or is likely to dispute. But he goes further and says that this is of the nature of a mortgage decree for sale, and he contends that no one can be heard to say in execution that this property is not to be sold in satisfaction of the charge. He quotes in support of that position Kumaretta Servaigaran v. Sabapathy Chettiar,⁴ *Zamin-dar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati, etc., Devasthanams*⁵ and Sanwal Das v. Bismillah Begam.⁶ Now it is quite true that, if there is a mortgage decree for sale in a suit in which the validity and character of the mortgage have been established or admitted, no one can come in as a claimant under Rule 58 of Order 21 of the Code or as an objector under section 47 of the Code and say that the property mortgaged and ordered to be sold cannot be sold, because some one has a right to it. In such a case the mortgaged property must be sold in accordance with the decree, that is the mortgagor's and mortgagee's interests in the property, whatever they may be. But here to my mind we have something different from a mortgage decree for sale. This decree is the instrument which created the charge, though no doubt the charge can be enforced in execution. An executing Court, though it cannot question the validity of a decree, is bound to construe the decree, if necessary. Here we have a charge on this house. What does that charge mean? Is it a charge on the house which is to subsist indefinitely until the debt is satisfied, or is it a charge on Thayammal's interest in the house as a widow subsisting only for her life-time? That is a question of the utmost importance, and, to my mind, a question which the executing Court in such a case as this must decide, if required to do so. We must remember that this was a consent decree made on the basis of a compromise. The charge is a charge created as part of Thayammal's contract though it is clothed in decretal language and so can be enforced in execution proceedings. But it is obvious that, although the Court was the agency through which this charge was created, Thayammal could give the Court no authority to create a charge of more extended validity than she herself could create. As the nature of the charge actually created is disputed, it must be determined before the decree can be executed.

6. (1897) I.L.R. 19 A. 480.

Meenambal
Ammal.
v.
Aburubammal
Reilly, J.

That appears to me to be one answer to Mr. Ramanatha Shenai's contention that these matters cannot be agitated in execution. A second answer is that Aburubammal has brought Meenambal into the matter as Thayammal's legal representative. Meenambal denies that she is Thayammal's legal representative; then the question whether she is so or not has to be decided in execution proceedings. And how can it be decided without going into the question of the effect of the charge? Meenambal can only be legal representative in this case either if Thayammal had an absolute right to this property, which we must leave out of account, or if Thayammal created a charge on her husband's property validly so that it persisted beyond her death. In the latter case strictly Thayammal would have been acting, when she created the charge, as representing her husband's estate, and Meenambal, being in possession of the property on which the charge had been created, would be the legal representative of Thayammal in that capacity. The dispute whether Meenambal was the proper legal representative first came before the Master, and he refused to go into these questions whether the property was Thayammal's absolute property, whether Thayammal had only a widow's interest in it and whether she, having a widow's interest, had created a valid charge. On his refusal the matter was taken before the

Meenambal

Judge and came before Kumaraswami Sastri, J. He found that the Master was wrong and remarked that this was not, as the Master thought, a question of going behind the decree, saying in the course of his judgment:

"The question for decision is the character of a party, which in turn depends on the title to the property, the possession of which will make the person liable to be proceeded against in execution."

With that view I entirely agree.

There is a third difficulty in Mr. Ramanatha Shenai's way. As I have said, Kumaraswami Sastri, J., coming to that conclusion sent the matter back to the Master for the determination of these questions. The Master found that under the rules of the Court he could not deal with it and referred it to the Judge. It then came before Beasley, J. Now there was no appeal against Kumaraswami Sastri, J.'s order that these questions should be decided in execution. And, though there appears to have been an elaborate hearing before Beasley, J., there is nothing to show that any objection was taken for Aburubammal to the determination of these questions in the execution proceedings. In my opinion it is not open to Aburubammal now to say that this is a matter which cannot be dealt with in execution.

The position then appears to me to be this, that the decree-holder as alienee from Thayammal, who had only a widow's interest in the property, has not proved that this alienation, the charge made in the decree, was made for any necessity which could legally extend its validity beyond Thayammal's life, or that Aburubammal took this alienation in good faith after making the necessary inquiries. On the facts before us, on the contrary it appears probable that the debts for which this charge was created were not debts which could bind the husband's estate as they were contracted by Thayammal and her own brother. However, the burden is on the alienee, and the alienee has not discharged it.

There is only one other matter which I need mention. In one part of his judgment Beasley, J., has expressed the opinion that at any rate Aburubammal is entitled to recover the rents and profits of this house up to the date of Thayammal's death. In regard to that I must with respect differ from him. The charge, so long as it is valid, gives a right to recover the debt by sale of the house; but it could give no right to participate in the rents or profits.

In my opinion this appeal must be allowed and the execution petition dismissed with costs throughout.

Cornish, J.—I entirely agree.

I think that much of the argument addressed to us by the learned counsel for the respondent, the execution petitioner, was not really open to him in this appeal. When this matter came before Kumaraswami Sastri, J., the learned Judge clearly laid down that the objection raised by the appellant, who was the respondent in the execution proceedings, to the notice of execution, was not an attempt to go behind the decree against Thayammal, but was intended to show that the decree was not executable against her as Thayammal's legal representative. The appellant's objection was not an objection to the decree, which so far as she was concerned, was a perfectly valid decree against Thayammal's legal representative because she happened to be in possession of the property in which Thayammal, during her lifetime, had a Hindu widow's estate. I think the petitioner must have appreciated this position, because in her counter-affidavit she alleged that the property was the absolute property of Thayammal. These were the rival cases put forward by the two parties, and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in his judgment expressed the opinion that this question must be determined in execution under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that each party was entitled to prove the case which she set up in her affidavit. There was no appeal from this judgment, and when the case was referred by the Master into Court for determination by the Judge the argument appears to have proceeded on the lines indicated by Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in his judgment. Beasley, J., went very closely into the question whether the surrender of her estate, which Thayammal was alleged to have made in favour of the reversioners, from whom the appellant derived title to the property, was a valid surrender, and the learned Judge came to the conclusion that it was not. He did not, however, find that the property in respect of which the surrender is supposed to have been made was, as alleged by the petitioner, the absolute property of Thayammal. On the contrary, it is clear from the judgment that he was of opinion that it was property in which Thayammal had a Hindu widow's estate, for at the conclusion of his judgment he held that the "defendant, having taken the property with full notice of the charge created upon it and not having proved that the debt was not for necessity, the onus of proving this being upon the defendant, cannot be heard to say that the decree is not to be executed against her."

In my view, the question whether Thayammal could or did terminate her widow's estate by a surrender is not very material. Her estate was terminated by her death a few months later, and it appears to me that, if the appellant is a legal representative within the definition of section 2 (11) of the Civil Procedure Code, it does not matter whether the title under which she purported to be in possession was a good title or a bad one. Now, the decree here is not a decree for sale of property under Order 34, Civil Procedure Code, so as to come within the rule referred to in Zamindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati, etc., Devasthanams.⁵ It was perfectly open, therefore, to the appellant to object that the decree against Thayammal could not be executed against her unless it was shown that she was Thayammal's legal representative, either by being in possession of the property, which was Thayammal's property, or, at least, by being in possession of property over which Thayammal had created an encumbrance which continued to be binding on the property after Thayammal's death. I think that the appellant would have been entitled to succeed on the first point, because the petitioner failed to substantiate her allegation that the property in question was the absolute property of Thayammal. At the hearing, however, this point does not appear to have been argued.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider whether the appellant can be deemed to represent the estate of the deceased Thayammal by reason of being in possession of the property which Thayammal purported to charge, and which property Beasley, J., has found was taken by the appellant with full knowledge of the charge. But there the petitioner being the alienee of Thayammal, that is, the person in whose favour the charge was created by the consent decree, is met with the obligation of discharging the onus of proof which lies on the alienee of property from a Hindu widow. It has been held by a Full Bench in *Tirupatiraju v. Venkayya*⁷ that the interposition of a consent decree does not make any difference to the onus of proof. The alienee must still show that the alienation upon which he relies is one that is binding on the estate. The onus, therefore, was clearly upon the petitioner to show that the charge bound the estate after Thayammal's death; but she has not attempted to discharge the onus. On this ground I am of opinion that the execution petition should have been dismissed.

The suit was for a declaration that the defendant had no proprietary or under-proprietary right in a village situated within a taluqa of which the plaintiff was the taluqdar. In his right of taluqdar the plaintiff was the superior proprietor of the said village. The defendant was in possession of the village, and at the time of the suit he was paying to the plaintiff a yearly rent. His defence was that he held under-proprietary rights in the village which had been granted to his ancestor by the ancestor of the plaintiff four generations before. He denied that he was merely a thekedar of the village as alleged by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff and the defendant did not prove the particular cases on which they respectively relied in the pleadings. The plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was a mere thekedar, and the defendant failed to prove the deed of gift on which he relied. The Chief Court held, however, on the other evidence in the case, reversing the Trial Judge, that in fact there was a grant by the ancestor of the plaintiff in favour of the defendant of an heritable and transferable estate in the suit village, by reason of which the defendant had under-proprietary rights.

On a detailed consideration of the evidence, their Lordships affirmed the Chief Court.

Appeal No. 57 of 1928 from a judgment and decree, dated the 13th December, 1926, of the Chief Court of Oudh, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 31st August, 1925, of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli.

The suit, out of which this appeal arose, was brought by the present appellant, who was the taluqdar of Tiloi. The defendant (now respondent) was in occupation of the village of Sijni which formed part of the taluq and was held by him from the taluqdar at a rent which was raised in 1901 to the sum of Rs. 2,019. The defendant having set up a claim to hold the village permanently as proprietor or under-proprietor, the taluqdar instituted the present suit for a declaration negating this claim. The Subordinate Judge made a decree for the plaintiff as prayed, but the Chief Court reversed his decision and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff thereupon preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

25th March, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—This is an appeal by Raja Bahadur Bishnath Saran Singh, who was the plaintiff in the suit, against a decree of the Chief Court of Oudh, dated the 13th December, 1926, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli, dated the 31st August, 1925.

In the suit (No. 33 of 1925) the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that "the defendant has no proprietary or under-proprietary right in village Sijni, pargana Mohanganj." The above-mentioned village lies within the Taluqa of Tiloi, in the district of Rai Bareli, and the plaintiff is the owner of the Taluqa.

In his right of Taluqdar the plaintiff is the superior proprietor of the village.

The defendant, Rawat Sheo Bahadur Singh, is in actual possession of the village, and at the time of the suit he was paying to the plaintiff a yearly rent of Rs. 2,019.

The plaintiff served a notice of ejectment upon the defendant; the date of the notice is not clear: but it must have been shortly after the plaintiff came of age, which was in March, 1920. Thereupon the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff under section 108 (8) of the Oudh Rent Act XXII of 1886, for contesting the notice of ejectment.

The notice of ejectment was based on the allegation that the defendant was merely a thekeedar of the village and as such was liable to ejectment by means of a notice.

The defendant's suit was based mainly on the allegation that he held under-proprietary rights in the village, which had been granted to his ancestor by the ancestor of the plaintiff four generations ago.

The Assistant Collector, who heard the suit, decided on the 22nd March, 1923, that the matter was res judicata as far as the proceedings in the Revenue Court were concerned, and he held that the defendant could not be treated as an ordinary thekeedar and liable to ejectment by notice "until the Civil Courts come to a contrary finding."

The notice of ejectment, therefore, was set aside.

The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli on the 28th March, 1923.

The plaint alleged:—

"2. That the defendant has been working as a thekedar on behalf of the estate for purpose of realising rent, etc., on payment of rent, and he has to pay Rs. 2,019 on account of rent at present."

And the prayer was for a declaration as already stated.

The main allegations in the written statement were as follows:—

"Para. 17.—This allegation of the plaintiff is quite wrong that the defendant has been working on behalf of the estate for the purposes of collecting rent, etc.; as a mere thekedar on payment of annual rent. The truth of the fact is that in Shahi times Bhawan Singh, ancestor of the defendant, had taken part in a battle along with Raja Shankar Singh, ancestor of the plaintiff, and he was killed in the same battle. After the death of Bhawan Singh, Ram Bakhsh Singh, the brother of the deceased, married the daughter of the deceased with Babu Thakur Pershad, son of Raja Shankar Bakhsh Singh. At that time Rawat Sarabjit Singh, son of Bhawan Singh, was a minor and for this reason Raja Shankar Bakhsh Singh, having regard to the relationship and services of Bhawan Singh, gifted the village in dispute under a deed of gift (which was burnt in a fire) to Rawat Sarabjit Singh generation after generation.

"Para. 18.—That the defendant and his ancestors exercised their proprietary rights, i.e., gave land to reyayas for plantation of groves, allowed muafis and planted groves themselves which exist up to the present days, peopled puras and constructed dams.

"Para. 19.—That the defendant has been in possession of the proprietary powers for the last three generations under a deed of gift executed by Raja Shankar Bakhsh Singh and the plaintiff belongs to the fourth degree in the line of Raja Shankar Bakhsh Singh. The defendant has got proprietary rights in the village in dispute.

"Para. 20.—That the defendant and his ancestors have remained in proprietary possession for about 125 years from the date of gift on payment of fixed jama to the knowledge of the plaintiff and his ancestors and for this reason also the defendant has got under-proprietary rights in the village in dispute on account of adverse possession."

Amongst others the two following issues were stated:—

"1. Whether the plaintiff's ancestor if any made the defendant as his thekedar for purposes of collection of rent of village Sijni, in suit as alleged?

"2. Or whether the plaintiff's ancestor Shankar Singh gifted the village in suit to the defendant's ancestor about 125 years ago, conferring under-proprietary rights?"

The learned Subordinate Judge held that "Rawat Sarabjit Singh" (who was the ancestor of the defendant) "and his descendants can only be called lessees for the purposes of collecting rent and doing such other acts consistent with their status as mere lessees from the time prior to the old settlement."

The learned Judge, therefore, decided issue 1 in favour of the plaintiff, and issue 2 against the defendant.

There were other issues, to which reference at present is not necessary.

In the result the learned Judge made a declaratory decree in the plaintiff's favour as follows:—"That the defendant is neither a proprietor nor an under-proprietor in the village Sijni."

The defendant appealed, and on appeal the learned Judges of the Chief Court held that the defendant had under-proprietary rights in the said village: consequently they allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. From this decision the plaintiff has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

As already mentioned the plaintiff's case was that the defendant was a mere thekedar of the estate for the purpose of realising rent, and it appears that in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge the plaintiff's pleader stated that he could not fix the precise period of the theka alleged in the plaint, but he submitted that the theka was given by one of the plaintiff's ancestors to the defendant's ancestor between the first regular settlement and the last settlement. The first regular settlement was in 1862, and the second regular settlement was in 1892.

The learned Subordinate Judge did not accept the plaintiff's case as to the date of the theka: he said:—

"It appears that there was some sort of theka or lease not of the date between the regular and recent settlement as alleged by the plaintiff, but of an older date, very probably of the time of Raja Shankar Singh prior to the regular settlement. It is impossible to know exactly what the terms of the theka were, and we do not know if it was oral or committed to writing."

The learned Judges of the Chief Court disagreed with the above-mentioned finding and held that the plaintiff's case, viz., that the defendant was a mere thekedar, or collector of rents, had been disproved.

The learned counsel for the appellant drew their Lordships' attention with great care to the evidence, both documentary and verbal, given both on behalf of the plaintiff and on behalf of the defendant.

On consideration of the whole of the evidence their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the Chief Court in the above-mentioned respect was correct and they are satisfied that it was not proved that the defendant was a mere thekedar with no higher rights than those usually held by one in such a position.

Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the plaintiff did produce evidence which was sufficient to throw the onus upon the defendant of proving that he had the under-proprietary rights in the village which he claimed.

As already stated the defendant's case was based upon a deed of gift, which was alleged to have been made by Raja Shankar Bakhsh Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiff, to Rawat Sarabjit Singh, the ancestor of the defendant, about 125 years before the date of the written statement—and which was supposed to have been burnt.

With respect to the alleged deed of gift Wazir Hasan, J., was of opinion that the defendant's case that there was a written grant was not well established, and the learned Chief Judge came to the conclusion that a grant was made, and that it was probably contained in a deed but that was not proved.

Their Lordships are in agreement with the opinion of the learned Judges of the Chief Court that the evidence as to the existence of the alleged deed of grant and the alleged burning thereof was not of such a nature as would justify the Court in relying upon it, and they are of opinion that in the consideration of this appeal it must be taken that the alleged deed of grant and the terms thereof were not proved.

The position therefore, so far, is that the plaintiff and the defendant did not prove the particular cases on which they respectively relied in the pleadings. The plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was a mere thekeदार, and the defendant failed to prove the deed of gift on which he relied.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court, however, came to the conclusion that in fact there was a grant by Raja Shankar Singh in favour of Sarabjit Singh of an heritable and transferable estate in the said village, by reason of which the defendant had under-proprietary rights.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the consideration of this matter was open to the Chief Court on the pleadings and issues, as stated, and the question, therefore, arises whether on the evidence the decision of the Chief Court can be supported.

The learned Chief Judge stated that he was satisfied, on the evidence of Rani Harbans Kuar alone that the Raja Shankar Singh did grant the village Sijni to Sarabjit Singh at some time during the first quarter of the nineteenth century.

Rani Harbans Kuar was the widow of Jagpal Singh, and the mother of Surpal Singh, both of whom were predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff.

The Rani's evidence was given in January, 1899, in proceedings in the Revenue Court, which were instituted in order to contest a notice of ejectment, which had been given in 1898 by the then Raja, Surpal Singh; the result of those proceedings was that the Deputy Collector cancelled the notice.

The statement then made by the Rani was put in evidence in this suit.

Among other things, she said that she had seen the deed of gift, and that it was read over to her by one Diwan Rani Din, and she went so far as to give some evidence as to its contents. In view of the fact that the learned Judges of the Chief Court were of opinion that the defendant's case as to the alleged grant in writing was not established, an opinion with which their Lordships agree, it must be obvious that it would not be right to base the decision of this case solely upon the evidence of the Rani, who had pledged herself to such a material part of the defendant's case, which has been found to be not established.

This, however, does not conclude the case, because the Rani's evidence was by no means the only evidence on the record and in their Lordships' opinion certain facts were proved, which went to corroborate that part of the Rani's evidence on which the Chief Court relied.

The evidence goes to show that the defendant's ancestors were in possession of the village for very many years, and that for at least three generations of the Rawats, the plaintiff's ancestors had accepted rent from the Rawats without any interference with the Rawats' possession of the village, and as far as their Lordships are aware, the rent was at the same rate until, by an agreement of compromise made in August, 1901 (to which reference will be made presently), the rent was raised from Rs. 1,451 to Rs. 2,019.

The long-continued possession and the payment of rent at the same rate during such possession are not by themselves sufficient to decide the case: for such facts, taken by themselves, are consistent not only with the defendant's case, but also with plaintiff's case.

There were, however, in their Lordships' opinion, other matters proved in the evidence, which are consistent with the defendant's case, and which are not consistent with the plaintiff's case, as for instance: the facts referred to in the report of the Settlement Officer, Mr. D. C. Baillie, made in 1892, viz.: that the terms of the lease are very favourable, and rights superior to those of an ordinary lessee are claimed, but have never been decreed . . . Sarabjit, the original lessee, made a band across the Naiya, which gives a lot of water. Of the wells, three belong to the Rawats, all made by Sarabjit Singh. . . . The Rawats have had full powers of owners, and have given permission to plant baghs, etc., but it is said they refer to Tiloi for permission. The management and sir is in Tiloi's name, but the Rawats have actually had all the benefit."

It is true that the Rawats did not claim to be recorded as under-proprietors at either of the above-mentioned settlements, as Mr. Baillie pointed out in his letter to the Commissioner of Lucknow, dated the 12th August, 1893. This is a fact which, at first sight would seem to be inconsistent with the defendant's case; but it appears that the Rawats were not entered on the record at all, either as under-proprietors, or as thekedars, or tenants.

There is no doubt that the defendant and his predecessors were in possession at the time of the two settlements, and they should have been entered on the record in one or other of the above-mentioned capacities.

There must have been some good reason why no record of any kind of the Rawats' possession was made.

It is significant that Mr. Baillie, in 1893, acting as manager of the Court of Wards, which then had charge of the estate of the plaintiff's predecessor, though he considered it would be difficult for the Rawats to prove any permanent right, recommended that it was not necessary for the Court of Wards to take any action to recover possession which had been held by the tenants' family for 80 years. •

The Board agreed that existing arrangements should not be disturbed, and that the Deputy Commissioner should settle terms as to the new jama amicably with the incumbent.

The rent, as already mentioned, was raised from Rs. 1,451 to Rs. 2,019; this was brought about in August, 1901, by a compromise of a suit instituted by the manager of the Tiloi estate against the defendant, for a declaration that the defendant had no proprietary right in the village Sijni. The agreement that the rent should be increased was in consequence of the amount of the Government revenue having been raised in the last settlement. By the terms of the compromise, the question of the title between the parties was left open and undecided, and it was provided that the compromise should in no way affect the title of the parties.

The result, therefore, is that the raising of the rent payable by the defendant does not affect the question now under consideration.

In their Lordships' opinion, there is no doubt that there was a grant of some kind to Sarabjit Singh when he was a boy of about 5 years old, and it is not suggested that a grant of the kind now relied upon by the defendant could not have been made orally at the time alleged. The facts that the first grantee was a child at the time when the grant was made, that the interest of the grantee was treated as being hereditary, that the predecessors of the defendant expended money in making improvements on the land, that they exercised full powers of owners in material respects, are some of the matters which their Lordships think go to corroborate that part of the evidence of the Rani Harbans Kuar which was accepted by the learned Judges of the Chief Court.

It is not necessary to deal with the evidence in greater detail because their Lordships are satisfied that there was evidence to justify the conclusion at which the Chief Court arrived, and they are not prepared to disagree with the decision of the said Court.

It is necessary to refer to the fact that by a proclamation in March, 1858, of the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, the proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government. The confiscation would include not only the proprietary but also the under-proprietary rights.

The Government, however, by a sanad, dated the 25th October, 1859, granted to Raja Jagpal Singh, one of the plaintiff's ancestors, the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of Tiloi.

It was a condition of the grant that all holding under the Raja should be secured by him in the possession of all the subordinate rights which they formerly enjoyed.

Their Lordships feel no doubt that this condition was observed, and that the defendant's ancestors were allowed to and continued to enjoy the same proprietary rights under the Raja after the above-mentioned grant by the Government as they did before the confiscation.

In view of the fact that their Lordships agree with the decision of the Chief Court that the defendant has under-proprietary rights in the village subject to the payment of rent to the plaintiff, it is not necessary for them to consider the further question of limitation, on which reliance was placed by the learned counsel for the defendant.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

On 8th November, 1906, the owner of properties K and M mortgaged them both to Mangal. On 19th May, 1914, property K was sold to S, the ancestor of the respondents, a portion of the purchase price being left with S to enable him to discharge the mortgage of 8th November, 1906 and other debts of the vendor, including certain debts for which creditors had already obtained decrees and had attached the properties. In July, 1914, property M was sold to the appellants in execution of a decree obtained by Kishin, a creditor of the mortgagor before 19th May, 1914. The sale was subject to Mangal's mortgage. Then on 14th November, 1914, property K was sold under a decree obtained by another creditor of the mortgagor before 19th May, 1914. That sale was also subject to Mangal's mortgage. The purchaser later on, on 16th April, 1915, conveyed property K to S.

S having failed to pay off Mangal's mortgage and the other debts of the mortgagor out of the money left with him for that purpose, Mangal took in 1918 proceedings to enforce his mortgage by the sale of both properties, and, in execution of the decree obtained by him, both properties were sold in August, 1921. Before the confirmation of the sale, however, S intervened and deposited the amount required to satisfy the mortgagee's claim and thus obtained a setting aside of that execution sale. The amount so deposited by S was a much greater sum than would have been required if the mortgage had been paid off in 1914.

S then died, and his representatives the respondents sued to compel from the appellants as owners of property M contribution towards the amount which S had applied in paying off Mangal's mortgage.

Held, that the provisions of S. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and that the appellants were bound to make contribution.

The appellants were not parties to the contract between S and the mortgagor for the application of the money, and the benefit of the contract had not in any way passed to them. They bought subject to the mortgage and paid a price for the property on that footing and they cannot be allowed to have the benefit of it free from the mortgage and that without making any payment towards the attainment of that satisfactory result.

S. 82 prescribes the conditions in which contribution is payable and it is not proper to introduce into the matter any extrinsic principle to modify the statutory provisions.

Appeal No. 28 of 1929 from a judgment, dated the 5th February, 1926 and from the final decree, dated the 11th February, 1927, of the High Court, Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 1st May, 1922, of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

The facts of the case are stated sufficient fully in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

One Bijai Indar Singh owned two properties (1) a share in Mauza Kheria Gurdeo, and (2) a share in Mauza Mirpur, and he mortgaged both of them to one Mangal Sen on the 8th November, 1906, and in execution of the mortgagee's decree for sale both properties were sold on the 20th August, 1921, and the plaintiffs-respondents satisfied the decree by paying Rs. 31,939 on the 19th September, 1921, and the sale was set aside.

The plaintiffs-respondents, who are the present owners of the first village, Kheria Gurdeo, filed the suit (out of which this appeal arose) on the 20th December, 1921, against the appellant, Ganeshi Lal, who owns the second village, Mirpur, for rateable contribution of the mortgage debt paid in satisfaction of the mortgage, dated the 8th November, 1906.

The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim to contribution, and the Trial Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim, but, on appeal, it was allowed by the High Court and a decree passed in the plaintiff's favour.

The learned Judges of the High Court, in allowing the plaintiff's claim, observed as follows:—

"The law which declares the liability of several properties mortgaged to secure one debt is contained in the first clause of section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is there laid down that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the several properties mortgaged are liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage, after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other encumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage.

"It follows, therefore, that unless there was a contract to the contrary, the two items of the property with which we are concerned were liable to contribute rateably to the mortgage-debt in favour of Mangal Sen.

"It has been judicially held that the expression 'a contract to the contrary' in section 82 means a contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee (see the decision in *Ramabhadrachar v. Srinivasa Aiyangar*¹) and if that is a correct statement of the law it follows that in the present case section 82 is left to its full operation for it is not pretended that there ever was any contract between Bijai Indar, the mortgagor and Mangal Sen, his mortgagee, that the two properties were to be liable in any other manner than that contemplated by the section; and neither Sher Singh nor Ganeshi Lal as purchasers subsequent to the mortgage could, as against Mangal Sen, set up a case that the properties were not rateably liable to contribute to his debt. Prima facie, therefore, Ganeshi Lal is not entitled in this suit to maintain that the property purchased by Sher Singh was liable, to the full extent of its value, to be taken in satisfaction of Mangal Sen's decree.

"But the plea put forward by Ganeshi Lal was that by virtue of the terms of his purchase from Bijai Indar, Sher Singh was liable to satisfy the entire mortgage debt of Mangal Sen out of that portion of the purchase-money which was left with him for that purpose and that if he had done what he was legally obliged to do the result would have been that Mauza Mirpur would have stood free of the mortgage and could not afterwards have been sold in execution of Mangal Sen's decree. And so it has been argued before us that the plaintiffs have no right to enforce contribution. It is said that Sher Singh when he satisfied the mortgage decree was paying not his own money but the money of Bijai Indar which had been left with him to discharge the mortgage.

"The defendant by raising these pleas is clearly claiming for himself the benefit of a contract to which he was no party. The obligation to pay off the mortgage arose out of the agreement for sale entered into between Bijai Indar and Sher Singh. That was a personal obligation which Bijai Indar as vendor might enforce against his purchaser but it cannot be pleaded or enforced by Ganeshi Lal, who was a stranger to the contract. Ganeshi Lal bought the share in Mirpur subject to the mortgage in favour of Mangal Sen and he cannot escape liability by pleading the terms of the sale-deed executed in favour of Sher Singh."

The defendants appealed to His Majesty in Council against the said decree of the High Court.

Lord Tomlin.

13th March, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD TOMLIN.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature of Allahabad which reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

In the suit the respondents, before their Lordships' Board, being the representatives of the purchaser of one property (which may be called K) sued for contribution from the appellants, the purchasers of a second property (which may be called M), on the ground that the purchaser of K had paid off a mortgage which covered both properties.

Now the section of the Transfer of Property Act which deals with the right of contribution is section 82, and it is in these terms:—

“Where several properties, whether of one or of several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage after deducting from the value of each property the amount of any other encumbrance to which it is subject at the date of the mortgage.”

That is the statutory provision by which contribution as between owners of equities of redemption subject to a common mortgage is regulated.

The facts of this case are as follows. On the 8th November, 1906, the original owner of both properties created a mortgage for 8,000 rupees in favour of one Mangal. On the 19th May, 1914, he purported to sell property K to Sher Singh, the ancestor of the respondents for 33,000 rupees, and a sum of 32,000 rupees out of the purchase price was left with Sher Singh to enable him to discharge the mortgage of the 8th November, 1906, and other debts of the vendor, including certain debts for which creditors had already obtained decrees and had attached the properties. In July, 1914, the other property M was sold to the first appellant on behalf of himself and the second appellant in execution of a decree obtained by Kishin Singh, a creditor of the mortgagor before the 19th May, 1914. It was sold for 2,900 rupees subject to Mangal's mortgage. That sale constituted the title of the appellants to property M. Then on the 14th November, 1914,* property K was sold under a decree obtained by another creditor of the mortgagor before the 19th May, 1914. This sale was also subject to Mangal's mortgage and was for 1,950 rupees. The purchaser later on, on the 16th April, 1915, conveyed property K to Sher Singh for the sum of Rs. 2,500. These sales, of course, overrode the sale of both properties to Sher Singh purported to have been made on the 19th May, 1914. Sher Singh having failed to pay off Mangal's mortgage and the other debts of the mortgagor out of the money left with him for that purpose, Mangal's mortgage continued in force against both properties. In 1918 Mangal took proceedings to enforce his mortgage by the sale of both properties, and he obtained judgment and a decree for sale. On the 20th August, 1921, both properties were put up for sale and were sold, but before the sale was confirmed, namely, on the 19th September, 1921, Sher Singh, the purchaser under the contract of the 19th May, 1914, and the assign of the purchaser of property K under the sale of the 14th November, 1914 (the sale was on the 21st May, 1914 and confirmed on the 14th November, 1914), intervened and deposited the amount required to satisfy the mortgagee's claim and thus obtained a setting aside of the sale of the 20th August, 1921. The position, therefore, was this, that subject to Mangal's mortgage, Sher Singh held property K under the title made by the execution sale of the 14th November, 1914, and that subject to the same mortgage, the appellants held property M under the title made by the execution sale of July, 1914. Sher Singh had not carried out his obligation to the mortgagor under the sale-deed of the 19th May, 1914, in respect of the money left with him, but in 1921 he provided all the money then necessary to pay off Mangal's mortgage, which necessarily was a greater sum than would have been required if the mortgage had been paid off in 1914. Sher Singh died, and his representatives, the present respondents, launched the suit to compel from the appellants as owners of property M contribution towards the amount which Sher Singh had applied in paying off Mangal's mortgage. The appellants' answer was this:

*The auction sale in question was on the 21st May, 1914, for Rs. 1,450 (not Rs. 1,950, as stated in their Lordships' judgment) and on the 14th November, 1914, the sale was confirmed and a certificate granted to the purchaser.—K.J.R.

"Your ancestor had the money, or at any rate a substantial portion of it, 17,000 rupees, from the original mortgagor, and he ought to have applied that money in paying off the mortgage in 1914, and so far as it became necessary in 1921 to pay more than the 17,000 rupees that was due to your ancestor's negligence, and, therefore, we are not liable to contribute, because he had a contract with the mortgagor to apply the money."

The Subordinate Judge took the view, founding himself apparently on the case of *Muhammad Abbas v. Muhammad Hanid*² that there was an equitable principle which precluded the respondents from insisting on the right of contribution conferred by section 82. The High Court, on the other hand, took a different view, and held that the appellants were not parties to the contract between Sher Singh and the mortgagor for the application of the money, and that the benefit of the contract had not in any way passed to them, and that in these circumstances the provisions of section 82 applied and that the appellants were bound to make contribution.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the conclusion at which the High Court arrived is correct. It would indeed be somewhat surprising if the result were otherwise. The appellants bought subject to the mortgage and paid a price for the property on that footing, and their contention really amounts to this, that having paid for the property on the basis of its being subject to the mortgage they ought now to be allowed to have the benefit of it free from the mortgage and that without making any payment towards the attainment of that satisfactory result.

It seems to their Lordships that section 82 is the section that governs the case and that as the Act prescribes the conditions in which contribution is payable it is not proper to introduce into the matter any extrinsic principle to modify the statutory provisions. The decision in the case to which the Subordinate Judge referred may be justified on the footing that in that case there passed to the party from whom the contribution was sought the benefit of the contract by which the money was to be applied, so that he could say "I have a contract which frees me from the liability to contribution which the section would otherwise impose on me." No such plea is available to the appellants in this case. They were not parties to the contract of the 19th May, 1914, nor has the benefit of that contract passed to them in law or in equity.

Their Lordships are of opinion this appeal fails, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The appellants will pay the costs of the respondents in the appeal.

v.
Appalaswami.

There is a distinction between a grant burdened with service and one made in lieu of wages. In the former case, the grant cannot be resumed without at least showing that the services were required to be done and were refused.

Where a Zamindar wants to resume lands granted before the Permanent Settlement and held by the grantees from father to son, the onus is always on the plaintiff.

Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee, (1870) 13 M.I.A. 438, followed.

Where the question is as to the class to which a specified grant, involving service belongs, there is no presumption one way or the other.

Thiruvengkatacharlu v. Shaik Altoo Sahib, (1925) 50 M.L.J. 251, referred to.

The words "at the will and pleasure of your Highness" and "so long as your Highness may be pleased," occurring in a deed of grant, the operative part of which is clear and unambiguous, are only expressions of subservience and cannot be regarded as converting the position of the grantee as a mere tenant-at-will.

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao, dated 6th November, 1924, in Appeal No. 257 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam in Original Suit No. 32 of 1913.

dated the 28th October, 1912, to eject the defendants from the properties mentioned in the plaint and to direct payment of past mesne profits amounting to Rs. 1,500 and future mesne profits at Rs. 750 a month till delivery of possession.

The case of the plaintiff as set out in the plaint was that the village referred to in the plaint formed part of the mal assets of the Vizianagram Zamindari which is subject to a permanent peishcush, that some time after the Permanent Settlement the revenues of the suit village were from time to time granted by the former Zamindars of Vizianagram to the ancestors of defendants 1 to 6 as remuneration in lieu of cash allowance for rendering private and personal services to the Zamindar and subject to the payment of kattubadi of Rs. 37-8-0 and without any rights of alienation, that the grant was resumable at the will and pleasure of the grantor or his heirs, that the services for the remuneration whereof the grant was made consisted in the grantee or grantees maintaining a certain number of peons for the purpose of the grantees and their peons escorting the Zamindar in his trips and shooting and hunting expeditions, attending the annual Dasara Durbars at Vizianagram and rendering such other services as may be ordered from time to time which services were all of a purely personal and private nature, that the village was on several occasions resumed and kept under the management of the Zamindar and regranted at the request of the service-holders subject to the same conditions of service as before, that in 1872 the village was last resumed by the late Zamindar and regranted to defendants 1 and 2 and the father of defendants 3 to 6 on the same conditions of service and resumability, etc., as before and they executed a registered agreement, dated the 26th of December, 1873, that defendants 1 to 6 were rendering their services properly whenever called upon to do so till about 3 years before the date of the plaint and since then have neglected to render the service, that the defendants have colluded together and brought about some fraudulent mortgages, sales and other documents mala fide and without consideration, that some or all of the defendants 7 to 108 are in possession of the suit village, that the alienations are not valid and binding upon the plaintiff, that the plaintiff has no desire or necessity to continue the services of the defendants or permit them to enjoy the revenues of the village, that notice was given to the defendants on the 28th of December, 1910, terminating their services and calling upon them to vacate and surrender the suit properties, that the defendants have all combined together and failed to do so, and that the defendants have denied the title of the plaintiff setting up an adverse claim in themselves and have forfeited their tenure by reason of the denial and the alienations.

Defendants 7 to 69 were impleaded as they belonged to the family of defendants 1 to 6 and were unlawfully in possession of the suit properties and the other defendants were added as they were collusively in possession under defendants 1 to 6.

The contesting defendants filed written statements. They pleaded that the suit village and not merely its revenues was granted about 200 years prior to the Permanent Settlement to the ancestors of the present holders by the then local Chief of Sringavarapukotta, that it is not true that the grant was made as remuneration in lieu of cash allowance for rendering services private and personal to the Zamindar, that if the suit village was to be regarded as granted on a tenure connected with service, the grant was an absolute grant conferring an hereditary estate on the grantees for past services rendered and burdened with future services, that the grant is not, therefore, resumable at the will and pleasure of the grantor or of his heirs, that the services connected with the tenure of the suit village were not of the nature set out in the plaint, that the services rendered before the grant were of a public nature being help given in keeping the country in a tranquil condition in those days of trouble and disturbance, that the future services expected of the grantee were similar in character if required and if not they were merely nominal services such as attending Dasara, that the village was not on several occasions, as alleged in the plaint, resumed and kept under the management of the Zamindar and regranted at the request of the holders, that the holders have been enjoying the village hereditarily with full power of alienation, that the instrument, dated the 26th December, 1873, referred to in the plaint was executed on account of undue influence and without any consideration for it under a misconception of the rights of the executants and under an erroneous view of the law, that the holders of the village had been rendering certain merely nominal services and that the defendants are still willing to render the usual nominal services. The defendants deny any collusion. They state that the plaintiff has no right to call on them to vacate the properties. They state that they never denied the title of the Zamindar or set up any adverse rights. They state that even assuming that the plaintiff has a right to resume, they are the cultivating ryots of the village and are the owners of the kudivaram and that the plaintiff has at best a right to resume the melwaram only and has no right to eject them. They state that the mesne profits claimed are excessive, that the suit is barred by limitation in the case of the alienees and that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief.

The alienees filed written statements denying that the plaintiff has any right against them.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit. He held that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff was too meagre to sustain any finding in his favour; that there was no record to show that the assets of the village were included in the mal assets on which peishcush was settled, that there was no record to show that the Vizianagram Zamindar granted the revenue only on land and only after the Permanent Settlement with the Government, that there was no evidence to show the resump-tions of the land or revenue and control of the village by the Zamindar before the regrants were made and that the evidence did not support the case of the plaintiff that the grant was only a grant made in lieu of remuneration for services. He says that there is no evidence that the Dasara Durbar was ever held for the past 20 years or that the defendants refused to attend either as huntsmen or as Dasara attendants with their muskets and that the notice terminated the defendants' services without giving them an opportunity to do the services required. He then discusses the evidence oral and documentary and dismisses the plaintiff's suit.

An appeal was filed and it came on before Venkatasubba Rao and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ. The learned Judges differed in their opinion. Venkatasubba Rao, J., agreed with the Subordinate Judge and held that the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the defendants. Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., took the opposite view. The result was that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code and the appeal was dismissed with costs.

Owing to the difference of opinion this Letters Patent Appeal has been filed.

Although in the plaint it was alleged that the grant was made after the Permanent Settlement by the Zamindar of Vizianagram, the claim made in the plaint to eject the defendants and that the village should be put in possession of the plaintiff was abandoned. It is also conceded that the averment in the plaint that the grant was made subsequent to the Permanent Settlement is not true. It was admitted that the grantor was not a member of the present dynasty but was a previous Zamindar who held Vizianagram before the ancestors of the present Zamindar's family acquired it. In fact, we find from Exhibit VII, which is dated the 26th September, 1852, that the grant was made about 100 years prior to it and that it was made by Srimuki Kasipathi Raju. Both the learned Judges agreed that although there is no evidence that the properties claimed were included in the Permanent Settlement as alleged by the plaintiff and although the plaintiff has not produced all the papers regarding the Permanent Settlement it can be inferred from the subsequent conduct of the Zamindar as well as the grantees that the village was included and that the Government did not at any time put forward any claim to the village. The important question on which the learned Judges differed was whether the grant was a grant of land burdened with service or whether the land was granted merely in lieu of wages and so resumable at pleasure.

The original grant has not been produced by the plaintiff nor has he filed the papers in connection with the Permanent Settlement which would throw much light on the matter as to services. As a matter of fact the plaintiff started with the case that the grant was after the Permanent Settlement. The case was obviously not correct and was contradicted by the evidence on record. As that case was given up at the trial in the High Court, it is not necessary to proceed with the matter further than to state that it is impossible to see how the claim for ejectment made in the plaint can be supported in the absence of any proof as to the terms of the grant or the nature of the service at the time the original grant was made.

No satisfactory explanation has been given why these important records have not been produced or how it came about that the definite allegations in paragraph 3 (a) of the plaint were made.

The leading case on the subject of resumption is Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee.¹ Their Lordships of the Privy Council after observing that it was a very material issue whether in point of fact the lands claimed were on the occasion of the settlement treated as mal assets of the Zamindari in which case only their Lordships were of opinion that the question of any resumption would arise proceeded to deal with the question as regards the right of resumption assuming that they were included in the mal assets. After dealing with the various decided cases their Lordships observed:

"The conclusion which they would draw from the decided cases, as well as from the reason of the thing, is, that in every case that right to resume must depend in a great measure upon the nature of the particular tenure, or the terms of the particular grant. They agree with the observation of Mr. Justice Jackson, Baboo Koolodeep Narain Singh v. Mahadeo Singh and others,² that there is a clear distinction between the grant of an estate burdened with a certain service and the grant of an office the performance of whose duties are remunerated by the use of certain lands"—at p. 464.

After dealing with the facts, their Lordships conclude as follows:—

"It emphatically lay upon the appellant, who is seeking to dispossess, or to rack-rent, the respondents, who by themselves, or their ancestors, have brought those lands into cultivation, and enjoyed them for so long a period; who must have been permitted by former Zamindars to continue undisturbed in such enjoyment long after the incursion of wild elephants had become mere matter of tradition, to make out a clear title to resumption"—at p. 466.

The documents in question and the facts in the case have been dealt with in great detail both by the Trial Judge and by Venkatasubba Rao and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ., in appeal and we think it unnecessary to repeat what was already been said.

The following facts emerge as to which there can in our opinion be no possible dispute.

The grantees were hillmen and the lands are lands situate in hills. The grant was made about 1752 or earlier long before the present Zamindar acquired the villages. According to Exhibit VII the grant was made in 1752 and there could be no doubt on the evidence that the defendants and their predecessors-in-title have been in possession of the lands for over 250 years, and that they have brought the land under cultivation, the lands have been descending from father to son and they have been alienating the lands without question. The documents relating to alienation filed in this case take us back to 1844. On these facts we think the onus is very heavy on the plaintiff to show that the grant was merely a grant in lieu of wages resumable at will and not a grant burdened with service in which case it could not be resumed without at least showing that the services were required to be done and were refused. As we have already said, the grant has not been produced nor have the accounts and proceedings in connection with the Permanent Settlement which might have thrown much light on the terms under which the lands were granted been produced. It is not suggested that they were not available and it seems to us that the plaintiff has utterly failed on the main allegation made in the plaint that the grant was made after the Permanent Settlement or was merely a grant in lieu of wages for personal services.

2. (1866) 6 W.R. 199 at 209.

As regards the services in respect of which the grant was originally made, the Subordinate Judge in dealing with the third issue which related to the persons who made the grant to the defendants observed that it was clear that the Mukhi family made the grant to the Dorais about 200 years ago on the only condition inerrable of rendering military aid and to quell disturbances within or quarrel with a neighbour. He disbelieves the plaintiff's case as to the services. We agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the plaintiff has not proved that the grant was made for the performance of the private and personal services referred to by the plaintiff in the plaint. We are of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the grant was a grant made to the ancestors of the defendants merely in lieu of remuneration for personal services.

A great deal of argument was addressed to us on the presumptions which ought to be raised in cases of grants made for services. We are of opinion that where a Zamindar wants to resume lands granted before the Permanent Settlement and held by the grantees from father to son the onus is always on the plaintiff. We think the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee,¹ which we have already referred to, are clearly to that effect.

In *Lakhamgadda v. Keshav Annaji*³ Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., states that the combination of an interest in land and an obligation as to service may fall under three heads, viz.: (1) there may be a grant of land burdened with service, (2) there may be a grant in consideration of past and future service, and (3) there may be the grant of an office the services attached to which are remunerated by an interest in land; that in either of the first two classes of grants it may be made a condition that the interest in the land should cease when the services are no longer required, but in the absence of a provision to that effect lands held under those grants are not resumable at will. The learned Chief Justice held that in cases where there has been long and undisturbed possession enjoyed by the defendant and his predecessors, it will require strong evidence on plaintiff's part to make out his case for eviction.

We agree with the observations of Venkatasubba Rao, J., in Thiruvengkatacharlu v. Shaik Altoo Sahib,⁴ that where the question is as to the class to which a specified grant involving service belongs there is no presumption one way or the other.

A great deal of reliance has been placed by the Advocate for the appellant on Exhibit A, which was executed by the defendants 1 and 2 and by the father of defendants 3 to 6 in favour of the then Zamindar on the 26th of December, 1873. It appears, from Exhibit M (1), dated the 4th of July, 1872, that the inhabitants of certain villages belonging to the Zamindar petitioned the Raja stating that the persons referred to therein had mortgaged three-fourths portions of their holdings to certain persons and because of their not being able to earn their living upon the remaining portion were committing acts of trespass and mischief referred to therein and they prayed that the Zamindar would put a stop to this by attaching the villages and warning the holders of the land not to commit any mischief. Upon this, the Amin sent a report, Exhibit M (2), on the 6th of July, 1872, stating that those people were holding lands at favourable assessment, that they had mortgaged their holdings and were carrying away the crops of other people, that a complaint was made to him, that there was a balance of Rs. 22-13-6 payable by them to the Estate, and that they had not appeared even when summoned many times and he prayed for permission to attach the village. Upon this, the order Exhibit K was passed on the 11th of October, 1872, by the Raja of Vizianagram asking the Amin to collect the sum of Rs. 22-13-6 at once. There is nothing in the order authorising any attachment as prayed although Exhibit K is a reply to Exhibit M (2), dated the 6th of July, 1872.

On the 12th of October, 1872, the Mirasdar of Relli wrote Exhibit Q to the Amin of Pedagadi Tana stating that one Pandaraju, the holder of a sixth share in a village, died leaving no male issue except a foster-son, that the deceased was keeping a woman of low caste and a male child was born to her and that both of them were quarrelling as regards the share. The petitioner prayed that the share may be attached till the succession was settled.

Exhibit Q (1), dated the 21st of October, 1872, is a communication from the Amin to the Raja requesting orders on the petition Exhibit Q.

On the 8th of November, 1872, the order Ex. L was passed stating that the one-sixth share of the deceased and the remaining five-sixths share in respect of which cist was not paid should be attached and leased out and that the rents should be collected. We may point out that the land was never actually taken out of their possession of the grantee and let out to others. Attachment was evidently merely preventing the grantees from cultivating for a short time.

On the 20th of January, 1873, the first and second defendants and others sent the petition Exhibit M to the Superintendent of Vizianagram Estate stating that the lands which had long been in their enjoyment had been attached without any reason, that they were suffering for their maintenance, because the crops had been poor and because there was famine the previous year and that if they had committed any fault, the same may be enquired into.

Upon this the Raja sent Exhibit M (3), dated December, 1873 (the portion bearing the date is torn) stating that these people executed a Kararnama on a Rs. 16 stamp paper stating among other things that they would render Sircar service properly with 32 men and that if it was brought to the notice of the Huzur that they behaved improperly they could be disposed and the village entered in the Sircar accounts. Then it says:

"We have been pleased to favour and grant Appandorapalem, hamlet of Relli, which bears, out of Gudikattu Doulu of Rs. 203-8-0 deducting Rs. 37-8-0 Sircar cist, remaining cist of Rs. 166 for service Muzaravasatu to Uggina China Ramandora and others."

The document referred to in Exhibit M (3) is Exhibit A. It purports to be a deed of agreement executed by the 1st and 2nd defendants and others and recites that the village which was assigned to them for services rendered was resumed in consequence of their failure regularly to perform the services, and that on their representation that they had no other means of livelihood and that in case the Raja revoked the resumption of the grant they would henceforward be properly rendering service with 32 men, the Raja had out of grace assigned the village bearing a Dowle of Rs. 203-8 with a kattubadi of Rs. 37-8 payable out of the same and measuring 150 acres 36 cents as service grant on condition of their enjoying the same at the will and pleasure of the Zamindar as long as he might be pleased. The agreement states that the executants have agreed to be present with 32 men and be rendering such service as was required by the Zamindar paying the kattubadi of Rs. 37-8 in two instalments. It concludes by saying:

“If it comes to notice that we have in any way acted in contravention of your Highness's orders, we agree to your Highness taking away the said village from our possession and getting it annexed to the estate.”

A plea was raised in the Lower Court that this document was not executed voluntarily but was got from the executants by coercion. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the document was unduly forced upon the executants, that as a contract it had no consideration and that it was not a grant of land by the Zamindar.

There is a great deal to be said in favour of the view taken by the Subordinate Judge when regard is had to the position of the parties, the mode of enjoyment for nearly 150 years and the circumstances that led to the execution of Exhibit A. It is, however, unnecessary for us to go into the question as even assuming that the agreement is binding on the defendants the plaintiff cannot eject them as there is no evidence that the defendants broke any of its terms.

It seems to us, reading Exhibits M-2, M-3 and A together and having regard to the proceedings which led to the execution of these documents, that the Zamindar even if the document was enforceable as a fresh grant would have to prove before he could eject the defendants that they had not been rendering services or had been guilty of any improper conduct.

We agree with Venkatasubba Rao, J., in his opinion that the grant is resumable under Exhibit A only if the grantees commit default in their performance of services, that the grant is one burdened with a condition of service and not one made in lieu of wages and that as the operative part of the deed is clear and unambiguous the resumption can only be on a breach by the defendants of their agreement to render service. The words “at the will and pleasure of your Highness” and “as long as your Highness might be pleased” are only expressions of subservience and cannot, if the operative part of the agreement is considered, be regarded as converting the position of the other party as a mere tenant-at-will. We may in this connection refer to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Vizianagaram Maharaja v. Suryanarayana*⁵ and to *Vizianagaram Maharaja v. Sitaramarazu*⁶. We must remember that the document was executed over 55 years ago by men in the hills and forest tracts at a place over 500 miles from Madras at that time unconnected by Railway from Madras when the power and influence of the Zamindars over the comparatively primitive inhabitants of the hills was very great and when the facilities of control which the Government now has over Zamindars was not very great.

It was argued that having regard to the various terms used as regards the defendants it should be presumed that the defendants are merely servants remunerated by the produce of the land, but we agree with Venkatasubba Rao, J., in thinking that no inference can be drawn from the use of the words Mudat, Mustajere or Vasathi, because there are other words like Mokhasa, Jodi, Kattubadi, etc., and the lands are described as Inam lands. For example, in Exhibit VII the lands are described as Inam lands and in the remarks column it is said that an annual kattubadi of Rs. 37-8 was fixed. Kattubadi is a revenue term for favourable quit-rent.

In Exhibit VIII, dated the 22nd of August, 1844, when referring to these lands, the following remark appears:—

“Until this village was granted as Mokhasa to the Manne people there were no village servants’ manyams. After Mokhasa was granted Uggina Appanna and others gave land out of their Vasathi to the village servants and have been getting their work and Sircar work done by them when required. As until it was granted as Mokhasa there were no manyams to village servants, there is no measurement.”

This shows that the defendants’ ancestors while in their time were granting sub-tenure to the village servants for doing their and Government work, the grant is described as Mokhasa grant and it is hardly likely that if the grantees’ ancestors were grantees more than 250 years ago and were themselves merely tenants-at-will and servants of the Raja paid for their services by the produce of the land, they would in their turn engage servants for doing Government service and pay remuneration out of their own lands. The probabilities, therefore, are that the grant was the usual grant burdened with service and not a grant resumable at will.

So far as the grantees are concerned, in some of the documents they describe themselves as Vasathidars and in some others as Mokhasadars.

these hill men. Little reliance can be placed on this document as the object of it was to get the alienations set aside and for that purpose, as Venkatasubba Rao, J., points out, these people were prepared to make any statement so long as the lands which they had alienated were got back. As pointed out, it is nobody's case that these were jiroiyati lands although Exhibit R says so.

We are of opinion that the decision of Venkatasubba Rao, J., is right and dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

Election petition—Rule 1 of Rules for the Conduct of Inquiries and Decision of Disputes relating to Elections—Meaning of “having jurisdiction”.

Certain acts complained of relating to an election, i.e., that votes given for the petitioner at the election were wrongly rejected by the President of Taluk Board as invalid and that the President refused to recount the votes when requested to do so, took place at a place P. A petition attacking the validity of the election was presented to the Subordinate Judge at C, who had jurisdiction over the place where the candidates were nominated but not over the place where the alleged irregularities happened. According to Rule 1 of the Rules for the Conduct of Inquiries and Decision of Disputes relating to Elections the petition should be presented to the District or Subordinate Judge “having jurisdiction”.

Held, that the expression “having jurisdiction” can only mean having jurisdiction over the place of the acts or omissions complained of.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, dated 28th October, 1929 and made in Original Petition No. 8 of 1929.

P. Govinda Menon for petitioners.

B. Pocker and Kunhamad Kutti for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petition before the Subordinate Judge of Calicut relates to the election of the two respondents before him as members of the Calicut Taluk Board for the Payyoli Firka of the Kurumbranad Taluk. The Subordinate Judge has no jurisdiction over the Kurumbranad Taluk. The election was attacked by the petitioner before the Subordinate Judge on the ground that votes given for him at the election were wrongly rejected by the President of Taluk Board as invalid and that the President refused to recount the votes when requested to do so. These acts according to the petitioner's allegations took place at Payyoli. Respondent-1 before the Subordinate Judge, whose election was attacked, is the petitioner here, and he urges that the Subordinate Judge of Calicut had no jurisdiction to hear an election petition regarding these acts alleged to have taken place at Payyoli outside his local jurisdiction. Under Rule 1 of the Rules for the Conduct of Inquiries and the Decision of Disputes relating to Elections* election petitions must be presented to the District or Subordinate Judge "having jurisdiction". Mr. Pocker for the petitioner before the Subordinate Judge urges that "election" in such cases includes nomination, as decided in *Selvaranga Raju v. Doraiswami Mudaliar*¹ and that the nomination of the candidates in this case was admittedly in Calicut, that the allegations of his client are really against the President of the Taluk Board, whose office is in Calicut, and that under the rules notice of such petition must be served on the President of the Board. For these reasons he contends that the Subordinate Judge of Calicut had jurisdiction in this matter, though the votes were rejected and the recount refused and both the respondents before the Subordinate Judge resided outside his jurisdiction. Rule 1 does not say that the petition can be presented to the District or Subordinate Judge having jurisdiction over the election or over any place where any act included in the term "election" is done, but merely to the District or Subordinate Judge "having jurisdiction". In my opinion, though the matter is not very clear, that means having jurisdiction over the place of the acts or omissions complained of. In this case, therefore, the Subordinate Judge of Calicut had no Limitation Act (IX of 1908), S. 6 (3) and Art. 44—Alienation by mother and guardian of minor—Death of ward as infant—Mother succeeding as heir—Death of mother without seeking to set aside alienation—Suit by reversionary heir for possession of property sold—Limitation.

The mother and guardian of a minor sold certain property belonging to the ward in 1873, and, the ward having died an infant in 1879 or 1880, she succeeded to his other property and died in 1921 without taking steps to set aside the alienation. A reversionary heir instituted a suit in 1922 to recover possession of the property sold from persons holding under the original vendee.

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation because of S. 6 (3) read with Art. 44 of the Limitation Act. The suit became barred on the lapse of three years after the death of the ward, notwithstanding the fact that he was succeeded by a female heir.

G. Lakshmanna and K. Kameswara Rao for appellants.

V. Govindarajachari for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Lakshmanna has argued this case at great length, but I am afraid I cannot uphold his contention. The facts may be briefly stated. The property belonged to Ramiah, who was the last full owner. During his minority, his mother, acting as his guardian, sold the property in 1873 to a person through whom the defendants claim. Ramiah died whilst still an infant in 1879 or 1880. After his death, his mother, as his heir, took possession of his other property and died in 1921. This suit was brought in 1922 by a reversionary heir for recovery of the suit item. Both the Lower Courts have held that the suit is barred by limitation. Mr. Lakshmanma contends that this decision is wrong.

Ramiah
v.
Brahmiah

Article 44 of the Limitation Act runs thus:

Description of Suit.	Period of Limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
By a ward who has attained majority, to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian.	Three years.	When the ward attains majority.

Mr. Lakshmanma's argument is, that as the ward died before he came of age, this article does not apply. He puts his case thus. The minor's right to recover the property would, but for this article, not be barred till the expiry of twelve years from his attaining his majority. The case would fall under Article 144. The transaction being voidable and not void, the possession of the alienee does not become adverse till the ward by coming of age becomes competent either to ratify or repudiate. (See *Shankerbhai v. Raisingji*¹ and Churcher v. Martin.²) The effect of Article 44 is, that the ward on attaining majority must elect within three years either to be bound or not to be bound by the transaction. The period of limitation is thus curtailed in his case. But as Article 44 applies in terms only to a ward who comes of age, his heir is not similarly restricted and can sue for possession without getting rid of the transaction. I think I have correctly set forth the somewhat ingenious contention of Mr. Lakshmanma. It amounts to this: that if the heir of the minor dying before attaining his majority happens to be a male, he has, under Article 144, twelve years from the minor's death within which he may bring the suit. The heir, unlike the ward, is not bound to remove the instrument from his path and is not trammelled by the three years rule. Again, according to Mr. Lakshmanma's contention, when the heir of a ward dying an infant happens to be a female, the reversioner who succeeds her, has, from her death, twelve years within which he can sue for possession. Can this contention be accepted? The minor on attaining full age cannot dislodge the alienee from the property without first clearing out of his way the deed of transfer executed by his guardian. (Doraisami v. Thangavelu.³) This rule applies also to the heir

Ramiah
v.
Brahmiah.

of the ward who dies after attaining his majority. It equally applies to an assignee who takes a transfer from such a ward. (*Raja Ramaswami v. Govindammal*⁴.) Is there then any reason why an exception should be made in the case of the representative of a ward who dies while still an infant? According to Mr. Lakshman's contention, the heir of a minor dying an infant is in a better position than the minor himself. The present case shows to what startling result this position may lead. Though the suit would have long ago been barred had the minor attained full age and died, the law must treat the claim as being alive, for the benefit of his successor, after the lapse of 50 years. There is nothing, in my opinion, in the Limitation Act which compels me to uphold such a contention.

The question is, when does the cause of action arise to set aside the transfer? Does it arise on the date of the alienation or when the ward comes of age? Article 44 no doubt fixes the starting point as the attaining by the infant of his majority. In my opinion, that article does no more than express the result of applying to the particular kind of case it contemplates the general principles embodied in sections 6 and 8 of the Limitation Act. The statute begins to run from the date of the alienation, but section 6 makes minority a cause for suspending the operation of the statute. Now, let us suppose that Article 44 ran thus:—

Description of Suit.	Period of Limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
By a ward who has attained majority, to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian.	Three years.	From the date of the transfer.

Let us apply to it the rules contained in sections 6 and 8. Section 6 says, "where a person is at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned a minor, he may institute the suit within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the first schedule". Section 8 enacts that "nothing in section 6 shall be deemed to extend for more than three years from the cessation of the disability, the period within which any suit must be instituted." The provision as given above in its altered shape, read in the light of these two sections, yields the rule in the exact form embodied in Article 44 as it stands. The reason for drafting this article in this manner is obvious. The other articles of the Limitation Act may apply to minors or to adults, but by its very nature the transaction referred to in Article 44 concerns minors only. It was, therefore, unnecessary to frame a rule in general terms, leaving it to be governed by the principles contained in sections 6 and 8. Art. 44 seems to be the result of an attempt to state the law compendiously in a self-contained provision. This is the view I am disposed to take and it receives support from the observations of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in *Doraisami v. Nondisami*⁵, a case decided by a Bench of three Judges. The learned Judge, after remarking, that even before the ward attains his majority, a suit can be brought on his behalf by a next friend to set aside the transaction and that the ward is bound by the result of such a suit, if honestly brought and conducted, goes on to observe,

Ramiah
v.
Brahmiah.

“This seems to indicate that the cause of action to set aside the alienation arises at once.”

The learned Judge thus continues:

“It seems difficult to hold that there are two separate causes of action given to the ward to set aside an alienation of the ward's property by the guardian—

(a) One cause of action which arises at once to be enforced by a suit brought by anybody acting as his next friend during the whole course of his minority, and

(b) another distinct cause of action which arises as soon as he attains majority (and only on the date of his so attaining majority and not before) to be enforced by a suit brought by himself as a major.

If there is only one cause of action which arises on the date of alienation, it seems to follow (as Abdur Rahim, J., has remarked) that Article 44 is only an illustration of the principle embodied in section 7 (corresponding to section 6 of the present Act).”

If this be the correct view to take of Article 44 (I entertain no doubt on the point) section 6, clause (3) comes into play. It runs thus:

“Where the disability continues up to the death of such person, his legal representative may institute the suit within the same period after the death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.”

The limitation is, therefore, to be reckoned from the death of the ward. In that case, the fact that on his death the estate is taken by a female heir, makes no difference. As observed

v.
Brahmiah.

in *Seetaramaraju v. Subbaraju*⁶, under the provisions of the Limitation Act, minority does not by itself prevent limitation from running against the minor although, by reason of the disability, an extended period is given. When the statute once begins to run, no subsequent event, not specially provided for, impedes its operation (section 9). The suit, therefore, became barred on the lapse of three years after the death of the ward, notwithstanding the fact that he was succeeded by a female heir.

In this view, the question regarding the scope of Article 141 does not arise. If time had commenced to run during the lifetime of the ward himself, Article 141 is clearly inapplicable. I do not, therefore, propose to consider any cases bearing on that provision.

Mr. Lakshmanma has not been able to cite any authority for his contention. It is opposed to *Sundrammal v. Rangasami*⁷, the facts of which are on all fours with those of the present case. The alienation in that case was made in 1861 by the adoptive mother acting as the guardian of her infant son. On his death before attaining majority the mother entered into possession and enjoyed the properties till she died in 1890. The suit was filed by the reversionary heir in 1891. It was held that the claim was barred. The following passage contains the reason:—

“He finds as a fact that the alienation was made by Muttammal and her minor son and that what was conveyed was an absolute estate. As the last male owner was alive the alienation was not that of a widow's estate by a widow but that of an absolute estate by the guardian of the last male owner. It was open to any next friend of his to have stepped forward during his minority and set aside the alienation on the ground that it was an act done without adequate necessity or in excess of the limited authority of a guardian. As the alienation took place in 1861 whilst the present suit was brought in 1891, a suit to set it aside would be barred, if the minor were still alive and his reversioners cannot take a higher position. The plaintiff's claim must, therefore, be held to be time-barred.”

Mr. Lakshmanma says that the judgment is very brief and that the decision is wrong. The decision is, in my opinion, correct though the learned Judges did not discuss the point at any length.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A consent decree for money provided that the plaintiff would not be competent to execute the decree within six months, and that if the defendant executed a patta in terms of a certain agreement and the plaintiff executed a kabuliyat in similar terms the plaintiff would not be competent to realise the decree-money from the defendant, and that otherwise the plaintiff would be competent to realise the decree-money from the defendant by executing the decree after the expiry of the said six months.

On an application for execution made by the appellant (plaintiff) for realisation of the decretal amount by sale of certain properties described therein, held, affirming the High Court, that the respondent (defendant) had always been ready and willing to execute the patta, that the appellant had wrongfully prevented him from doing so, and that the appellant was not, therefore, entitled to execute the decree as a money-decree.

Consolidated appeal No. 38 of 1929 from one judgment and two decrees, dated the 27th April, 1928, of the High Court, Patna (Das and Adami, JJ.), which reversed two orders, dated the 7th January, 1928 and 3rd March, 1928, of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad.

The main question for determination on the present appeal was, whether the appellant was entitled to execute a consent decree for money, dated the 15th February, 1926, in the events which had since happened. The Subordinate Judge answered the question in the affirmative, but the High Court took the contrary view.

The facts of the case, and the material portion of the consent decree in question, are sufficiently fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

of April, 1928, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which reversed two orders, dated the 7th of January, 1928, and 3rd March, 1928, of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad.

The appellant is a decree-holder, and the above-mentioned orders of the Subordinate Judge were made on two applications by the appellant for the execution of a consent decree, dated the 15th February, 1926, and made in a Suit No. 72 of 1924, which was brought by the appellant against the respondent, Raja Shri Shiv Prasad Singh (hereinafter called "the Raja").

The respondent, S. M. Ghosh, was appointed on the 22nd of December, 1927, Receiver of the Jharia Raj by the High Court of Calcutta in a suit brought by the Ranees of the late Raja against the Raja.

On the 7th March, 1916, the Raja succeeded to the Jharia Raj.

On the 6th March, 1919, the widows of the late Raja (hereinafter referred to as the Ranees) sued the Raja in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore, for possession of the Jharia Raj.

On the 3rd November, 1921, the Subordinate Judge at Alipore dismissed the Ranees' suit and the Ranees appealed against that decree to the High Court at Calcutta.

By two agreements, dated the 16th and 18th November, 1921, during the pendency of the Ranees' appeal, the appellant agreed to take from the Raja, who agreed to grant, mining leases in respect of 1,050 bighas of land, in mouza Barki Bowa, one of the villages of the Jharia Raj, on the terms and for the consideration therein mentioned.

The Ranees thereupon obtained an order from the High Court at Calcutta restraining the Raja from executing any mining patta in favour of the appellant.

On the 14th November, 1924, the appellant brought Suit No. 72 of 1924 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, against the Raja for a decree for specific performance of the said agreements, or, alternatively, for a decree for Rs. 1,89,313.

On the 10th February, 1926, the High Court at Calcutta gave the Raja permission to grant a lease to the appellant in the following terms:—

"Permission is granted to the petitioner to grant a lease to Mayasankar Bhagwanji on the terms mentioned in the petition subject to the following conditions:—

"1. That the lease will be without prejudice to the rights of the plaintiffs (meaning the Ranees) if any.

"2. That the defendant (meaning the Raja) will bring into Court all rents and royalties which he may receive under the proposed lease.

"3. That the defendant (meaning the Raja) will procure a report within a month from either Bird & Co. or Jardine Skinner & Co. estimating the value of the coal which may reasonably be extracted from the lands proposed to be demised within three years from date having regard to the present conditions of such land, and the defendant further undertakes that he will furnish security within a fortnight of the date of the report to the satisfaction of this Court for the amount so reported."

On the 15th February, 1926, the appellant and the Raja entered into a compromise in Suit No. 72 of 1924, and on the same date the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad passed a consent decree, of which the material portion was as follows:—

"1. That the plaintiff will get a decree for Rs. 1,40,353 (one lac forty thousand three hundred and fifty-three) and Rs. 2,701-14-9 pies as costs therefor, i.e., in proportion thereto.

"2. That the plaintiff will not be competent to execute the said decree within six months from this day, and if the defendant according to the order of the Honourable Calcutta High Court, dated the 10th February, 1926, executes a patta in terms of the agreement and the plaintiffs execute a kabuliyat in similar terms the plaintiff will not be competent to realise this decree-money from the defendant. Otherwise the plaintiff will be competent to realise the decree-money by executing this decree after the expiry of the said six months and with interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per month from the date of the decree from the defendant. To that the defendant will not be competent to raise any objection."

On the 10th March, 1926, it was reported by Mr. Bathgate to the Calcutta High Court that no coal could possibly be extracted within three years of the order of the 10th February, 1926, and on the 22nd March, 1926, the said High Court made the following order:—

"Let the report of the 10th March, 1926, made by Mr. Bhagat (? Mr. Bathgate) be recorded. It is not necessary in our judgment to make any further order except that we make it clear that no security need be given at present. As the learned Advocate-General on behalf of his client (meaning the Raja) has no objection we add that the appellants (meaning the Ranees) shall have liberty to apply." •

On the 19th of April, 1926, the pleader for the Raja sent a draft patta to the pleader for the appellant for approval, and asked for a kabuliyat in the terms thereof, but the latter failed to comply with that request. Correspondence took place in June, 1926, between the pleader for the appellant and the pleader of the Raja. The appellant's pleader, however, refused to accept the patta.

The ground taken on behalf of the appellant was that the draft was not in accordance with the consent decree of the 15th of February, 1926, and that the order of the Calcutta High Court, dated 22nd March, 1926, for which the Raja was alleged to be mainly responsible, had made the execution of the patta by the Raja according to the terms of the consent decree, impossible.

The Raja's pleader asserted that the draft patta was in accordance with the said consent decree, and suggested that the appellant's pleader should send a draft of his own or alter the draft which had been submitted, so as to bring it into conformity with the terms of the decree, and stated that he would accept the same. The appellant's pleader did not comply with the last-mentioned request, but repeated the objection that the execution of the patta by the Raja in accordance with the terms of the consent decree had become impossible.

It appears that the High Court of Calcutta, on the hearing of the Ranees' appeal in August, 1925, dismissed the Ranees' claim to the Jharia Raj, but allowed it in respect of the self-acquired properties of the late Raja, and remanded the suit to the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad to ascertain what those properties were, and on the 7th May, 1927, the Subordinate Judge held that the village of Bowa, both as regards the surface and underground, was the self-acquired property of the late Raja, and made a decree for possession in favour of the Ranees.

The matters in dispute between the Raja and the Ranees are the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council now pending.

On the 9th August, 1927, the appellant made the application (Execution Case No. 464 of 1927) giving rise to the second appeal, for execution of the compromise decree for realization of the decretal amount. The Raja filed objections opposing the application, but on the 7th January, 1928, the Subordinate Judge made an order dismissing the Raja's objections. The Raja thereupon appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna. The appellant's application for execution was, however, struck off on the 24th January, 1928.

On the 25th January, 1928, the appellant made another application for execution (Execution Case No. 49 of 1928), giving rise to the first appeal for realization of the decretal amount by sale of certain properties described therein.

On the application of the Raja the Subordinate Judge made the Receiver, who was in possession of the property proposed to be sold, a party to the last-mentioned application. The Receiver filed objections to the application, contending that the appellant was not entitled to execute the compromise decree as a money-decree on the grounds that the Raja had submitted a draft patta, but the appellant failed to approve it, and thus prevented the Raja from executing the patta, that the appellant was therefore not entitled to take advantage of his own default by executing the decree as a money-decree, that the Raja had always been ready and willing to execute the patta, and that there was no difficulty in granting the patta with the permission of the Calcutta High Court.

On the 3rd March, 1928, the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad made an order disallowing the Receiver's objection and allowing the appellant's application for execution to proceed. In making the order he followed his previous order of the 7th January, 1928, disallowing the Raja's objections. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the order of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 10th February, 1926, directing the Raja to furnish security, was intended to indemnify the appellant in case it should be held that the property to be leased belonged to the Ranees and not to the Raja; that the Raja by his conduct in consenting to the order of the 22nd March, 1926, giving the Ranees liberty to apply for security, prejudiced the position of the appellant, and consequently the appellant was justified in refusing to approve the draft patta; that by the decree of the 7th May, 1927, of the Subordinate Judge of Alipore, the title to the property to be leased was with the Ranees, and not with the Raja; and that the Raja by his conduct had made the condition for the execution of the patta impossible of performance, and consequently the decree for the payment of money by the Raja must be given effect to, and that the execution must be allowed to proceed.

Against the said order of the 3rd March, 1928, the Receiver appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna. His appeal and the appeal of the Raja were heard together and disposed of by one judgment delivered on the 27th April, 1928. The learned Judges held that under the terms of the consent decree the appellant had not reserved to himself the right to refuse to execute a kabuliyat; that the order of the Calcutta High Court did not affect the appellant's position, and, if anything, it was more favourable to him than the order of the 10th February, 1926, of the said High Court; that the decree, dated the 7th May, 1927, of the Subordinate Judge of Alipore, which was under appeal, did not affect the rights of the parties under the consent decree, because the appellant had agreed to take the mining lease during the pendency of the litigation between the Raja and the Ranees; that the Receiver had agreed to apply for leave to execute the patta on behalf of all the parties and under a patta so executed the title of the appellant would be complete; and that the appellant was not entitled to execute the consent decree as a money-decree. In the result they allowed the appeals with costs in both Courts, set aside the orders appealed from and dismissed the appellant's applications for execution.

Against this decree of the High Court the appellant has lodged the present appeal. At the hearing it was not contended that the decree of the Subordinate Judge which decided that the village of Bowa was the self-acquired property of the late Raja, and which gave possession thereof to the Ranees, affected the rights of the parties under the consent decree. It is obvious that the appellant agreed to take the lease while litigation between the Raja and the Ranees of the late Raja was pending with respect to the Raj, of which the village in question was alleged to be part, and the appellant must be taken to have known of the Ranees' claim with respect thereto, and to have agreed to take the lease for what it was worth. It is also to be remembered that the aforesaid litigation has not yet been finally determined in view of the appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The only point argued on behalf of the appellant before the Board, shortly stated, was that by reason of the order of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 22nd of March, 1926, the Raja was not in a position to execute a patta in accordance with the terms of the consent decree of the 15th of February, 1926.

It was argued that the Raja, by consenting to the order of the 22nd March, 1926, of the Calcutta High Court in the Ranees' suit, had altered the position contemplated at the time of the consent decree in the appellant's suit. It was said that it was then intended that such security as should be necessary should be given within a fortnight of the date of the report, mentioned in the order of the 10th February, 1926; that this was varied by the terms of the 22nd March, 1926, and that if the appellant worked the colliery vigorously and did succeed in raising coal, the Ranees would insist on security being given by the Raja, who might or might not give the same, whereby the position of the appellant was altered and prejudiced.

Their Lordships are unable to accept this argument.

They are of opinion that the Raja, by consenting to the terms of the order of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 22nd March, 1926, did not render it impossible for him to grant a lease in accordance with the terms of the consent decree, dated the 15th February, 1926, and they are further of opinion that in fact the Raja was prepared and did offer to grant a lease in accordance with the said consent decree.

It is necessary to refer again to the terms of the said consent decree, dated the 15th February, 1926. It provided among other matters, that if the Raja, according to the order of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 10th of February, 1926, executed a patta in terms of the agreement . . . the appellant would not be competent to realise the decree-money from the Raja.

The important words relating to the question now under consideration are, "According to the order of the Honourable Calcutta High Court, dated the 10.2.26." On reference to the order of the 10th February, 1926, which was made in the Ranees' suit against the Raja, it appears that permission was thereby granted to the Raja to grant a lease to the appellant on the terms mentioned in the petition, subject to the conditions therein stated. There is no suggestion that the terms of the draft patta were not in accordance with the terms mentioned in the petition. What, then, were the conditions? They have already been fully stated.

Nothing turns upon the first condition. The second amounts to an undertaking by the Raja to bring into Court the rents and royalties which he may receive under the lease.

The third refers to two undertakings by the Raja, viz., (a) that he will procure within a month the report therein mentioned, and (b) that he will furnish security within a fortnight of the date of the report to the satisfaction of the Court for the amounts so reported.

The Raja gave these undertakings. Upon the Raja giving these undertakings, the conditions imposed by the Court were fulfilled and the permission to grant a lease became complete and effective.

It so happened that the report was to the effect that no coal could possibly be extracted within three years, and consequently the High Court of Calcutta directed, on the 22nd March, 1926, that no security need then be given; but in order to protect the interests of the Ranees, and with the consent of the Raja, liberty to apply was given to the Ranees. The liberty to apply so granted to the Ranees did not in any way affect or invalidate the permission to grant a lease which the Court had given to the Raja on the 10th February, 1926, and which became effectual when he gave the undertakings required by the Court.

If the Raja had failed to carry out the undertakings given by him, or any of them, the Raja might have become liable to the sanction of the Court, but the validity of the lease, if granted by him with the permission of the Court, would not have been affected thereby.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court was correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Possession—Submergence of land—Effect of, on owner's possession.

Mere submergence of land will not put an end to its owner's possession.

Consolidated appeal No. 44 of 1927 from eight decrees of the High Court, Calcutta, dated the 4th December, 1924, which modified eight decrees of the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 17th August, 1918.

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—The respondents in this appeal are the putnidars of Mouzas Panuhat and Ekaihat. They filed a series of rent suits against the appellants as dar-putnidars holding lands under them in these mouzas. The appellants defended the suits, claiming abatements of rent on various grounds, and also filed cross-suits alleging that they had been deprived by the respondents of certain lands included in their dar-putni leases, and claiming on this account an entire suspension of rent, or in the alternative an abatement in respect thereof. The respondents denied that these lands and certain other lands in respect of which the appellants claimed an abatement on the ground of diluvion (all of which will be referred to for convenience as "the disputed lands") were included in the dar-putnis. The claim for suspension was negatived by both Courts in India, and has been abandoned before this Board, leaving the question of abatements of rent for decision here. All the suits were tried together before the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, who allowed abatements under various heads, including the claim to the disputed lands, which he held were included in the dar-putnis. On appeal the High Court disagreed with the Subordinate Judge as to the disputed lands and reduced the abatements accordingly.

The question as to these lands arises as follows. Mouzas Panuhat and Ekaihat lie in an area which is from time to time subjected to diluvion by the action of the Bagirathi (Ganges). Lands are constantly being washed away and constantly reforming on one side or the other of the river, and the boundaries at any given time are in consequence difficult of identification. The earliest maps available are those of the Thak survey of 1855, three sheets of which are involved in the ascertainment of the two mouzas. Sheet No. 80 delineates an area, the residue of which, excluding certain chakran plots, is shown as appertaining to Panuhat. The residuary area of Sheet No. 5 in the same way is shown as Ekaihat. There is no dispute that all the residuary lands so shown on these two sheets are included in the respective dar-putnis of the two mouzas. The dispute begins with the third sheet which is headed "Thakbust map No. 3 of the accreted chaur of the River Bagirathi . . . in district Burdwan, Police Station and munsif Catchary Katwa . . ." It shows two chaks or parcels, numbered 6 and 15, which belong to Panuhat, and two chaks Nos. 18 and 19 and a residuary chak which belong to Ekaihat. This appears to be the case of both parties, the dispute being whether the whole or only portions of the lands so shown on Map No. 3 were included in the dar-putni leases. The Subordinate Judge says that before him the putnidars (respondents) urged that chaks 6, 15, 18 and 19 were excluded from the dar-putnis, the dispute therefore covering all the lands on Map No. 3. Before this Board (and apparently also in the High Court), the respondents have confined their contentions to such portions of Nos. 15, 18 and 19 and the residuary chak as were in 1886, when the dar-putnis were created, either under the river as it then ran, or left or reformed on the far side of it from the lands shown on sheets 5 and 80, and it is only with these lands that their Lordships have to deal.

In 1886 the putnidars were the Land Mortgage Bank of India, Ltd., who in that year executed dar-putni pottahs of both mouzas in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the appellants, and in 1893 sold the putni rights in both mouzas to the predecessor-in-title of the respondents. The respondents admit that the disputed lands were included in the bank's putni and claim title to them under their transfer from the bank, but they deny that they were included in the preceding dar-putnis created by the bank on the ground that they were then either totally submerged or cut off by the river from the rest of the mouzas.

It is manifest that this question must depend primarily on the terms of pottahs and kabuliyats upon which the appellants hold, and it is really upon this point that the two Courts have differed, as will appear from the following quotation from the judgment of the High Court:—

"The decision of this question primarily depends upon a proper construction of the two leases. The Subordinate Judge in his judgment observes; 'Though the Kabuliyats do not contain the area of boundaries, they still contain the significant condition to the effect that the area of the lands of which dar-putni settlements were granted would be according to the Thak and Survey Map.' He then proceeds to find that certain Chaks in the Thak maps of different Mouzas contiguous to the two Mouzas in question were according to the statements on those Thak maps parts of the Mouzas Panuhat and Ekaihat as Chitta lands appertaining to those two mouzas and thereupon holds that those lands must be considered to have been demised under the putni leases. In my opinion, if his premises were correct, his conclusion would be also correct and unassailable. The whole difficulty is that there is no mention in the Kabuliyats that the areas of the lands would be according to the Thak maps."

The original pottahs and copies of the kabuliyats were produced at the trial. The pottahs, which were old and somewhat tattered documents, were returned to the appellants. This was no doubt in accordance with the usual practice, but their Lordships think that care should always be taken in such cases to retain certified copies on the record. The failure to take this precaution in the present case has added materially to the expense and prolongation of this unfortunate litigation. The copies of the kabuliyats, which were produced by the respondents, and which were no doubt translated for the use of the High Court, were, it is now admitted, defective. The Board have before them correct translations of the pottahs and of the registration copies of the kabuliyats. These have not been objected to by the respondents, and it is upon them that the decision must be come to, and their Lordships have no doubt that the Subordinate Judge was right in his interpretation of them. In each case, the dar-putni purports to be of the mouza as owned and held by the bank without any reservation. Ekaihat being said to include "the chur reformed after diluvion," and in each case it is provided that the dar-putnidar is to "maintain intact the area of the said mouza as ascertained in bighas in the Thak survey and the limits and boundaries as laid down in the survey map." It is admitted that "survey map" in this connection means the Thakbust maps above referred to.

It is, in their Lordships' opinion, clear from these provisions that the dar-putni leases of 1886 covered all that is shown upon the three maps as appertaining to Panuhat and Ekaihat, and this, as stated above, admittedly includes the disputed lands. In coming to this conclusion, their Lordships have the satisfaction of knowing, from the passage quoted above from the High Court's judgment, that if the learned Judges of that Court had had the proper materials before them they would have concurred with the judgment of the Subordinate Judge upon this question.

One other point only need be referred to in this connection. It is stated in the judgment of the High Court that the disputed lands "are not situated within the sub-division Cutwa (Katwa), or within the district of Burdwan," and that they "appear not to have been in the possession of the putnidar at the time when the leases were granted." Their Lordships do not think that in any case, these considerations could outweigh or that the learned Judges (if they had had the pottahs and true copies of the kabuliyats before them) would have held them to outweigh the clear terms of the documents. But it is at least possible that this misdescription—if it was in fact a misdescription in 1886, though this has not been established before their Lordships—was taken from the heading of Thak Map No. 3. With regard to the question of possession, their Lordships would be unable to hold that the mere submergence of the land would put an end to the bank's possession: see Kumar Basanta Roy v. Secretary of State for India.¹

It has been suggested on behalf of the appellants that the question of inclusion or non-inclusion of the disputed lands in the dar-putni leases is the only question outstanding between the parties, and that it would follow from its decision in the appellants' favour that the decrees of the Subordinate Judge in all the suits should be restored. It is true that this is the only point discussed in the judgment of the High Court, but their Lordships are not satisfied that the passage quoted above from that judgment necessarily carries the implication for which the appellants' counsel contends. Mr. De Gruyther, for the respondents, has raised other questions of considerable complexity which in his submission must be decided before a final determination of this appeal can be reached, but in view of the conclusion to which their Lordships have come upon this part of the case it is only necessary to refer to them shortly.

The pottahs and kabuliyats fix a consolidated rent for each mouza, which was arrived at after verification of the gross collections, and they provide for a triennial revision on which the dar-putnidars will be entitled to remission of rent of any area found to have been washed away, and will be bound to pay additional rent for any area found to have accreted. Upon these provisions it is argued that before any abatement can be allowed on account of diluvion it must be shown that the diluviated area either was part of the rent-producing area in 1886, or upon subsequent accretion has been assessed to additional rent, and this, it is said, has not been established in respect of any part of the disputed lands, the whole of which according to Mr. De Gruyther's contention were submerged in 1886.

The larger part at all events of the disputed lands, in respect of which the Subordinate Judge has allowed abatement of rent on account of dispossession is reformed land falling under the residuary chak of Mouza Ekaihat shown on Map No. 3. This chur land was taken possession of by third parties, known as the Banerjees, but whether by dispossession of the appellants or not is left in uncertainty. The respondents filed a suit against the Banerjees asserting their title to the chur as being included in their putni holding. They subsequently compromised the suit on the terms that the Banerjees were maintained in possession paying rent for the land to the respondents.

As between the appellants and the respondents their Lordships have held that these lands are included in the appellants' holding, and it is clear that they have been deprived of their use by the action of the respondents. But it is now contended on behalf of the respondents that the only remedy open to the appellants in respect of this deprivation is by a suit for recovery of possession, and that their claim for abatement of rent on this head is wholly misconceived.

It has not been made clear to their Lordships that these contentions were formulated before either of the Courts in India; they certainly are not dealt with by the High Court, or even referred to in their judgment, and it may well be that they are not now open to the respondents. They are, however, questions of some importance and possibly of considerable difficulty, and their Lordships think that they ought not to dispose of them without their having been submitted to the judgment of the High Court, and in this view Counsel on both sides concur. Their Lordships greatly regret that this further prolongation of an already protracted litigation should be necessary, but they feel that under the circumstances it is unavoidable. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the decrees of the High Court in all the suits should be set aside, and that the case should be remitted to the High Court for the consideration of the following questions if in the opinion of the High Court they are properly open to the respondents, viz.:—

(1) Whether it is established that the lands in respect of which abatement of rent was decreed by the Subordinate Judge were not taken into account in fixing the rents to be paid under the dar-puini leases, and if so whether no such abatement should be allowed; and

(2) Whether the appellants having been dispossessed of part of their holding abatement of rent can be awarded to them in respect thereof; and to pass such decrees in the said suits as may be just and proper.

The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal. The costs of the appeals in the High Court will be dealt with by that Court after the further hearing.

Tax—Direct and indirect taxes—Distinction—Test—Joint Stock Company—Shares of—Local situation of, for purposes of liability to or immunity from local taxation—Test.

When transfer of shares in a Joint Stock Company must be effected by a change in the register, the place where the register is required by law to be kept determines the local situation of the shares in order to decide as to liability to or immunity from local taxation. The crucial inquiry is—"Where could the shares be effectively dealt with."

A direct tax is one which is demanded from the very person who it is intended or desired should pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person in the expectation and the intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. The practical distinction between direct and indirect taxation formulated by John Stuart Mill is not a legal definition but a fair basis for testing the character of the tax in question.

Section 10 (2) of the Ontario Succession Duty Act provides: "No property in Ontario belonging to any deceased person at the time of his death or held in trust for him, . . . shall be transferred, paid or given to the person entitled thereto until the duty, if any, is paid or security given therefor. Any Corporation or person allowing such a property to be so transferred, paid or given contrary to this sub-section shall be liable for such duty."

Held, the section was a case of direct taxation and not one of indirect taxation.

The Statute makes no provision for reimbursement of the Company from any quarter, and no such provision can be implied.

7th November, 1929. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord
Merrivale.

LORD MERRIVALE.—The Erie Beach Company, Limited, appeals against the judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in an action upon an agreed statement of facts wherein the Company prayed a declaration that certain shares of its capital stock registered in the name of Frank V. E. Bardol, deceased, and other like shares allotable to him under a contract of his with the Company were not upon his death subject to duty under the Ontario Succession Duty Act; a declaration that the Company is not under section 10 of the Act liable to pay duty in respect of a transfer of such shares permitted by the Company before payment of succession duty thereon or security given for the payment of the same; and a declaration that section 10 of the Act in so far as it purports to impose the last-mentioned duty on the Company is ultra vires of the Province of Ontario.

Frank V. E. Bardol was at all material times domiciled in the State of New York in the United States of America. The plaintiff Company is incorporated in Ontario under the Ontario Companies Act, 1914, having as its chief object the establishment, ownership and conduct of an amusement park upon a site at the village of Fort Erie on the Canadian shore of Lake Erie, within easy reach of the City of Buffalo. Mr. Bardol was apparently the person chiefly concerned in the undertaking. In consideration of assignments of property made by him to the Company 9,000 preferred and 1,000 ordinary shares of $ 100 each therein, fully paid, were agreed to be issued to him; one hundred of the ordinary shares were issued, ninety-six to him and four to nominees of his. The remainder were to be issued when and as he should direct, and remained unissued at his death in April, 1925. Probate of the will of Frank V.E. Bardol was granted in 1925 in the proper court in the State of New York. The plaintiff company in 1926 issued certificates for the testator's previously unissued shares, but was notified on behalf of the Attorney-General of Ontario that it would be held liable under the terms of the Provincial statutes if it should permit any transfer before succession duty had been paid or secured. Thereupon the Company brought the present action. At first instance judgment was given in its favour, but upon appeal the Court of Appeal was unanimously of opinion against the several contentions raised by the plaintiffs. The Court held the shares to be subject to succession duty, the statute intra vires of the Provincial Legislature, and the contingent liability of the Company under section 10 to be well founded in law.

The Ontario Succession Duty Act (R.S.O., 1914, c. 24) by section 7 imposes succession duty on "all property situate in Ontario and any income thereon passing on the death of any person, whether at the time of death domiciled" in Ontario or elsewhere, and no question was raised but that this enactment so far as section 7 goes is within the legislative powers of the Province as a measure of direct taxation within the terms of the British North America Act, 1867, section 92. What was mainly in dispute upon the hearing at this Board was whether the shares in question were assets of the testator situate in Ontario. There was, however, the further question whether, in any view of the matter, section 10 of the statute, imposing liability not upon succession to shares, but upon the Corporation in which the shares exist, without the accrual of any successory interest in them to the Company, is or is not indirect taxation and so beyond the legislative powers of the Province. The material words of section 10 are these:—

"No property in Ontario belonging to any deceased person at the time of his death or held in trust for him, . . . whether such deceased person was at the time of his death domiciled in Ontario or elsewhere, shall be transferred . . . until the duty, if any, is paid, or security given therefor, and any Corporation or person allowing such property to be so transferred . . . contrary to this sub-section shall be liable for such duty."

The nature of the property in the shares in question depends in the main—if not wholly—upon the terms of the enactment under which the plaintiff Company subsists: the Ontario Companies Act, 2 Geo. V, c. 31. This statute of the Provincial legislature provides for the grant of incorporation by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, for purposes whereto the authority of the legislature extends, to be set forth in the petition for incorporation. One of the antecedent requirements for incorporation is a statement by the petitioner or petitioners of a place in Ontario where the head office of the Company is to be situate. The shares are by section 56 to be deemed to be personal estate transferable on the books of the Company. Under section 60 no transfer is valid or effectual save as exhibiting the rights of the parties thereto toward each other until entry thereof is made in the books of the Company. By-law 22 of the Company provides, further, that the shares shall be transferable only by the recording of the transfer on the stock-book of the Company at their head office or the office of their transfer agents, if any, and the Company's authorised form of certificate states that the shares are transferable only on the books of Corporation by the holder in person or his attorney upon surrender of the certificate properly endorsed. By section 118 of the statute the Company's register of shares and shareholders is required to be kept at its head office "within Ontario," and (by section 119) available for inspection. There is provision in the statute—see sections 52 and 119—for relaxation of the stringency of some relevant provisions by special Act, or letters patent, or by-laws, or leave of the Lieutenant-Governor, but no such special sanction exists in this case. By section 121 of the statute, jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court of Ontario to order rectification of the books, and to determine questions of title in relation to the shares.

On the face of the statutory conditions above enumerated, it must be seen that if the Corporation has a local habitation Ontario is its locality. For the appellants, however, facts are relied upon such as in the case of an individual might well have warranted an argument, that the person in question had chosen as his place of domicile the State of New York and had followed up his choice by action effectual to secure domicile there.

Frank V. E. Bardol and his associates in the organisation of the Company and the conduct of its affairs appear to have been all of them people of the State of New York. Every meeting of the Company, whether of shareholders or of directors, took place in the City of Buffalo; the management of the Company's business was conducted from its office in Buffalo; its books, records and documents were kept there; the common shares actually issued were issued there, and such transfers as took place were made and recorded there.

The appellants contended that shares in a joint stock company have no local situation, that, like debts and other choses in action and rights arising ex contractu, they constitute property of which the value—applying the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam—is taxable at the place of domicile of the deceased possessor. This view was adopted by Logie, J., at the trial of the action.

A series of judicial decisions extending from *Attorney-General v. Higgins*¹, in the Court of Exchequer in 1857, to *Brassard v. Smith*², before this Board in 1925, have ascertained beyond possible doubt the test which must be applied to determine the local situation of the shares of a joint stock company when that fact has to be determined in order to decide as to liability to or immunity from local taxation. *Cotton v. Rex*³ and *Burland v. Rex*⁴, which were much discussed in the argument here, show the working of the rule, but do not qualify it as previously laid down.

In *Attorney-General v. Higgins*¹, as in *Brassard v. Smith*², duty upon shares was in question. In Attorney-General v.

*Higgins*¹ Baron Martin held that when transfer of shares in a Company must be effected by a change in the register, the place where the register is required by law to be kept determines the locality of the shares. Lord Dunedin, in delivering the judgment of this Board in Brassard v. Smith,² epitomised the crucial inquiry in a sentence—"Where could the shares be effectually dealt with." The circumstances relied upon by the appellants which show the predilection of the members of the plaintiff Company for transacting its business in Buffalo; so far as they might; have, in their Lordships' opinion, no material weight. The shares in question can be effectually dealt with in Ontario only. They are, therefore, property situate in Ontario and subject to succession duty there.

The remaining question in the case is whether the liability purported to be created by section 10 (2) of the statute in question is of such a nature as to render the sub-section null as being made without authority; that is to say, as exceeding the power of the Provincial Legislature under the British North America Act, 1867, section 92, to make laws in relation to direct taxation within the Province. On behalf of the appellants it was contended that the statute in so far as it purports to create a liability in the plaintiff Company, does not in truth impose succession duty on the Company, but lays a tax upon persons not concerned in the succession in question in the expectation and with the intention that they shall indemnify themselves at the expense of those actually interested in the succession. "A direct tax," it was said on undoubted authority, "is one which is demanded from the very person who it is intended or desired should pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person in the expectation and the intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another." The practical distinction between direct and indirect taxation formulated by John Stuart Mill in his "Political Economy" is, as was pointed out in Attorney-General of British Columbia v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company,³ "not a legal definition," but "a fair basis for testing the character of the tax in question." The question to be answered in the present case is not much helped by considering whether the impost effected by section 10 (2) resembles more nearly stamp duties such as were held in Attorney-General for Quebec v. Reed,⁴ to be a form of indirect taxation, or duties on licences, which in Bank of Toronto v. Lambe,⁵ were found to be direct taxes, or indeed by examination of various other cases to which their Lordships were referred. It is in truth this—Is the intention of section 10 (2) that when a Corporation allows property of a deceased person to be transferred without provision previously made for succession duty, the Corporation shall incur a liability beginning and ending with itself and answerable so far as legal liability goes out of its Corporate funds alone, or does the section intend that the Corporation shall pay the succession duty on behalf of the persons concerned, and by so doing become entitled to recover from such persons the amount paid?

The answer to the question so stated must be determined by the terms of the statute. Sub-section 10 (2), it will be seen, does two things. It enacts a prohibition in the words following:

“No property in Ontario belonging to any deceased person at the time of his death or held in trust for him, whether such deceased person was at the time of his death domiciled in Ontario or elsewhere, shall be transferred, paid or given to the person entitled thereto until the duty, if any, is paid or security given therefor.”

Next it proceeds to provide that—

“Any Corporation or person allowing such property to be so transferred, paid or given contrary to this sub-section shall be liable for such duty.”

The statute makes no provision for reimbursement of the Company from any quarter, and no such provision can be implied. Breach of a statutory prohibition is prima facie a misdemeanour. It could no doubt be argued on the part of a person convicted of the misdemeanour of a wilful breach of the prohibition here under consideration that his guilt involved him only in the liability created by the second enactment in the sub-section, and if that question arises it will be determined. Meantime, it is sufficient to say, as is said in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the Court of Appeal, “The sub-section penalises a Company which permits any property of a deceased person to be transferred until the duty payable in respect thereof is paid or secured, and the Company is not entitled to recover the penalty from the beneficiary.”

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The costs here and below will be borne by the appellants.

 The Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Ss. 22 (4), 23 (4)—Account books of foreign business—Right to call for—Failure to produce—Onus of proving disability.

The Income-tax Officer is entitled to require the assessee to produce the books of his foreign business. Where an Income-tax Officer calls upon an assessee to produce account books which ordinarily would be in his possession and control, the assessee has got to show that he is incapable of producing them. If they would not ordinarily be in his possession and control, the onus would then lie on the Officer to show the assessee could produce them but has failed to do so.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, is as follows:—

In accordance with the High Court's order quoted above I have the honour to refer the following case for the opinion of the Hon'ble the Judges of the High Court under section 66 (3).

2. The petitioner is a resident of Kondagai within the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Negapatam. He owns lands and house properties in British India and is a partner owning a 4/5th share in a firm carrying on business in cloth and rubber in Penang in the Federated Malay States.

3. The deed of partnership under which this business is carried on reserves to each partner the right of free access to the accounts and the right to inspect and copy them.

4. For the assessment of the year 1928-29 the petitioner was called on to make a return of his income in the prescribed form. He returned the form sent to him without entering any figures in it. But on the form was written in Tamil: "No interest, income or business." The Income-tax Officer called on the petitioner by a notice under sections 22 (4) and 23 (2) to adduce evidence in support of his return and to produce certain accounts and documents. In response to this notice the petitioner's authorised agent appeared but did not produce any evidence. The Income-tax Officer had reason to believe that the petitioner had been receiving remittances from his business abroad. He, therefore, required him again by a notice issued under section 22 (4) of the Income-tax Act to produce the accounts relating to the cloth business at Penang and the rubber estates at Perlis in the Federated Malay States for the years 1925-26 to 1927-28. This notice was accompanied by a covering letter, dated 3rd September, 1928, of which I enclose a copy—Exhibit A. The petitioner did not produce the accounts but stated that the business in the Federated Malay States was a partnership concern and that as the account books were the property of the partnership he was unable to produce them. As the petitioner had not produced any of the accounts specified in the notice, the Income-tax Officer held that he had failed to comply with the notice under section 22 (4) and accordingly made an assessment on the petitioner under section 23 (4) on an income of Rs. 1,00,133 as under:

	Rs.
Property	133
Foreign profits received in British India ..	1,00,000
Total ..	1,00,133

5. The petitioner applied to the Income-tax Officer under section 27 for a re-opening of the assessment but the Income-tax Officer declined to re-open the assessment as he was not satisfied that the petitioner had been prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the notice under section 22 (4). A copy of the order giving reasons for this decision is enclosed—Exhibit B.

6. The petitioner appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against the Income-tax Officer's order. Though the question before the Assistant Commissioner was merely whether the petitioner had or had not been prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the notice issued to him by the Income-tax Officer for the production of the foreign accounts, he allowed the petitioner even at that stage a further opportunity of producing evidence. He suggested that copies should be made from the day books in Penang relating to the year 1927-28, and the petitioner gave a written undertaking, dated 18th December, 1928, to do so. A copy of this is enclosed—Exhibit C. On March 5, 1929, he produced an extract of his personal ledger taken from the books of the Penang firm and along with this presented a petition, a copy of which is enclosed, Exhibit D. The extract showed that he had received Rs. 5,000 in Madras in return for a cheque drawn upon his Penang business. In the absence of fuller evidence the Assistant Commissioner was not prepared to believe that this was the only remittance. As even at this stage the petitioner had not produced either the accounts or copies of them (apart from the extract above mentioned) the Assistant Commissioner dismissed the appeal.

7. The petitioner then applied to my predecessor for a reference to the High Court on two alleged questions of law said to arise out of the Assistant Commissioner's order. My predecessor declined to make a reference.

8. On the petitioner's application to the High Court, the Court has now ordered me to refer the following two questions for its opinion and I accordingly refer them.

Question (1).—"Whether on the facts found in this case it is open to the Income-tax authorities to require the petitioner, who is assessed under section 23 (4), to produce all the original accounts of the firm carrying on business outside British India."

Question (2).—"Whether it is open to the authorities to require copies of the whole accounts to be produced."

9. My opinion on these questions is as follows:—

Question (1).—The provision of law empowering the Income-tax Officer to require the production of accounts is section 22 (4). The power is conferred subject to two restrictions: (i) that the person required to produce the accounts must be a person upon whom a notice under section 22 (2) has been served; and (ii) that accounts relating to a period more than 3 years prior to the previous year may not be called for. Subject to these restrictions an Income-tax Officer may require the production of any accounts. The profits of a foreign business are liable to tax if remitted—section 4 (2)—and the accounts of such a business are evidence both of the amount of the profits and of the fact of remittance. I consider, therefore, that it was open to the Income-tax Officer to call for the foreign accounts in this case.

The fact that the accounts were in this instance those of a partnership does not appear to alter the legal position. The petitioner was the dominant partner with a 4½th share in the firm. The accounts, if not in his physical possession, were certainly under his control. He had the right to inspect and copy them. His statement that in the matter of their production he was overruled by his partner was rightly disbelieved, and even if true would not justify his failure to comply with the notice.

Question (2).—The formal ground on which assessment was made under section 23 (4) in this case was the petitioner's failure to respond to a notice calling for the original accounts. It was made clear that other evidence, such as day-book extracts or copies, if in existence, would be considered, but nothing turns on that. Petitioner was not assessed under section 23 (4) for failure to produce "copies of the whole accounts," and I submit, therefore, that this question is one which on the facts of the case does not arise. But it is clear that copies of the accounts, if in existence, are documents which can be called for under section 22 (4), which does not relate to accounts alone.

T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, N. Muthuswami Aiyar and M. Subbaroya Aiyar for assessee.

M. Patanjali Sastri for Commissioner of Income-tax.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question referred to us by the Commissioner of Income-tax is as follows:—

“Whether on the facts found in this case it is open to the Income-tax authorities to require the petitioner, who is assessed under section 23 (4), to produce all the original accounts of the firm carrying on business outside British India.”

The facts of the case are that the assessee, who resides in British India, carries on business in Penang in partnership with another who is in Penang and that in respect of the partnership the assessee is entitled to a 4|5th share and the other partner in Penang to 1|5th share. The Income-tax Officer called upon the assessee to produce all his account books, day books, ledgers, etc., of the Penang business. The assessee did not comply with the request. Before the Income-tax Officer he stated his inability to do so and he produced before him his 1|5th sharer who stated that he was unwilling that the assessee should produce the Penang account books. It is quite clear on reading the order of the Income-tax Officer and it is definitely so stated in the order of the Commissioner of Income-tax that this story was not believed by the Income-tax Officer and certainly, having regard to the fact that in this partnership he is a 4|5th sharer, it does not seem to us to be at all likely that the 1|5th sharer would have refused to produce the Penang account books if his partner had so requested. The whole story sounds a most improbable one and we think that the Commissioner of Income-tax has taken up the correct position in disbelieving the story.

The question to be considered here is, first of all, whether, when a foreign business is carried on by an assessee in British India, the Income-tax Officer is entitled to require the assessee to produce the books of his foreign business. On this point we are clearly of the opinion that the Income-tax Officer is entitled to do so.

The next point that arises is, what account books is he entitled to call upon the assessee to produce? The answer to this question obviously must be such account books as are necessary to enable the Income-tax Officer here either to check the return already made by the assessee or himself to form an estimate of the income of the assessee. In this case it is conceded by the assessee that the Penang books were relevant. Obviously they were because one of the things the Income-tax Officer has to consider was whether the remittances from Penang to British India came out of capital or whether they came out of profits made in the Penang business. If there were profits of an amount sufficient to enable the remittances to be made to British India, then the inference is that the remittances came out of profits. So the first thing the Income-tax Officer had to consider was whether any profits and, if so, to what amount had been made in Penang. Clearly for the purpose of deciding that question he had to have inspection of the Penang account books and by Penang account books we mean not only the ledger but also the cash and the day books.

The other question arising is whether, if the assessee does not produce the account books, the Income-tax Officer is entitled under all circumstances to make the assessment under section 23 (4) of the Indian Income-tax Act. We think that it has got to be shown that the assessee could comply with the order for the production of the account books. It clearly would not be right to say that the Income-tax Officer is entitled to call upon a person to produce account books which would not ordinarily be in the possession and control of that person. We think that the right view to take of the case is that where an Income-tax Officer calls upon an assessee to produce account books which ordinarily would be in his possession and control, then the assessee has got to show that he is incapable of producing them. Of course, if the Income-tax Officer calls upon the assessee to produce account books which would not ordinarily be in his possession and control, then the onus would lie upon the Income-tax Officer of showing that the assessee could produce them but has failed to do so. In this case, for the reasons we have already stated, it is quite clear that the books were under the control of the assessee, that he could have produced them and that he failed to comply with the notice issued to him to produce them. Under these circumstances the Income-tax Officer was quite entitled to make the assessment under section 23 (4) of the Indian Income-tax Act. The question referred to us is answered accordingly. The assessee will pay Rs. 250 costs to the Commissioner of Income-tax.

A decree-holder attached a decree which the judgment-debtor got against another person whose appeal against that decree was pending in the High Court, and realised the decree amount. On a reversal by the Appellate Court of the original decree that was attached, the appellant sought relief by way of restitution proceedings against the attachment decree-holder.

Code, he must also be liable, similarly, as the original decree-holder to the burdens imposed upon such decree-holder by the Code when the decree in execution, of which proceedings were taken, is subsequently reversed on

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question relating to the construction of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. In O.S. No. 1 of 1924 on the file of the District Court of South
Arcot, Periathambi Dorai obtained a decree against Subbaroya Chetty for money. Subbaroya Chetty had preferred an appeal to the High Court against that decree. Pending appeal the appellant before us, Anganna Reddi, who had obtained a decree in O.S. No. 11 of 1923 on the file of the Salem Court against Periathambi Dorai, had his decree transferred to the South
Arcot Court and he attached the decree which Periathambi Dorai had obtained against Subbaroya Chetty in O.S. No. 1 of 1924.
In execution of the attached decree the appellant, namely, the decree-holder in O.S. No. 11 of 1923, was able to realise a sum

Anganna
Reddi
v.
Subbaroya

of Rs. 3,000. The result of Subbaroya Chetty's appeal to the High Court against the decree in O.S. No. 1 of 1924 was that the High Court reversed the judgment of the Trial Court and remanded the suit for fresh disposal. The result of the fresh disposal by the Trial Court was that Periathambi Dorai's suit was dismissed. It is said that an appeal is pending in this Court against that decree dismissing the suit. In the meanwhile Subbaroya Chetty, the judgment-debtor in O.S. No. 1 of 1924, applied to the South Arcot Court for restitution against Anganna Reddi, the decree-holder in O.S. No. 11 of 1923, who as attaching decree-holder of the decree in O.S. No. 11 of 1923 had realised Rs. 3,000 from the defendant, Subbaroya Chetty. He alleged that the decree in O.S. No. 1 of 1924 having been ultimately reversed and as things stand at present, he is entitled to have restitution under section 144 of the Code. The plea of Anganna Reddi was that the rights if any which Subbaroya Chetty had were only against Periathambi Dorai and not against Anganna Reddi. That contention of Anganna Reddi having been overruled by the Lower Court, the Lower Court allowed execution by way of restitution to proceed against Anganna Reddi in respect of Rs. 3,000 drawn by him with interest. It is against that decision that Anganna Reddi has preferred the present miscellaneous-appeal.

It was argued on behalf of the appellant by his learned Advocate that the judgment-debtor Subbaroya Chetty was not entitled to any relief as against him, and that Subbaroya Chetty's relief should be sought by proceeding against Periathambi Dorai. He argued that Anganna was not the decree-holder on O.S. No. 1 of 1924 nor an assignee of the decree-holder and consequently no restitution proceedings should be started as against him. In answer to that contention, it was urged on behalf of the respondent that section 144 read with Order 21, Rule 53 (3) and Order 22, Rule 10 and also section 146 of the Code entitled Subbaroya Chetty to relief against the appellant. Now Order 21, Rule 53 (3) indicates that "The holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub-rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute such attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder thereof;"

so that, this section specifically says that such attaching decree-holder shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and as such entitled to execute such attached decree. Turning now to Order 22, Rule 10 which is the section prescribing the procedure to be followed in cases of assignment before final order in suits, clause 2 of Order 22, Rule 10 provides as follows:—

“The attachment of a decree pending an appeal therefrom shall be deemed to be an interest entitling the person who procured such attachment to the benefit of sub-rule (1).”

Reading these two provisions of law together, it is, we think, reasonably clear that the attaching decree-holder in these circumstances is the representative of the original decree-holder for purposes of execution. Restitution proceedings are essentially proceedings in execution. If as representative of the original decree-holder, an attaching decree-holder is entitled to the benefit of execution provided for by the Code, he must also be liable, similarly, as the original decree-holder to the burdens imposed upon such decree-holder by the Code when the decree in execution of which proceedings were taken is subsequently reversed on appeal. Section 146 is also relevant in this connection. That section indicates that

“Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him.”

Subbaroya Chetty would undoubtedly be entitled to take out proceedings under section 144 against Periathambi Dorai, the original decree-holder. Under section 146, as Anganna Reddi is the representative of Periathambi Dorai for purposes of execution, Subbaroya Chetty is entitled to take similar proceedings against Anganna Reddi. It was argued that there is a difference between the attachment of a decree and an assignment of a decree. No doubt it is so. An assignment of a decree will vest in the assignee all the rights of the original decree-holder, whereas in the case of an attaching decree-holder the section only makes him the representative of the original decree-holder to the extent necessary for the purpose of satisfying his decree. It is possible that the original decree which was attached was for a sum much larger than the amount of the decree for which that decree was attached. In the case of an assignment of a decree, this Court has laid down in *Govindappa v. Hanumanthappa*¹ that an assignee decree-holder would be liable to be proceeded against under section 144 in case the original decree was reversed in appeal even though the assignee decree-holder was not a party to the final decree which reversed the Lower Court's decree. The learned Judges observed that it was open to the assignee decree-holder to make himself a party to the appeal, and if he trusted the original decree-holder to do the needful, he could not subsequently be heard to say that he was prejudiced by not himself being a party on record in the appeal. Similarly, reading Order 21, Rule 53 with Order 22, Rule 10 it is reasonably clear that it was open to the attaching decree-holder to make himself a party to the appeal and, not having made himself a party, he cannot be heard to complain that the original decree-holder on record did not sufficiently represent him. The cases quoted by the appellant, namely, *Kedar Nath v. Jai Berhma*² and Jai Berhma v. Kedar Nath Marwari,³ as also *Jatindra v. Sarat*⁴ are not cases where a person standing in the position of a decree-holder took coercive steps to have the properties of the judgment-debtor brought to sale by processes in execution. These were cases where money decree-holders finding moneys belonging to their judgment-debtor in Court proceeded to get at the same under section 73 of the Code. The Courts held, that in the circumstances, they could not be said to be decree-holders or representatives of decree-holders in the sense that the judgment-debtor would be entitled to proceed against them in case the orders were subsequently reversed. On the other hand in *Raja Rao v. Ananthanarayanan Chetty*⁵ the Officiating Chief Justice remarks as follows:—

“The decree-holder in that case was the person responsible for wrongfully bringing the properties to sale. In the present case refund is asked for from persons who had nothing to do with causing the auction sale, but merely profited by it, in the way of rateable distribution under the orders of the Court. This distinction seems to me to be of considerable importance in connection with the exercise of extraordinary powers which are of a purely equitable and discretionary nature.”

Courts, in exercising jurisdiction under section 144, do so by virtue of the equitable jurisdiction to set right the injustice caused by the Lower Courts passing erroneous decrees and by allowing proceedings to be taken thereunder. In such cases it has been pointed out that it is the duty of the Court as far as possible to restore parties to the position in which they would have been had not the erroneous orders been passed. No doubt in its anxiety to work out justice, a Court should not in the exercise of powers under section 144 work out injustice in particular cases. Having regard to the facts in the present case we are not in a position to say that the Lower Court was not entitled to pass orders directing the appellant to restore the benefit that he received by executing the decree in O.S. No. 1 of 1924.

2. (1916) 37 I.C. 863.

4. (1918) 29 C.L.J. 360.
5. (1921) 42 M.L.J. 308 at 311.

The order passed by the Lower Court is accordingly right, and we dismiss the appeal with costs. The respondent will, however, be directed not to draw the money from the Lower Court for a period of one month from this date. The stay petition is dismissed.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE KRISHNAN PANDALAI.

Thadi Subbi Reddi

.. 1st Accused*.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 as amended, S. 195 (1) (c)—Court—Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies—Offence under S. 471, Penal Code—Use of forged document prior to proceedings before Court—Complaint by that Court if necessary—Practice—Direct decision of High Court—Duty of Subordinate Court to take guidance therefrom.

Subbi Reddi,
In re.

The Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies, to whom a dispute touching a debt due to a society by a member is referred, is a Court within the meaning of S. 195, Criminal Procedure Code.

Even when the use as genuine of a forged document under S. 471, Indian Penal Code, is prior to the proceedings before the Court, the complaint of the Court before which that document was filed or used is necessary under S. 195 (1) (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Re Parameswaran Nambudri, (1915) I.L.R. 39 Mad. 677, followed.

When there are decisions of the Madras High Court bearing on the point involved in a case, it is the duty of a Subordinate Court to be guided by them rather than by the decisions of other High Courts.

Letter of the Assistant Sessions Judge of East Godavari at Rajahmundry, Dis. No. 91, dated 10th January, 1930, requesting that for the reasons stated, the High Court will be pleased to quash the commitment against Thadi Subbi Reddi, the 1st accused in regard to an offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, made by the Sub-Magistrate of Kothapeta to the Sessions Court of East Godavari at Rajahmundry in his committal order, dated 19th November, 1929, in P.R.C. No. 6 of 1929 on his file.

D. Suryaprakasa Rao for 1st accused.

P. Govinda Menon for The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a reference under section 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Assistant Sessions Judge of East

Subbi Reddi,
In re.

Godavari requesting this Court to quash the committal under section 213 to that Court of the respondent Thadi Subbi Reddi.

The respondent was the President of a Co-operative Society. Another person who was committed along with him to the Lower Court was the secretary of the same society. They and three other people were charged with having got up a bond for Rs. 750 purporting to be executed by one Karri Venkatareddi in favour of the Society, the respondent Subbi Reddi signing it as a surety. The respondent and the secretary are alleged to have, after putting this upon the record of the co-operative society, handed it over to their successors when they left the office on the 2nd of November, 1928. When the new President filed a suit on the bond before the Assistant Registrar against Karri Venkatareddi, the alleged maker, and the respondent as surety, Karri Venkatareddi brought a criminal complaint of forgery against the respondent, the secretary, and three others. The respondent and the secretary were also charged with having used the bond knowing it to be a forgery by handing it over to their successors in office. The Magistrate committed the five accused. In the Sessions Court the charge of forgery was ordered to be dealt with separately from the charge of using a forged document as genuine, because the latter charge only affected the respondent and the secretary, whereas the former affected all the five accused persons. But in the Sessions Court it was discovered that the bond having been filed before the Assistant Registrar for the purpose of the suit, the case of forgery against the respondent and of using the document as a genuine document against the respondent could not proceed for want of the necessary complaint under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. As the trial on the forgery section had begun the learned Sessions Judge discharged the respondent in that case relying upon certain decisions which show that that is the proper course when the defect is discovered after the trial has begun. But the trial under section 471 against the respondent not having actually commenced, he has reported the matter to this Court for the committal being quashed.

The two questions which arise are: (1) Whether the Assistant Registrar before whom the Co-operative Society has filed its suits or its claim for enforcing the bond is a Court within the meaning of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and, (2) if so, whether the fact of the alleged use of the document having been before the institution of that suit, section 195 (c) applies to the case at all.

On the first question, clause (2) of section 195 as amended in 1923 states that in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) of the same section the term "Court" includes a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court, etc. It has been held that the term "Court" in this section has a wider meaning than the expression "Court of Justice" in the Penal Code and includes a tribunal entitled to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence bearing thereon in order to enable it to arrive at a determination upon the question. Vide Nanda Lal Ganguli v. Khetra Mohan Ghose.¹ According to Rule 14 of the Rules made by the Local Government in pursuance of section 43 (1) of the Co-operative Societies Act, the Registrar to whom a dispute touching a debt due to a society by a member is referred has power to administer oaths, to require the attendance of all parties concerned and of witnesses and to require the production of all books and documents relating to the matter in dispute. By the same rule the Registrar is required to give a decision in writing and when it is given the decision may be enforced on application to the Civil Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the decision as if it were a decree of Court. The Registrar acting under this Rule No. 14 falls clearly within the description of "Court" given in the decision cited and I, therefore, hold that the Assistant Registrar before whom the suit was filed was a Court.

On the second question, the learned Sessions Judge has referred to In re Bhanu Vyankatesh,² *Khairati Ram v. Malawi Ram*³ and *Kanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan Das*⁴ to show that, even where the use as genuine of a forged document under section 471 is prior to the proceedings before the Court, the complaint of the Court before which that document was filed or used is necessary under section 195. But there is a decision of our own Court to the same effect; and where there are decisions of this Court it is the duty of Subordinate Courts to be guided by them rather than by the decisions of other High Courts. In In re Parameswaram Nambudri,⁵ with respect to a case which fell under section 195 (1) (b), it was held that "it (clause b) aims at doing so by providing that where, prior to the institution of the criminal prosecution, a properly constituted judicial tribunal has placed itself in a position to determine whether the facts constituting the offence really exist, the Criminal Court should decline cognizance unless that tribunal has, in effect, certified that in its opinion the complaint is one worthy of investigation." Cases under section 195 (1) (c) are as regards this matter on exactly the same footing as those which fall under clause (b). If anything, the matter has been put beyond controversy by the wording of clause (c) as amended which is "when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court," etc. The word "alleged" shows that the use complained of may be before the proceedings in Court commenced. It follows that a complaint by the Assistant Registrar was in this case necessary before any Court could take cognizance of the charge under section 471 against the respondent. The whole of the proceedings, therefore, before the Magistrate were incompetent and the commitment by him must, therefore, be and hereby is quashed.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 21, R. 93—Court-sale of two properties in single lot—Title of judgment-debtor to one item subsequently found against—Application by purchaser for proportionate refund of price paid—Maintainability.

O. 21, R. 93, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable only to cases of entire absence of any interest in the judgment-debtor in respect of the property sold and not to cases where the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property, however small that may be.

Where an auction-purchaser purchased two items of properties which were sold in one lot, and it was subsequently found that the judgment-debtor had no title to one of the items included in the lot,

Held, that the auction-purchaser was not entitled to apply for a proportionate refund of the price paid by him.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The applicant before us was the purchaser in Court auction of some immoveable properties sold in execution of a money decree. He purchased in one lot two items of properties. In the sale proclamation it was mentioned that there was already a partition in the family of the judgment-debtor. In execution of the sale certificate the auction-purchaser was put into possession of both the items of properties included in the lot. Subsequently at the instance of the other defendants in the case, who were exonerated from liability under the decree, one of the items was found not to be the property of the judgment-debtor but to be the property of the other defendants. The Court accordingly directed that the auction-purchaser should deliver back to defendants 3 and 4 that item of property which was found to be their property. The auction purchaser filed, under Order 21, Rule 93, Civil Procedure Code, an application in the District Munsif's Court praying that he may be allowed a proportionate refund of the price paid by him. Both the Lower Courts have dismissed his application, and he has preferred the present petition.

The present is a case where the auction-purchaser purchased certain properties which were sold in one lot. It is found that the judgment-debtor had title to some of the properties included in the lot. It is also found that the judgment-debtor had no title in respect of some of the properties included in the lot. In these circumstances, the question was argued whether the auction-purchaser is entitled either to have the sale set aside or to have a refund of proportionate amount of the purchase-money paid by him into Court. The prayer of the auction-purchaser in the application that he filed before the District Munsif was to have a proportionate refund of the price paid by him. We are of opinion that he is not entitled to such relief. It is settled law that in Court sales there is no warranty of title in respect of the properties sold. It is only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the properties included in the lot that pass to the auction-purchaser. Order 21, Rule 93 would not apply to cases where a judgment-debtor has some interest in the property, however small the same may be. It would apply only to cases of entire absence of any interest in the judgment-debtor in respect of the properties sold. That position, we take it, is clearly established. Having regard to the facts of the present case, namely, that the auction-purchaser does not complain of want of title in respect of some of the properties included in the lot—in fact he is in undisputed possession of some of the properties purchased by him—we think that the application for proportionate refund is unsustainable. In this view we confirm the orders of the Lower Courts and dismiss the revision petition with costs.

Mortgage by conditional sale—Executed prior to 1858—Term for redemption extending later—Law governing.

A deed of usufructuary mortgage, executed in 1844 and containing a condition for defeasance if not redeemed within 30 years, is governed by the ruling in Thumbusawmy's case, (1875) L.R. 2 I.A. 241; I.L.R. 1 M. 1 (P.C.). The principle of giving effect to the intention of the parties evidenced by the contract is applicable to all mortgages alike, executed prior to 1858.

The Court delivered the following

Maila Rai
v.
Derappa.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of Phillips, J., reversing the decree of both the Lower Courts and dismissing the suit to redeem.

The facts are shortly these. A deed of mortgage executed in 1844 was sought to be redeemed. The deed which is said to be a usufructuary mortgage deed, dated the 11th of December, 1844, begins by stating that the mortgagor on account of his necessity usufructually mortgaged to the mortgagee for 248 varahas the property described in the document. The material portion is as follows:—

“Thus in total I received from you 248 varahas as detailed above and delivered this day to your possession the entire land, bagayat house, cow-pen and also out-house bearing the said beriz and I have also given to you one decision obtained by me in respect of the said land and also one yadast executed by Shama Rao, Amin of Uppinangadi Taluk Munsiff's Court, for having delivered the said land to me. In future you alone shall pay the sirkar tirva to Government and enjoy the said land, bagayat house, cow-pen and out-house lying within the boundaries mentioned in the decision. You shall have no reason to claim interest for the amount and I shall have no reason to claim any profits out of the said land. I shall pay the consideration amount of 248 varahas to you in one lump sum after a period of twenty-five years and within a period of thirty years from this day and get back from you the said land, bagayat house, cow-pen and out-house, and also the two documents, viz., decision and yadast given to you. If I fail to pay the amount and get back the land, etc., within the period mentioned above, you shall get the warg of the said land entered in your name, plant therein trees, etc., effect improvements therein and shall enjoy the same from generation to generation. I and my descendants shall have no interest therein. To this effect is the usufructuary mortgage deed of land executed out of my free will.”

The word in the original is “Moulya” or price. This mortgage was not redeemed within the period specified and a suit was filed in 1920 for redemption. Phillips, J., held that the case came within the ruling *Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen*¹, which was followed in *Bapirazu v. Kamarazu*² and Ramasami Sastrigal v. Samiyappanaykan.³ The learned Judge observes:

“It seems to be immaterial whether the document purports to be a sale with a condition of re-sale or whether it purports to be a mortgage with a condition that on failure to pay the mortgage money the property shall pass to the mortgagee. If the document was executed prior to 1858 when first the above principle of law began to be modified, effect must be given to the intention of the parties.”

As regards the second contention that the terms of the document should have been completed before 1858, the learned

Judge following *Kanthu v. Dasa Upadhya*⁴ held that that made no difference as regards the construction of the terms.

It is argued before us by the learned Advocate-General that the principle of giving effect to the intention of the parties evidenced by the contract in cases like the present should be confined to cases of mortgage by conditional sale, pure and simple, and as regards other mortgages this principle has no application. It is also contended that in cases where the period fixed in the deed would carry us later than 1858 the principle in *Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen*¹ should not be applied and the ordinary rule as regards redemption must be applied. As regards the first point, we do not see any reason for confining the principle to mortgages by conditional sale, pure and simple, which have been defined later on by the section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Advocate-General's contention is, that, unless the document is ostensibly a sale coupled with a condition for defeasance you ought not to apply the ruling in Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen.¹ So far as we can see, the decision in *Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken*⁵ was on a document which was not worded as a sale with a condition for defeasance. On the contrary it begins like a mortgage and contains a clause converting the mortgage into a sale if not redeemed. The document is set out at p. 561. The report is as follows:—

"A mortgage bond had been executed by the original parties, stipulating that the mortgagee should enjoy the lands in lieu of interest, and that if the principal should be paid 'in the season of harvest of any year,' the mortgagee should receive it and give up the lands, of which possession was then given to the mortgagee; and it was also alleged that this mortgage debt had been liquidated from the usufruct of the lands."

That was not a case of a document which began with sale and ended with power to redeem. Similarly in *Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen*¹ also we find that the document begins as a mortgage, refers to the principal payments by instalments and enjoyment and then winds up by saying:

"If, by the 30th of Panguni of the said Pramadhi, the money be not paid up in full, and balance still remain due, you yourself shall take hold and enjoy such of the lands (herein) as you may like and as may be equivalent to the balance due as if under the terms of a deed of absolute sale."

We can find very little in *Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken*⁵ or *Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen*¹ to hold that the Privy Council confined their observations to cases where the document was in the form of a sale with a condition for redemption. If their Lordships of the Privy Council as contended for by the appellants' advocate decided that the rule as to giving effect to the intention of the parties applied only in cases of mortgage where there was a sale with a covenant to reconvey on the mortgage money being paid, they would have stated the rule especially as the mortgage before them was not such a document. Their judgment applies equally to mortgages with only a clause for reconveyance. In *Bapirazu v. Kamarasu*² it was decided that as regards mortgages executed before 1858 the intention of the parties to the instrument must be given effect to. The Full Bench decision in *Ramasami Sasirigal v. Samiyappanaykan*³ deals fully with the various kinds of mortgages and it is clear from the judgment of Sir Charles Turner, C.J., that he considered the question as regards the applicability of the ruling in *Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken*⁵ to cases where the document is in the usual form of usufructuary mortgage containing a condition that it should become an absolute sale in a particular event. At page 183 the learned Chief Justice observes:

"The various forms of mortgage known to the Hindu Law are mentioned in Colebrooke's Digest, Edition of 1801, Vol. I, pp. 81, 82."

Among these is the mortgage with a condition that, in the event of default being made in the payment of principal on or before a date named, the property mortgaged shall pass to the mortgagee as an absolute purchaser.

He then refers to various forms of mortgage. According to him, the decision in *Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken*⁵ would apply to mortgages prior to 1858. Under these circumstances we think there is no reason to confine the application of the rule to documents which are in form mortgages by conditional sale. The test in these cases is what was the intention of the parties? We must presume that in the case of a mortgage prior to 1858 the intention of the parties according to the terms of the contract should be enforced and the Court should give effect to the intention. The second contention is that as the terms of sale became absolute and the property became absolute property of the mortgagee subsequent to 1858, the ordinary principle of redemption should be applied. Reliance is placed upon a decision of Muthuswami Aiyar and Parker, JJ., in S.A. No. 122 of 1889. In that case the mortgage was executed in 1857 and their Lordships thought that there was no reason to apply the strict ruling of the Privy Council. The question, however, has been considered in a later case in Kanthu v. Dasa Upadhya.⁴ The point directly arose for determination in that case and the learned Judges, Ayling and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., had to consider whether the fact that the term in the document went later than 1858 affected the question. The learned Judges observed:

"The respondent's learned Vakil, Mr. Yegnanarayana Adiga, tried to take away the transaction under Exhibit XXII out of the class of transactions to which the ruling in *Pattabhiramier's case*⁵ applied by an ingenious comment on two sentences which occur in the later case in Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen.¹ Those two sentences in the judgment are:—'On a stale claim to redeem a mortgage and dispossess a mortgagee who had, before 1858, acquired an absolute title, there would be strong reasons for adopting the former course.' (That is the course of treating the sale as having been absolute.) 'In the case of a security, executed since 1858, there would be strong reasons for recognising and giving effect to the Madras authorities, with reference to which the parties might be supposed to have contracted.' It was argued that the first sentence favours only those deeds under which the alienees had acquired absolute titles before 1858 and not a deed like the present, under which the absolute title was acquired only in 1859, though the deed itself was executed before 1858. Having regard to the observations in *Pattabhiramier's case*⁵ and the whole tenor of the observations in *Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen*¹ (including the second sentence quoted above), we have no doubt that their Lordships of the Privy Council favoured the natural construction of all documents executed before 1858, whether the title had become absolute before 1858 or became absolute only after 1858, provided the suit to redeem was brought after the title had become absolute."

It seems to us, with all deference, that the decision in *Kanthu v. Dasa Upadhya*⁴ ought to be followed and we have to give effect to the intention of the parties at the date of the transaction. That intention is evidenced by the condition in the document which says:

"If I fail to pay the amount and get back the land, etc., within the period mentioned above, you shall get the warg of the said land entered in your name and shall enjoy the same from generation to generation. I and my descendants shall have no interest therein."

If the terms of the deed were to be enforced, the rights must depend on what was agreed to when the mortgage was executed and not on any change in the law at the date when the money was payable.

We agree with the decision of the learned Judge on both the points and dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

The first part of section 166 is intended to make persons who ply a motor vehicle for hire, in the sense of soliciting custom, within the limits of the District Board pay for it by taking out a licence and the latter part of it is intended to make persons who pick up passengers at separate fares outside the area of the District Board and who carry those passengers over a road of the District Board also take out a licence.

JUDGMENT.—The Assistant Engineer, Kurnool, under the authority of the President, District Board, Kurnool, filed a complaint against the owner and driver, respectively, of Bus No. K.U. 62, alleging that they had committed an offence by using that bus on the 15th October, 1928, for carrying passengers at separate fares on the Chittoor-Kurnool road without the District Board's licence, an offence coming within the purview of section 166 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920 and punishable under section 207 of that Act. In re.

He recorded the complainant's sworn statement, and holding that the act complained of was not "plying a bus for hire" and that the contracts with the passengers had been entered into within the limits of the Kurnool Municipality and not within the limits of the jurisdiction of the District Board, decided that, upon the allegations made, there had been no contravention of section 166 (1) of the Local Boards Act. He, therefore, dismissed the complaint. A petition for revision was presented to the Sessions Court, Kurnool Division, by the complainant against the order, and the Sessions Judge set aside the order of the Sub-Magistrate and directed the District Magistrate to take the complaint on the file and make such further enquiry into it as was necessary under the law. Against that order the petitioners have presented this Criminal Revision Petition.

According to the sworn statement of the Local Fund Assistant Engineer, on the date in question, the bus was carrying passengers at "separate fares" from Kurnool to Nandyal, and the owner of the bus had not obtained the licence from the District Board required by section 166 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act. The facts seem to be that the passengers were picked up within the municipal limits of Kurnool and carried in the bus to Nandyal, going over, in the course of the journey, one of the roads belonging to the District Board of Kurnool. For the purposes of the argument before us and in the Court below, it was not suggested that any passengers were picked up by the petitioners at any place within the limits of the District Board.

The short point for consideration by us is whether this motor bus under the circumstances must obtain a licence from the District Board of Kurnool. Section 166 (1) of the Madras Local Boards Act is as follows:—

"No person shall, on any public road in a district, ply any motor vehicle for hire, or use any such vehicle for carrying passengers or goods at separate fares or rates on such road, except on a licence obtained from the President of the District Board."

The Stationary Sub-Magistrate held that the second part of clause (1) of section 166, namely, "use any such vehicle for carrying passengers or goods" must have the same interpretation placed upon it as that applicable to the first part, namely, "plying for hire" and that, as there had been no plying for hire within the limits of the District Board's area, no licence was necessary and no offence had been committed. Before the learned Sessions Judge, the petitioners relied on a decision reported in Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkirisami Thevan.¹ In that case Madhavan Nair and Curgenvén, JJ., held that a person, who lets out his car for hire within a Municipality, need not obtain a licence from a District Board, if the car travels beyond the municipal limits and traverses any of the District Board roads, and that the "plying of a motor vehicle for hire" means the act of waiting for or soliciting custom, and, therefore, so soon as any person has hired it, the act of plying for hire is complete, and that it cannot be said that a vehicle plies for hire on a public road merely because it is made use of as a hired vehicle on that road, and that a vehicle cannot be said to ply for hire on a road unless the actual hiring takes place on that road. The facts are set out on page 529 as follows:—

Veerappa,
In re.

"The case was tried as a summons case and he was asked to show cause why he should not be convicted upon a complaint that he had plied his motor car for hire from Mayavaram to Tranquebar on the 27th, 28th and 29th March, 1925, without obtaining a licence. Although, however, the terms of the complaint were not supported by the prosecution evidence, a defence witness was examined who deposed that the accused was in the habit of letting out his car for hire to vakils, mirasidars and others wishing to engage a car for a trip from Mayavaram. It may be taken, therefore, that the accused in this case admitted hiring out his car for journeys from Mayavaram. In the other case (Calendar Case No. 200) the question put to the accused was in similar terms and the evidence was in consonance with it. In both the cases, only the first portion of section 166 (1) would apply, because, admittedly, there is no proof that the vehicles were used for carrying passengers or goods at separate fares or rates."

The statement of the facts, in our view, makes this case clearly distinguishable from that, because, according to the sworn statement of the Local Fund Assistant Engineer, the passengers in this case were carried at separate fares, whereas in *Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkirisami Thevan*¹ the whole bus had been engaged for the trip from Mayavaram. Therefore, the only thing that that Bench had to consider was the first part of section 166 (1) and not the latter part of it; and the argument on behalf of the Board in that case was that a vehicle plies for hire on a public road if it is made use of as a hired vehicle on that road, so that it is not a necessary condition that the actual hiring should take place upon that road. That argument, however, did not find favour with that Bench, and we think quite rightly. We are in entire agreement with the decision in that case. But here the facts are different. Before us on behalf of the petitioners, it is argued that the latter words of clause (1) of the section, namely, "use of any such vehicle for carrying passengers at separate fares" on a District Board road mean plying for hire on a District Board road. If this is so, then the latter part of the clause is redundant. We cannot accept that argument. We think that that section is intended to make persons, who use the road of a District Board for making money by using motor vehicles upon it pay for that privilege. The first part is intended to make persons who ply a motor vehicle for hire within the limits of the District Board pay for it by taking out a licence, and the latter part of it is, in our view, intended to make persons who pick up passengers at separate fares outside the area of the District Board, and who carry those passengers over a road of the District Board also take out a licence. What is meant by "separate fares" is individual fares as distinguished from a fixed amount for the whole vehicle, and it was, as we read the facts in Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkirisami Thevar's case¹, the latter case that was there being considered.

Veerappa,
In re.

We were referred to several English cases, but except where the definitions are given of what is "plying for hire" they do not assist us, because we are here dealing with the words of a section, which, in our view, clearly express the intention of the Legislature.

Under these circumstances, we are satisfied that the order of the learned Sessions Judge was quite proper and we agree with the reasons he has given for that order. This Criminal Revision Case is, therefore, dismissed. For the reasons given above, Criminal Revision Case No. 337 of 1929 is also dismissed.

Although shares cannot be issued at a discount, they may be lawfully issued as fully paid up for consideration which the Company has agreed to accept as representing in money's worth the nominal value of the shares. But if the consideration is colourable or illusory, or if the agreement for the issue of fully paid shares makes it manifest on its face that the actual consideration received by the Company is definitely less than the amount credited as paid up, or if an arrangement for the issue of shares is such that in the course of its due working out there is as much as a possibility that in the result the shares will have been issued at a discount, then the issue of the shares as fully paid cannot be justified.

In re Wragg, Ltd., (1897) 1 Ch. 796, discussed.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal in Mosley v. Koffyfontein Mines, Limited, (1904) 2 Ch. 108 at 118, approved.

It is well settled that a Company is in no sense debtor to capital. By issuing a share credited with a definite sum as paid thereon, the Company does not become a debtor to its shareholder for any sum at all. The amount so credited upon the share may, as between one shareholder and another, while the Company is a going concern, determine the proportion of profits receivable by him as dividend, and, in a winding up, his proportion of surplus assets; but it has no influence to extend or increase the aggregate amount available for division in due course of administration amongst the whole body of shareholders.

Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Company, (1889) 41 Ch. D. 1, and Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, (1894) 2 Ch. 239, relied on.

Upon a reference to the High Court made by the Commissioner of Income-tax under section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, on the question whether there was a loss arising out of a transaction in shares, which could be taken into account in arriving at the amount of the income for the purpose of assessment to super-tax, the conclusion of the Commissioner, if supported by evidence, that there was no such loss, is a finding of fact and binding upon the High Court.

Before entertaining any question under section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the High Court should insist that the preliminary requirements of the section are strictly complied with.

Appeal No. 36 of 1929 from a judgment of the High Court, Bombay (Marten, C.J. and Kemp, J.), dated the 5th March, 1928, upon a reference of questions of law made to the High Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, at the instance of the appellants under section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, whereby the main question of law raised by the reference was determined by the Court in favour of the respondent.

The material facts of the case, together with the three questions submitted by the Commissioner to the High Court, are sufficiently fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

Marten, C.J., held (Question 2) that if in fact the Company had incurred a loss on the transaction it would be a trading or revenue loss which could properly be brought into the profit and loss account. He then quoted Question 1, which he said "must be answered in the negative on the facts of this particular case". After weighing all the considerations, he thought (on the authority of *In re Wragg Ltd.*¹) that the difference between the nominal value given and the market value of the shares purchased was sufficiently great to entitle the Commissioner to challenge the adequacy of the consideration given by the English Companies. On his finding it was unnecessary to decide Question 3 and no decision on that question was, therefore, given.

Mr. Justice Kemp, in a concurring judgment, answered the first question in the negative. He agreed with the answer given by the learned Chief Justice to Question 2 and saw no necessity to reply to Question 3.

Against the judgment of the High Court the present appeal was preferred to His Majesty in Council.

30th January, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord
Blanesburgh.

LORD BLANESBURGH.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, upon a reference made to that Court by the Commissioners of Income-tax under section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The substantial question for decision by the Board is whether the appellants are liable to pay Indian super-tax for the year 1924-1925 on the footing that at the least they made no loss by, so that they are entitled to no credit in respect of, the realisation of a certain block of shares in the Burma Corporation (India), Limited, sold in January, 1924, in the circumstances now to be stated. The High Court have held them to be so liable. Hence this appeal.

The appellants, who will be referred to as the Indian Company, were incorporated under the Indian Companies' Act on the 10th February, 1920, with a nominal capital of seven crores of rupees, divided into 350,000 shares of 200 rupees each. Promoted as a private Company by two English Companies, the Share Guarantee Trust, Limited, and the Inter-continental Trust (1913), Limited, all the issued shares of the Indian Company, with the exception of one share taken by each of the two nominee subscribers to its Memorandum of Association, have throughout been held by one or other of the English Companies. Their joint control of the Indian

Company has thus been in every respect and at all relevant times complete.

That Company was really established that it might acquire from the English Companies, as a single block of 312,817 shares, two separate holdings in the Burma Corporation, Limited, of 134,705 shares belonging to the Share Guarantee Trust, and of 178,112 shares belonging to the Intercontinental Trust. The nominal value of each of these Burma Corporation shares was £1. They were all fully paid, and they stood in the London market at the high price of £14 each.

The terms of their acquisition by the Indian Company were contained in two sets of agreements. To one set, one of the English Companies was party disposing; to the other set, the other. But the agreements of each set were of even date, and their terms were, mutatis mutandis, identical. Moreover, since their execution, the respective outstanding interests in the shares of the two disposing Companies have been dealt with as if theirs was the interest of a single person in the entire block. Accuracy, in the circumstances, will accordingly not be seriously endangered, while brevity and convenience of statement will alike be served if their Lordships in what follows proceed, unless otherwise stated, upon the assumption that the entire arrangement was embodied in a series of composite agreements made between the two English Companies on the one side and the Indian Company on the other.

It was by two such agreements executed on the 10th February, 1920—the day of its incorporation—that the Indian Company's interest in the shares originated.

The first of these two agreements resulted in a simple contract for the purchase by the Indian Company of the whole block of the Burma Corporation shares in consideration of the issue of an equal number of shares in the Indian Company credited as fully paid; and, as some form of reconstruction of the Burma Corporation was apparently then in prospect under which each share in the Corporation would in due course be exchanged for 14 shares in Burma Corporation (India), Limited, the agreement contained a provision that if this exchange took place, prior to completion, the sale and purchase should apply to the shares so exchanged. The effect so far was that the Indian Company acquired 312,817 of Burma Corporation shares of £1 each, or their equivalent, in consideration of the issue of 312,817 of its own shares credited as fully paid. And the two separate agreements embodying that result were duly filed.

But the real transaction was contained in the second of the two composite agreements already referred to, the terms of which were not intended to be filed, and were not filed.

By this second agreement, subsequently referred to between the parties and here as the principal agreement, out of the 312,817 shares of the Indian Company representing the then consideration for the Burma shares, one-half—or 156,408 shares—were to or by direction of the respective English Companies to be allotted immediately, while the remaining shares were to be allotted at the rate of one share for each two shares of the Burma Corporation as delivered to the Indian Company. Somewhat inconsistently 25,000 shares in the Burma Corporation were to be delivered to the Indian Company forthwith, while delivery of the “undelivered shares,” as prescribed, was to be made on such dates as might be mutually agreed. The whole were, however, to be delivered within three years—that is, before the 10th February, 1923. In the meantime possession of the undelivered shares was to be retained by the English Companies, and during the period prior to completion these Companies were given power from time to time to deposit and charge the shares for their own liabilities joint or several or for their liabilities jointly with any other parties—up to a limit of two and one-half million pounds sterling. The English Companies were also, by a clause numbered 4, given power with the consent of the Indian Company to sell any of the undelivered shares and either to utilize the proceeds of sale in discharge of such liabilities, in which event—and this, as will later appear, was a significant provision—the purchase consideration was to be “proportionately reduced”—or to remit the proceeds to the Indian Company, in which event “the equivalent purchase consideration for the shares”—another significant provision—was to be duly allotted.

The 156,408 shares of the Indian Company credited as fully paid were duly issued by that Company as provided by the principal agreement. It would not have been easy to harmonize with the other provisions as to allotment the immediate delivery to the Indian Company of the 25,000 Burma Corporation shares. But this difficulty was not allowed to arise for neither these shares nor, indeed, any Burma shares at all were ever delivered to the Indian Company. On the 10th February, 1923, the day of expiration of the period limited for completion, all that had happened was that three years before 156,408 shares of the Indian Company had been issued as fully paid, and, so far, for nothing.

With these circumstances unchanged a further composite agreement was, on the 14th November, 1923, come to by the parties, supplemental to and by way of variation of the original arrangement. By this time the 312,817 shares of the Burma Corporation, Limited, had become 4,379,438 shares of the Burma Corporation (India), Limited, of Rs. 10 each; and by the arrangement as now modified it was provided that these shares need not any of them be delivered before the 10th February, 1926; that the English Companies, with the general or special authority of the Indian Company might sell any of the shares and should in that event on completion pay to the Indian Company the proceeds of sale, together with all dividends received on the shares, and clause 4 of the principal agreement above referred to was modified accordingly. In consideration for this, it was agreed by the English Companies—and this was a modification of the first importance—that the purchase consideration mentioned in the principal agreement should not in any case exceed the 156,408 shares already allotted as above stated.

In a case like the present where the Indian Company was throughout merely another name for the English Companies acting in concert, it would perhaps have been remarkable if these agreements, elastic as are their terms, had not been worked out so as best to meet the convenience of the two English Companies. And so they plainly were. The shares sold remained in the respective names of the two companies, who between them received and retained all the dividends; when the shares were sold they received and retained the entire purchase price: it was only after their sale, actually effected in 1924, that these receipts were even brought into the accounts of the Indian Company; and even this seems to have been little more than a book entry, for, as appears from the evidence of Mr. Sandeman, a director of that Company, no part either of the purchase price or of the dividends had even then been received in India. • They remained in England, presumably under the control of the English Companies, and as late as December, 1926, they were, according to his statement, still there.

But this course of dealing, independent as it was of the Indian Company, really involved little more than a generous interpretation in the English Companies' own interests of the actual provisions of the agreements themselves which, properly understood, embodied an arrangement of a most unusual description in no way characteristic of the simple transaction of purchase and sale set forth in the filed agreements.

The agreements left the English Companies with, in effect, the same dominion over the shares as they enjoyed before their so-called sale. With the consent of the Indian Company, which was the merest formality, the English Companies might sell the shares: without even that form of consent, they might pledge them for their own debts or for the debts of themselves or other parties for a sum or sums up to as much as 2½ million pounds. Had the English Companies pledged the shares up to that limit, and had their value fallen below it—and their value did fall far below it by the beginning of 1924, if not before—it would have been open to the English Companies within the terms of their agreements to withdraw the shares from the Indian Company altogether and retain, for nothing, their 156,408 fully paid shares in that Company. Further, if they sold any of the shares, at whatever price, on tendering that price, however small, they were entitled to one fully paid share of the Indian Company for every 28-rupee shares sold, whatever the discount involved. Finally—and this was the event which happened—on a sale of the shares under the 1923 agreements and on their accounting for the proceeds, the English Companies were entitled to retain the whole of their 156,408 issued shares irrespective of the excess of their par value over the only sum received by the Indian Company in respect of them. As a matter of fact the deficiency below par value on the realisation in 1924 amounted to as much as Rs. 50,04,972, representing a discount of approximately Rs. 32 on each of the 156,408 shares of the Indian Company.

In truth the agreements did not in any real sense embody a purchase of the Burma Corporation shares by the Indian Company, in consideration of the issue of fully paid shares of that Company. More truly the so-called purchase was an elaborate arrangement under which while, it is true, the Indian Company might in certain events have received delivery of the Burma Corporation shares in specie, it was just as likely that the Indian Company, getting everything to which under the agreements it was entitled would receive a sum of money only, a sum which it was under the arrangement bound to accept in satisfaction whatever its amount might be. And, if their Lordships may here conveniently so far anticipate, the Indian Company has in the events received, and has duly received money only for its shares so issued as fully paid. And not only so, but it has received a sum, less than the nominal value of the shares by the above figure of Rs. 50,04,972, or Rs. 32 each.

In the actual result, therefore, the shares have been issued by the Indian Company at a discount of that amount, and as this is the sum which in this litigation and upon this appeal the appellants, the Indian Company, contend represents the loss sustained by them in respect of this transaction, it is convenient to ask at once whether, even as so far stated by their Lordships, the facts do not furnish an immediate refutation of that contention.

It is, of course, necessarily grounded on the assumption that these issued shares of the Indian Company are in the hands of the English Companies fully paid and free from any liability for calls or otherwise. If the English Companies remain between them liable for the discount which has in fact now materialized then it necessarily follows—for no doubt as to the solvency of either English Company is suggested—that the Indian Company has sustained no loss at all. And upon the facts, as just detailed, that liability is, in their Lordships' judgment, fixed upon the English Companies by the application to this case of the principle enunciated by the Court of Appeal in the case of *Mosely v. Koffyfontein Mines, Limited*², where it was held that if an arrangement for the issue of shares is such that in the course of its due working out there is as much as a possibility that in the result the shares will have been issued at a discount, then the issue of the shares as fully paid cannot be justified. Here such a discount has in the result actually materialised; its very amount has been ascertained, and their Lordships, applying as they do, the principle just stated, reach the conclusion that the Indian Company's alleged loss has not been proved, and that its present appeal on this simple ground must fail.

But while this view was foreshadowed by the learned Commissioner, neither in the High Court nor in the arguments before the Board was the case dealt with so simply. Their Lordships accordingly will proceed to consider its further aspects.

The English Companies never, it seems, exercised their power of pledging the Burma shares. They retained them all, until in January, 1924, they sold them in England at 8s. a share, or Rs. 6 according to the then rate of exchange—making a total consideration of Rs. 2,62,76,628. This is equivalent to a price of £5 12s. for each £1 share in the original Burma Corporation. These shares were, as has been stated, worth in British currency £14 each in February, 1920, and there can be no doubt that the English Companies have, by entering into their agreements with the Indian Company, sustained in England a very serious loss which they would have been spared had they in February, 1920, disposed of their Burma shares upon the open market. Nor can their Lordships doubt that this loss has really provoked the complaint made by the Indian Company in this case. But although the English Companies are the Indian Company's only shareholders, the question here is not whether the English Companies have sustained a heavy loss, but whether the Indian Company has sustained any loss at all. And on the assumption which their Lordships now make that the Indian Company's shares must be treated as fully paid that question depends upon the price which on that footing the Indian Company must be taken to have paid for the Burma shares. Did it exceed the sum finally received for them? That is the issue.

Now it is common ground between the parties that the intrinsic value of the Indian Company's shares on the 10th February, 1920, on the footing that the Company was then entitled to a free Burma Corporation £1 share for each of its 312,817 shares issued or to be issued was, at the then high rate of exchange, Rs. 98 only. How far that value would stand to be reduced if each Burma share instead of being "Good delivery" was one subject to the reservations and so forth of the principal agreement has not been gone into, and it need not for present purposes be here explored. Rs. 98 may without deduction be taken to be the value of each of the 156,408 shares issued in February, 1920, on the footing on which they were then issued. And in the first stages of their present dispute with the Revenue, the Indian Company, through its accountants, was prepared to adopt the then actual value of its shares issued as the criterion by which should be determined the question whether it had or had not sustained a loss on ultimate realisation. Its claim on this footing, however, was that the release on the 14th November, 1923, of the Indian Company's obligation to issue 312,817 shares or any shares beyond the first issue of 156,408, operated retrospectively to double the value in 1920 of these issued shares, so that each share must be taken to have then represented for the Company an expenditure of Rs. 196. When, however, it was pointed out that while this release of 1923 might enhance the then value of the issued shares in the hands of their holders, it in no way enhanced their value to the Indian

Company in 1920, seeing that the shares had then been parted with once and for all, the alternative contention was put forward, on behalf of the Indian Company, and it was the contention placed before the Board, that the value to the Indian Company of its 156,408 shares at the date of issue must be taken to have been their nominal value of Rs. 200 each, no more and no less, on which basis the Indian Company has no realisation sustained, as is admitted, a loss of the above sum of Rs. 50,04,972.

The Indian Company's claim to have this loss allowed as a deduction from its super-tax assessment was in the first instance rejected by the Senior Taxing Officer, not however because the loss had not been sustained, but because, in his view, it was a capital and not a revenue loss.

After a series of appeals, in the course of which the view was taken that in the circumstances no loss of any kind had been sustained, but, on the contrary, a large profit had been made by the Indian Company, the High Court finally, by Order, dated the 17th December, 1925, under section 66 (3) of the Act, directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to make a reference to the High Court of the following question of law arising out of the Indian Company's super-tax assessment for the year 1924:—

"Whether the Commissioner of Income-tax was not bound in law to take as the price paid for the Burma Corporation shares the nominal value of the shares allotted [by the Indian Company] in payment therefor."

The Commissioner duly made the reference required and, on the matter coming before the High Court for hearing on the 5th October, 1926, that Court made an order purporting to be made in pursuance of section 66 (4) of the Act directing the Commissioner to deal in particular with a further question, namely, whether the alleged loss was a capital loss, and to find further facts and generally to amend the case. The Commissioner, after a further hearing of the parties, stated an additional case, and submitted to the Court two further questions, namely:—

(A) Whether the alleged loss in question (if any) was a capital loss or revenue loss; and

(B) Whether the alleged loss in question (if any) can be taken into account in view of the fact that it has accrued and arisen outside British India in view of the provisions of section 4 (1) and (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922."

Their Lordships propose now to deal only with the original question, although they must refer again to the circumstances in which the other two were stated. With reference to that question, the Commissioner, in his original letter of reference, after stating that each share of the Burma Corporation had been admitted by the Indian Company's accountants to be worth only Rs. 98 on the 10th April, 1920, submitted that the only reasonable inference was that each share of the Indian Company was only worth that amount. This finding was not in question before the Board. In his second letter of reference dealing with the contention which had then been set up that the case of *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ required the nominal value of the shares issued and that alone to be taken, the Commissioner, after a full review of the agreements which their Lordships have already discussed, stated his conclusion of fact to be that the whole scheme was as a simple purchase and sale of shares, illusory.

The case then again came before the High Court, and on the 5th March, 1928, that Court pronounced the judgment from which the present appeal is brought. Its view, broadly, was that the Court was brought under no compulsion by the decision in *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ to take the nominal value of the shares allotted by the Indian Company as necessarily representing the price paid by that Company for the Burma shares. The present case, in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice, was within the exception to that decision stated by A. L. Smith, L.J., in his judgment in *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ for that here the parties had themselves in effect—so great was the discrepancy—acknowledged the consideration received to have no relation in point of amount to that nominal value. The real value of each share in the Indian Company as issued could not have exceeded Rs. 98. It might, if other dates were taken, be found to have been even less. It was open to the Court to ascertain the true value. On any computation thereof the case of the Indian Company failed. It had made no loss on realization: on the contrary it had made, expressed in rupees as was right, a large profit—a profit in respect of each of its 156,408 shares worth only Rs. 98 at their date of issue, of as much as Rs. 70.

Now their Lordships are in full agreement that the Indian Company's case failed, as the High Court thought. But if Wragg's case¹ has any application to the present, and if it could not otherwise be distinguished, their Lordships would not as at present advised be prepared to follow the High Court in so far as its final order was based upon the distinction there taken. As they understand the observations of Smith, L.J., referred to by the learned Chief Justice, these were confined to a case where upon the face of the agreement for the issue of fully paid shares it was made apparent that the actual consideration received by the Company was recognised as being definitely less than the paid-up capital issued in respect of it. The observations were not directed to a case like the present where that fact has to be ascertained, if at all, by extrinsic evidence.

But there appears to be a more certain ground upon which In re *Wragg, Ltd.*¹ if it has any application at all to the present question, may in the view of the Board be distinguished, and that is to be found in the conclusion of the learned Commissioner already stated, that the transaction here regarded as a purchase and sale of shares was illusory altogether. To a case of which so much can be said In re *Wragg, Ltd.*¹ has no application, and that conclusion of the learned Commissioner, as one of fact, was binding upon the High Court as it is also binding upon the Board, supported as it is by ample material, to some of which attention has already been called earlier in this judgment.

Their Lordships, however, do not wish it to be supposed that in their view the decision in In re *Wragg, Ltd.*¹ is in point here at all. Even if, on any application by the Indian Company to make the English Companies liable to contribute in respect of the shares issued to them, these Companies could successfully rely upon In re *Wragg, Ltd.*¹ as a defence, that result in their Lordships' opinion would have no influence upon the fortunes of the appellants' present appeal.

In re *Wragg, Ltd.*¹ was one of many cases—In re Almada and Tiritto Company,³ *Ooregum Gold Mining Company v. Roper*⁴ and In re *Eddystone Marine Insurance Company*⁵ are other notable examples—in which the question, always as between a Company or its Liquidator on the one hand and the allottee of the shares issued as fully paid on the other, was whether in his hands the shares were held free from liability for calls or otherwise. There is no such question here. To this litigation, the English Companies, the allottees of the shares, are not parties, nor, in law, are they even privies. The issue is one between the Revenue and the Indian Company only, and the sole question now is what was the real value objectively of the fully paid shares issued to the English Companies by the Indian Company at the date when they were in fact parted with. It is not disputed by the appellants, the Indian Company, that the intrinsic value of these shares, if it had then exceeded their nominal value would have had to be returned as their true value. But their contention is that if, although judged by the same tests, their intrinsic value was then less than their nominal value, that last value, and no less, must be returned as their true value. This, they say, is the result of *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹

Their Lordships have some difficulty in grasping the argument. First of all, it is clear that there are some limitations to be placed upon the influence of *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ If, for example, the shares here had been issued to an individual who died on the next day, it could hardly even have been contended that by reason of *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ his estate would be charged with death duties in respect of any other than the real value of the shares whether that value was above or below their nominal value. Again, if immediately after the issue of the shares here the Company, upon proper resolutions passed, had presented a petition for the reduction of its capital on the ground that except to the extent of Rs. 98 per share its issued capital of 156,408 fully paid was unrepresented by available assets, can it be supposed that *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ would, of itself, have been any obstacle to an order confirming the reduction being made? Why then should that decision stand in the way of the real value of the shares being now in like manner ascertained? Their Lordships can only suppose the answer to be that the view is sub-consciously assumed that a Company by the issue of a share credited with a definite sum as paid thereon, becomes in some sense a debtor to its shareholder in respect of that full amount. But of course that is not so. A Company is in no sense debtor to capital. *Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Company*⁶ and Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust.⁷ The amount credited upon a share may, as between one shareholder and another, while the Company is a going concern, determine the proportion of profits receivable by him as dividend, and, in a winding up, his proportion of surplus assets. But it has no influence to extend or increase the aggregate amount available for division in due course of administration amongst the whole body of shareholders; nor does it make the Company a debtor for any sum at all.

In their Lordships' judgment accordingly the decision in *In re Wragg, Ltd.*¹ ought to have no influence upon the question now raised, so that, however its claim be regarded, this appeal of the Indian Company fails.

Before parting with the case their Lordships think it right to allude again to the presentation to the High Court of the two additional questions to which they have already made reference, but which it is unnecessary for them further to consider. In the present case the only result of the presentation of these two questions was that a final decision of the case, on the first and only essential question, was delayed for nearly a year and a half and much additional expense was incurred. Their Lordships are fully alive to the circumstances in which the High Court was constrained to direct that these further questions should be referred to it for consideration, and the result in the present case of the order then made merely serves to confirm the view of the Board that the High Court will, in future cases, be well advised to require, before they seek to entertain any question under section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act, that the preliminary requirements of the section are strictly complied with.

The stringency of these requirements is clearly deliberate. It is the intention of the enactment that the High Court is not to be flooded with such applications. The object is salutary and in their Lordships' judgment the High Court will be well advised, before they entertain any question under the section, always to see that the preliminary statutory conditions have been fully observed.

Upon the whole case, for the reasons they have given, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Straits Settlements—Chinese domiciled in—T'sip or secondary wife of—Proof of—Presumption of, from recognition of son—Divorce of—Son of, if legitimate—Illegitimate natural son—Legitimation of, by subsequent recognition.

Held, on the evidence that P was not a t'sip or lawful secondary wife of the settlor, and that the association between them was merely of a temporary or casual character.

The mere fact of recognition of a person as a son cannot raise any presumption of marriage between the parents.

According to Chinese custom a t'sip cannot be put away who has borne a son and in the Straits Settlements there is no divorce provided for by the laws of the Chinese.

According to the law operative in the Straits Settlements the son of a t'sip or secondary wife will be legitimate being a son by a lawful wife.

The Chinese custom of legitimation of a natural son by subsequent recognition is not part of the law operative in the Straits Settlements.

Legitimation of a child, whose parents are not husband and wife, is unknown and repugnant to the common law of England, and no hardship (much less injustice or oppression) need result from a refusal to admit a modification in this respect of the English Law in its application to Chinese.

Lord Russell.

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.—This appeal is brought from a decree of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, dated the 11th August, 1928, by which an appeal from a decree (dated the 22nd February, 1928) of Mr. Justice Sproule was dismissed. This last-mentioned decree was made upon the further consideration of an action and upon a summons to vary a certificate made therein by the Registrar in answer to an enquiry which had been ordered by the judgment in the action. The enquiry was framed in the following terms:—"An enquiry whether the said Khoo Hun Tee was a legitimate son of the settlor." The settlor was one Khoo Thean Tek, and he is referred to hereinafter as the settlor.

By his certificate the Registrar had found that Khoo Hun Tee was a legitimate son of the settlor. Mr. Justice Sproule reversed that finding, and declared that Khoo Hun Tee was not a legitimate son of the settlor. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision of Mr. Justice Sproule.

The effect of the decision of Mr. Justice Sproule and the Court of Appeal is to exclude Khoo Hun Tee from the class of "my sons and grandsons" who are to take as beneficiaries under the trusts of a settlement of land in Penang executed by the settlor on the 8th December, 1888. Their Lordships, however, are not concerned with any question either as to construction or otherwise arising under this settlement. They have only to determine whether the decision under appeal is or is not correct.

Most of the relevant facts are not in dispute. The settlor was a Chinese domiciled in Penang, who had in addition to a t'sai, or principal wife, one or more t'sips, or lawful secondary wives. During some period of time (the extreme limits of which are stated later) he was in sexual association with a woman named Petronella, who as a result of this association gave birth to Khoo Hun Tee on the 22nd January, 1854.

As to Petronella, she was born in Penang and was baptized on the 26th June, 1831, at the Catholic Church of the Assumption in the town of Penang. She was the daughter of Felix Baptist and Ann Jeremiah. On the 19th April, 1847, she was married at the same church to Richard Gaudoin. On the 25th August, 1848, a daughter was born of that marriage, who was baptized at the same church on the 3rd September, 1848. The next two events established concerning Petronella are the birth of her son Khoo Hun Tee in 1854, and the birth of an illegitimate daughter on the 26th August, 1856. This daughter was baptized at the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception, Pulo Tikus, Penang, on the 15th September, 1856; and on the 13th March, 1857, Khoo Hun Tee was baptized at the same church, being described in the register as "Edward Baptist, illegitimate son of Petronella Baptist about 4 years old." It is not known who was the father of the illegitimate daughter; but it is common ground that the settlor was the father of Khoo Hun Tee. On the 5th February, 1861, Petronella was married at the same church to one Henry Cornelius. In the marriage register she is described as "Petronella Baptist, adult, legitimate daughter of Felix and Anna Baptist, and widow of Richard Gaudoin." Nothing is known as to where or when Richard Gaudoin died. Petronella died in 1886. There is no dispute as to any of the above facts.

The Registrar's certificate of Khoo Hun Tee's legitimacy was based upon alternative findings of facts. He found that Petronella was a t'sip, or lawful secondary wife, of the settlor; and that even if she were not, yet Khoo Hun Tee had been legitimated by subsequent recognition.

Before considering the correctness of these findings it is necessary to state that in their Lordships' view the inquiry is to be answered by ascertaining whether Khoo Hun Tee was the legitimate son of the settlor in accordance with the law operative in the Straits Settlements, the test being whether he would be entitled to enjoy the civil rights which according to that law would be enjoyed by a son of the settlor.

If Petronella had in fact been a t'sip or secondary wife of the settlor there would be no room for doubt upon the question whether in accordance with the law operative in the Straits Settlements Khoo Hun Tee was legitimate. He would be legitimate being a son by a lawful wife, for polygamy amongst the Chinese is recognized by the Courts of the Colony.

Their Lordships, however, agree with the views expressed by Mr. Justice Sproule that the evidence does not justify any finding that Petronella was a t'sip or lawful secondary wife of the settlor. Even if (contrary to the usual presumption) it were assumed that at the time when Khoo Hun Tee was conceived Richard Gaudoin was in fact dead, so that Petronella was soluta or free to marry, nevertheless the evidence establishes nothing that is inconsistent but much that is only consistent with the view that the association between Petronella and the settlor was merely of a temporary or casual character.

There are many facts in the case which render it most improbable that Petronella occupied the status of a t'sip or that her association with the settlor was intended to be of a permanent nature. She was a Catholic, who never definitely abandoned her religion. So far as the evidence goes no association with the settlor is proved before the date when Khoo Hun Tee was conceived, viz., somewhere about May, 1853. Her illegitimate daughter was born in August, 1856, and baptized within three weeks of birth. Her association with the settlor must have ceased by that time, and in all probability had ceased before the daughter was conceived, i.e., before November, 1855. The period of association between these two persons may, upon the evidence, have only lasted between May, 1853, and November, 1855. But even taking the outside limits of its possible duration, viz., between 1848 (when the legitimate daughter was born) and 1861 (when Petronella married Cornelius), their Lordships are of opinion that there is no evidence that the parties intended their union to be permanent in its nature. Moreover, the fact that the association between the parties was in fact severed affords strong evidence that Petronella was never a t'sip, for according to the evidence of Mr. Beatty (the only expert on Chinese custom who was called) a t'sip cannot be put away who has borne a son and "in the Straits Settlements there is no divorce provided for by the laws for the Chinese."

In the opinion of their Lordships it is impossible to find upon the evidence that Petronella was a t'sip or lawful secondary wife of the settlor.

Unless Khoo Hun Tee was legitimate upon some other ground the appeal must fail.

An alternative argument was presented on behalf of the appellant, based upon the Registrar's finding that Khoo Hun Tee had been legitimated by subsequent recognition.

It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the evidence adduced on this head, because the respondent concedes (and in their Lordships' opinion rightly concedes) that the evidence of recognition would be sufficient to establish legitimation by recognition according to Chinese custom.

The crucial question then arises, viz., was he a legitimate son of the settlor according to the law operative in the Straits Settlements? In other words, is the Chinese custom of legitimation by recognition part of the law operative in the Colony?

That the law operative in the Straits Settlements recognises as legitimate the children of a t'sip is clear from the decision of this Board when the present litigation came under its consideration in 1926. In delivering the judgment of the Board Lord Phillimore uses the following language in considering the status of a t'sip and her children:

"It is said that for a long time such a union was considered as carrying with it no legal consequences, and the children were deemed frankly illegitimate throughout the Straits Settlements. But in the Six Widows' case¹ the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements decided in the year 1908 that a 't'sip' or secondary wife is entitled to take a widow's share in the estate of her deceased husband, she being equivalent for this purpose with a 't'sai' or principal wife; and following this doctrine to its logical conclusion, the same Court held that the children of a 't'sip' were entitled to inherit equally with the children of a 't'sai.' In the later case the same Court decided that no form of marriage ceremony was necessary for creating the position of a 't'sip,' and an appeal having been taken to His Majesty in Council, this Board advised that the judgment should be affirmed, thereby also inferentially affirming the previous judgment. This case is reported as Cheang Thye Phin v. Tan Ah Loy.²

On the other hand, daughters are admitted to share on an intestacy, in other words, the Chinese custom which excludes females from sharing in the estate of a Chinese intestate does not apply in the Straits Settlements: *Lee Joo Neo v. Lee Eng Swee*³; or to state the position in other language, the English law of succession is not modified in its application to Chinese residents in the Colony by incorporating the Chinese custom of excluding females.

Furthermore, by the law operative in the Colony the adopted son of a Chinese intestate has no right to share in the intestate's estate. This is stated by Mr. Justice Sproule to have been settled law ever since the judgment (in 1858) of Sir Peter Maxwell in Reg. v. Willans.⁴ In 1877 Sir Theodore Ford adopted that view after reviewing the earlier decisions (see Khoo Tiang Bee v. Tan Beng Gwat.⁵)

The case of a natural son alleged to have been legitimated by subsequent recognition under Chinese custom does not appear to have arisen for consideration until the present case.

Mr. Justice Sproule (and Mr. Justice Stevens in the Court of Appeal) held that the Chinese custom of legitimation of a natural son by subsequent recognition was not part of the law operative in the Colony. Their Lordships agree with that view.

The modifications of the law of England which obtain in the Colony in the application of that law to the various alien races established there, arise from the necessity of preventing the injustice or oppression which would ensue if that law were applied to alien races unmodified. That was the view expressed by Sir Peter Maxwell, C.J., in *Choa Choon Neo v. Spottiswoode*⁶; and this Board, in the case of Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo,⁷ stated that in Sir Peter Maxwell's judgment

"the rules of English law, and the degree in which, in cases of this kind, regard should be had to the habits and usages of the various people residing in the Colony are correctly stated."

From the above-mentioned necessity arises the recognition by the Courts of the Colony of polygamous marriages among the Chinese, and, as a logical consequence, the recognition of the legitimacy of the offspring (whether male or female) of such marriages.

Their Lordships, however, are unable to find any grounds which would justify such a modification of English law as to treat an illegitimate natural son as legitimated by the mere fact of subsequent recognition. Legitimation of a child, whose parents are not husband and wife, is unknown and repugnant to the common law of England, and no hardship (much less injustice or oppression) need result from a refusal to admit a modification in this respect of the English law in its application to Chinese.

Their Lordships are of opinion accordingly that the appellant's alternative contention also fails.

There remains for consideration an additional argument urged on his behalf. It was said that the fact of recognition, established as it was by the evidence, raised a presumption in favour of the view that the mother of Khoo Hun Tee was a t'sip, that such presumption had not been rebutted, and that Khoo Hun Tee should, therefore, be held to be legitimate.

In their Lordships' opinion this argument is destroyed by the evidence of Mr. Beatty, from which it would appear that, according to Chinese custom, "a mistress may not be recognized and yet her son may"—or, as he phrases it in another passage, "legitimation of the son does not necessarily imply legitimisation of the mother." In the face of this statement as to Chinese custom the mere fact of recognition of a person as a son cannot, in their Lordships' view, raise any presumption of marriage between the parents.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

On the death of a Mahomedan, one-fourth of his property devolved upon his widow, and three-fourths on his cousin, while the widow being so entitled took possession of the whole of the estate in lieu of her dower. Thereafter, assignees from the cousin, alleging that the widow's dower had long before been discharged from her usufruct of the estate, sued for the unconditional delivery of possession to them of a three-fourths share of the estate. The plaint contained an alternative prayer for the delivery of such share on payment of such portion of the dower debt as might be found to be due. In that suit it was found that a portion of the dower debt was still due, and a decree was passed for the delivery of possession of the share sued for on payment by the plaintiffs of the amount so found due for dower. In arriving at the balance due for dower, that decree did not, however, take into account the interest upon the dower in arrear, no such claim having been put forward by the widow. The amount decreed for dower was not paid and possession was retained. In a suit for possession of the three-fourths share subsequently instituted by the representative-in-interest of the plaintiffs in the prior suit against the widow or her representative-in-interest, held, that a claim by the latter to charge any interest in respect of the period during which dower remained unpaid was barred under Section 11, Expl. (iv), Civil Procedure Code.

In the first suit, the widow's claim to interest was one which might, and which ought to, have been made ground of defence.

LORD BLANESBURGH.—The property which is the subject-matter of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen belonged to one Abdul Shah,* who died on the 9th October, 1881, leaving him surviving his widow Zamani Begam and his cousin Mansur Shah. According to the Mahomedan law, one-fourth of the property of the deceased devolved upon his widow and three-fourths upon Mansur Shah, while the widow being so entitled took possession of the whole of the estate in lieu of her dower which, as she claimed, amounted to Rs. 50,000. Thereafter Mansur Shah, having assigned a one-half share out of his three-fourths interest to Usman Shah and Zamani Khan, joined with them in April, 1892, in filing a suit against the widow in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, alleging that her dower amounted to no more than Rs. 1,000, and that it had long ago been discharged from her usufruct of the estate, and claiming (1) that possession should be delivered to them unconditionally of a three-fourths share of the estate, and (2) that if any portion of Musammat Begam's dower was found to be due a decree should be passed in their favour for possession on payment of the dower due.

The suit went to judgment. The District Judge by his order, dated the 17th April, 1893, decreed it against the widow. She died on the 7th June, 1894, and thereafter an appeal against the decree was preferred to the High Court at Allahabad by the present appellants who are her heirs and legal representatives. Rs. 50,000, and on the 2nd June, 1896, it made the following decree, on which the whole question now at issue turns. "It is ordered and decreed that this appeal be allowed, and in modification of [the decree appealed from] it is ordered that the plaintiff-respondents do receive possession of the property specified in the said decree on payment by them to the defendants-appellants of the sum of Rs. 35,223 minus the amount of the profits arising from the plaintiff-respondents' three-fourths share of the property in the possession of the defendants-appellants from the date of the Lower Courts decree up to the date when possession may be obtained by the plaintiff-respondents."

With reference to that decree it is agreed that, in arriving at the figure of Rs. 35,223 as the sum which had to be paid if the widow's claim to dower was to be extinguished, no interest upon the dower in arrear was taken into account; in fact, in that suit no claim was put forward either by the widow herself or by the present appellants, as her successors-in-interest, that she was entitled to any such interest and the amount to be paid was assessed upon the footing that no such claim existed.

Now the present suit is brought by a plaintiff who has succeeded to an interest in the three-fourths which formerly belonged to Mansur Shah. She is, therefore, his successor-in-interest. Her claim is that upon the taking of proper accounts, possession may be delivered to her of her share of the estate with mesne profits, interest and costs, all on the footing that the widow and her representatives have already been paid in full the amount of her dower through the usufruct of the estate of which she and they have had continuous possession. It has, upon that claim, been made clear from the discussion which has taken place before the Board, that upon the pleadings the only real question which has now to be decided between the parties is whether those representing the widow, in taking the account of the amount still remaining due in respect of dower, are entitled to charge any interest in respect of the period during which dower remained unpaid. Both by the Subordinate Judge and by the High Court it has been held that no interest can be charged by them if only for the reason that no claim for interest was in the former suit made by or on behalf of the widow, and that any claim for interest is now res judicata. It is agreed that if that view be correct, the appeal must fail, whatever view might be taken by the Board of the other reasons assigned by the Courts below for the same conclusion.

And their Lordships are of opinion that that view is correct. It is quite clear, as it appears to them, that in the first suit, the widow's claim to interest was one which might, and which ought to, have been made ground of defence; and under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, whereof so much can be asserted a suit by the decree in which the parties to the second suit are bound (as is the case here) then such a claim may not again be reopened in the later suit. It follows that the appeal fails, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that it be dismissed with costs.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922)—Whether amounts received from sale of timber trees are income.

The amounts received from the sale of timber trees are income and as such liable to income-tax.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, is as follows:—

I have the honour to refer the following case for the decision of the High Court under section 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act (XI of 1922).

2. The petitioner who is the owner of extensive unsurveyed and unassessed forest lands in Malabar and the Nilgiris was assessed for the year 1928-29 by the Income-tax Officer, Palghat, on an income of Rs. 5,395 from property and Rs. 3,07,629 income from fees received in respect of timber cut and removed from the forests and other miscellaneous receipts. This sum of Rs. 3,07,629 was wrongly classified by the Income-tax Officer under the head "Other sources". The greater part of the income which relates to fees for timber felled and removed and profits from sale of elephants should have been classified under the head "Business." In computing the income of Rs. 3,07,629, the Income-tax Officer included a sum of Rs. 1,19,098 claimed as a deduction by the petitioner as being a receipt of a capital nature. This sum is said to represent the estimated capital value of the timber cut and removed from the petitioner's forest in return for which he received certain "Kuttikanom" fees. The petitioner contended that by the sale of the timber in the forest he was practically converting a good portion of the capital into cash and that to the extent of the sum of Rs. 1,19,098 (50 per cent. of the Kuttikanom fees), the receipts from Kuttikanom fees should be regarded as receipt of a capital nature. The Income-tax Officer declined to accept this contention and disallowed the claim. The petitioner thereupon appealed to the Assistant Commissioner but without success. An extract from the Assistant Commissioner's order is filed—Exhibit A.

3. The petitioner has now applied to me to refer for the decision of the High Court the following question of law, viz. :—

"Whether the amounts received by sale of timber trees are income, liable as such to income-tax."

The petitioner is conducting a business in the sale of forest produce. He does not sell the land with the produce growing on it. He sells only the produce of the forest or that which the forest yields. His business is of the same nature as that carried on by a person working a mine or a quarry. The petitioner's claim in this instance amounts to one for an allowance for the exhaustion of the capital. It is a well-established principle of Income-tax law, that for the purposes of taxation no deduction can be made from profits for the exhaustion of capital. There is nothing peculiar to this case to distinguish it from other decided cases in which this principle has been applied. I would, therefore, ask your Lordships to answer the question propounded in the affirmative.

T. R. Venkatrama Sastri and T. B. Balagopal for assessee.

M. Patanjali Sastri for Commissioner of Income-tax.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question referred to by the Commissioner of Income-tax is:

"Whether the amounts received by sale of timber trees are income, liable as such to income-tax."

The assessee is the owner of unassessed forest lands in Malabar and was assessed by the Income-tax Officer, Palghat, for the year 1928-29 on an income of Rs. 5,395 from property and Rs. 3,07,629 from fees received in respect of timber cut and removed from the forests and other miscellaneous receipts. The assessee objects to the latter assessment. Before the Commissioner his contention was that he had purchased the forests with trees growing therein and that as the trees were cut down and carried away the capital was thereby decreased. The Commissioner of Income-tax has pointed out that similar circumstances exist in the case of mines and quarries—this is conceded by Mr. Venkatrama Sastri who appears for the assessee—and that in neither of those cases is any deduction allowed by reason of the fact that as years go on the amount of coal under the land in the case of the mines is diminished and the amount of the stones to be quarried in the case of the quarry is diminished. Similar views have been taken in the English Courts with regard to minerals. Mr. Venkatrama Sastri here argues that this is not to be treated as assessable income at all although he admits that he can see no difference between the income derived from the sale of coal and the sale of stone quarried in a quarry or from income derived from the sale of paddy grown in land. Of course we are unable to distinguish between the income derived from the sale of paddy which is grown on land and the income derived from the sale of timber cut in a forest; but the profits earned from the sale of paddy would be assessable to income-tax but for the special exemption given to that income in the Income-tax Act by reason of its being agricultural income. There is no such exemption in the case of income derived from the sale of timber. Under the circumstances, we answer the question referred to us in the affirmative. The assessee will pay Rs. 250 costs to the Commissioner of Income-tax.

The word "forthwith" in O. 21, R. 84, Civil Procedure Code, means "as expeditiously as circumstances permit," in other words, within "such time, as appears to be reasonably early having regard to all the circumstances".

Where a Court auction-purchaser failed to pay the deposit, as required by O. 21, R. 84, and the executing Court, after having the property again proclaimed for sale in the interests of the defaulting bidder, held the resale about two months after the original sale and the deficiency in price was sought to be recovered from the defaulting purchaser,

Held, that under those circumstances the resale can be said to have been held "forthwith" and the purchaser is liable to make good the deficiency on resale. In such a case, though it is not obligatory for a fresh proclamation to be issued, yet, if the same is issued in the interests of the auction-purchaser, it cannot be said that on that account there was unreasonable delay in holding the resale.

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Jackson, dated 9th August, 1927, and passed in A.A.A.O. No. 6 of 1926 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the District Court of Guntur, dated 11th March, 1925, and passed in A.S. No. 253 of 1924 preferred against the order of the District Munsif of Narasaraopet, dated 21st January, 1924, and made in E.A. No. 1088 of 1923 in O.S. No. 945 of 1921.

This Appeal was first heard by their Lordships Jackson and Thiruvengkatachariar, JJ., who delivered the following differing judgments on the 9th August, 1927:—

Jackson, J.—Appeal against Appellate Order of the District Judge of Guntur in A.S. No. 253 of 1924.

The appellant bid at a Court sale, and failed to deposit 25 per cent. as prescribed by Order 21, Rule 84 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There was a re-sale when the price was less by Rupees Six hundred and thirty (Rs. 630). The appellant has been ordered under Order 21, Rule 71, to make good the deficiency. He pleads that he cannot be so ordered because the resale was not held forthwith as required by Order 21, Rule 84.

The sale was held on 1st September, 1923 and closed at 5 P.M. on that day. Then the appellant defaulted, and obviously the sale could not have proceeded at once. The 2nd and 3rd were holidays. By the 4th the would-be bidders had dispersed and the Court proclaimed a fresh sale which was held on 5th November, 1923.

The learned Judge is prepared to hold that whenever there is failure to deposit the 25 per cent. and consequent resale there must be a proclamation, because Rule 84 says forthwith resold, Rule 85, in regard to the 75 per cent. says, resold, and Rule 87 says every resale of property in default of payment within the period allowed for such payment shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation. But obviously Rule 87 can only apply to a default under Rule 86, because otherwise there would be no sense in the phrase "forthwith resold" in Rule 84.

It remains to consider whether "forthwith resold" lays a statutory obligation upon the Court to resell immediately after the default is made, which in this case would have been very late in the evening of September 1st. Such a literal interpretation would almost invariably entail extreme hardship upon the defaulting purchaser; the main body of bidders, as in this case would have gone thinking that the sale was finished, the property would be knocked down for a low price, and the deficiency to be made good would be proportionately raised. 'Forthwith' here only means that the Court can go straight ahead without the obligation prescribed in the latter case under Rule 86, of issuing a fresh proclamation; there is no particular insistence or instantaneousness which in the context would be stupid. As expeditiously as circumstances permit would probably be a good rendering of the sense. As explained, the Court could not resell on the same or even on immediately subsequent days, and, therefore, it issued another proclamation which was the fairest treatment the appellant could wish.

There is no reason to hold that the fresh proclamation in this case was irregular.

Accordingly the appeal fails on all grounds and is dismissed.

Thiruvēnkatachariar, J.—The appellant before us was declared to be the purchaser of an item of immoveable property sold in execution of the decree in Q.S. No. 945 of 1921 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Narasaraopet, on the 1st September, 1923. He failed to pay the deposit of 25 per cent. on the amount of his purchase money to the officer conducting the sale. The default made by the purchaser was reported to the District Munsif later on in the day by the Nazir who conducted the sale. The 2nd and 3rd September were holidays, and on the 4th September, 1923, which was the next Court day, the District Munsif ordered that the property should be proclaimed for sale and resold. The re-sale took place on 5th November, 1923, and resulted in a deficiency of Rs. 630. The judgment-debtors thereafter applied under Order 21, Rule 71 for the recovery from the defaulting purchaser of the deficiency of price resulting from the re-sale by reason of the purchaser's default, together with expenses of the re-sale.

The main contention of the appellant, which is practically the only one which is pressed before us, is that he is not liable under Rule 71 for the deficiency of the price because the re-sale was not made forthwith as required by Order 21, Rule 84, Civil Procedure Code. This contention was overruled by both the Lower Courts and the appellant has been held liable for the deficiency of the price as claimed by the judgment-debtors. The learned District Judge has considered this question in paragraph 3 of his judgment, and his conclusion is that the language of Rule 84 differs materially from that of the corresponding provision in the Code of 1882, and the re-sale which is directed under Rule 84 has to be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation, and in that respect it stands on the same footing as a re-sale ordered under Rule 87 in default of payment of the purchase money. In that view he holds that the re-sale in this case was made forthwith as the District Munsif directed on the 4th September, the issue of fresh proclamation for the re-sale.

I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned District Judge as regards the effect of the alteration in the language of Rule 84, by the substitution of the word "re-sold" for the expression "put up again and sold" in section 306 of the old Code. I may here refer to the provisions of sections 307 to 309 of the old Code. Under section 308, the property shall be re-sold if the full amount of the purchase money is not paid into Court within the period mentioned in section 307. Then section 309 provided that

"Every re-sale of immoveable property, in default of payment of the purchase money within the period allowed for such payment, shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation in the manner and for the period hereinbefore prescribed for the sale."

Section 293 corresponding to Rule 71 provided that

"Any deficiency of price (if any) which may happen on a re-sale under this Code by reason of the purchaser's default, and all expenses attending such re-sale . . . shall, at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, be recoverable from the defaulter."

As the word used in section 293 is "Re-sale," the question was raised in several cases whether the sale held under section 306 in default of payment of the deposit amount was a re-sale within the meaning of section 293, and it was held that it was a re-sale. See Vallabhan v. Pangunni,¹ Ramdhani Sahai v. Rajrani Kooer,² *Javherbai v. Haribhai*³ and Rajendra Nathi Roy v. Ram Charan Sinha.⁴

It seems to me that all that the legislature did by the change in the language to "re-sold" was merely to affirm the construction put by the Courts on the expression "put up again and sold" so as to obviate any room for doubt. In my opinion, there has been no alteration in the substance of Rule 84, by the change in the language, and I find that is also the view taken by Shadi Lal, J., in Beli Ram v. Sohan Singh.⁵ If that be so, the view taken in the cases already cited that for a re-sale under section 306, in default of payment of the deposit no fresh proclamation is necessary would equally apply to cases under Rule 84. The same conclusion is also reached by comparing Rule 84 with Rule 87.

1. (1889) I.L.R. 12 M. 454.

2. (1881) I.L.R. 7 C. 337.

3. (1881) I.L.R. 5 B. 575.

4. (1898) 2 C.W.N. 411.

5. (1916) 32 I.C. 907.

Under the latter Rule, the issue of fresh proclamation is made obligatory in the case of a re-sale of immoveable property in default of payment of the purchase money within the period allowed for such payment which is provided for by Rule 85. But Rule 84 deals only with the payment of deposit of 25 per cent. which has to be paid immediately and in default of such deposit, the re-sale must be held forthwith. In my opinion, the difference between the provision in Rule 84 and the provision in Rule 87 clearly shows that a re-sale under Rule 84 does not require fresh proclamation.

The only remaining question, therefore, is whether the re-sale in this case which was held on 5th November, 1923, is open to the objection that it was not held forthwith. This question, I need hardly say, was not considered by the learned District Judge as on the view he took, it did not arise. The word "forthwith" occurs in the old Code as well as in the present Code, and the meaning given in the Oxford Concise Dictionary is 'immediately without delay.' So, where a statute requires anything to be done "immediately," that is the same thing as "forthwith"; and implies "speedy and prompt action and an omission of all delay; in other words, that the thing to be done should be done as quickly as is reasonably possible" (per Cockburn, C.J., in *R. v. The Justices of Berkshire*⁶).

'I think that the word 'forthwith' must be construed according to the circumstances in which it is used. Where, as in Hyde v. Watts,⁸ there is a covenant to insure a man's life, there must of necessity be some delay, for the act could not be done in a moment. But where an act which is required to be done 'forthwith' can be done without delay, it ought to be so done.'

Comparing the language of Rule 84 with that of Rules 86 and 87, there can be hardly any doubt that the re-sale under Rule 84 should be held with as little delay as possible, and for that reason no fresh proclamation for the re-sale is prescribed as it is for a re-sale under Rule 87.

In the case before us the delay of over two months was due to the District Munsif acting on the view that a fresh proclamation was necessary for the re-sale. The introduction of a needless formality no doubt accounts for the delay, but does not justify it, and an act so done cannot be regarded as done without avoidable delay. I am therefore of opinion that the sale which was held on the 5th November was not a sale held forthwith within the meaning of Rule 84.

If, then, there has been no compliance with the direction given in Rule 84, and the sale was not held forthwith, can the defaulting purchaser be held liable for the deficiency of the price under Rule 71? His liability for the deficiency of the price is a statutory one resting on Rule 84, read with Rule 71, and if Rule 84 has not been complied with, Rule 71 cannot be applied.

It is contended that the re-sale though not held in strict accordance with Rule 84, cannot be treated as a nullity, and that a further question will have to be considered whether the appellant has been materially prejudiced by the procedure adopted, and if that question is found in the negative, he should be held liable. In my opinion, such questions are irrelevant if it is found that the re-sale was made in plain violation of Rule 84.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and dismiss the respondent's (judgment-debtor's) application with costs throughout.

Beasley, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This Letters Patent Appeal comes before us on account of a difference of opinion between Jackson and Thiruvenkatachariar, JJ., upon one point.

The facts of the case are as follows:—The appellant bid at a Court sale, his bid was accepted, but he failed to pay the 25 per cent. deposit as is prescribed by Order 21, Rule 84, Civil Procedure Code. Having defaulted in the payment of the deposit, a fresh proclamation was issued and a re-sale of the property held. This sale resulted in a deficiency of Rs. 630 and the appellant was ordered under Order 21, Rule 71, Civil Procedure Code, to make good the deficiency. He objects to that order on the ground that the sale was not held 'forthwith' to use the word which appears in Order 21, Rule 84, Civil Procedure Code, which provides that upon failure of a bidder to pay the 25 per cent. deposit the property shall 'forthwith' be re-sold. The sale at which the appellant defaulted was held on the 1st September, 1923, and closed at 5 P.M. that day. The appellant, as before stated, failed to pay the 25 per cent. deposit; the next day and the day after that were holidays and on the 4th September a fresh proclamation was directed to be issued proclaiming the property for sale and the sale was held on the 5th November, 1923, and resulted, as before stated, in a deficiency.

The District Munsif, before whom the matter came, after going in detail into the facts and into the law, seems to us to have come to the conclusion that although a fresh proclamation was not obligatory, it was necessary in the interests of the defaulting bidder to proclaim the property again for sale. We may say at once that we think that in the interests of the defaulting bidder it was necessary for the property to be again proclaimed for sale. Had the property been put for sale on the 4th September, clearly there would have been no notice to prospective bidders and very likely no bidder would have attended the sale at all. In the Lower Appellate Court, however, the District Judge took the view that, where a bidder defaults in payment of the deposit, the property cannot be re-sold unless there has been a fresh proclamation of sale; and he held upon that basis that, as the sale of the property had to be freshly proclaimed, the sale had been held 'forthwith.'

When the matter came before Jackson and Thiruvengkatchariar, JJ., they agreed that a fresh proclamation is not necessary under such circumstances but disagreed on the question as to whether the property had been sold 'forthwith.' Jackson, J., took the view that although it was not obligatory to freshly proclaim the sale, nevertheless in the interests of the defaulting auction-bidder, it should be freshly proclaimed, that there had been no unnecessary delay and that the sale should be said to have been held 'forthwith'. He gave his understanding of the word 'forthwith' and rendered it as follows: "as expeditiously as circumstances permit"; and that in our view would be a good rendering of the word. It is very difficult to say how the word 'forthwith' should be defined; but we think that the rendering of it by Jackson, J., is probably as good a one as there can be and that "as expeditiously as circumstances permit" is probably the correct definition of that word. Another rendering might be 'such time as appears to be reasonably early having regard to all the circumstances.' Obviously in some cases it might reasonably be held that the re-sale should take place immediately following on the abortive sale. For instance, take the case of a sale of ten lots of property where the first lot is put up for auction, the bid of a bidder is accepted but he then and there defaults in payment of the deposit. Under those circumstances probably it could quite reasonably be held that the property should be sold 'forthwith' meaning that it should be sold then and there before the sale of other nine lots is proceeded with; but it must depend entirely upon the circumstances of each case.

In this case we think that although it was not obligatory for a fresh proclamation of sale to be issued, yet it was in the interests of the auction-bidder that there should be a fresh proclamation for sale; that being so, there was no unnecessary delay, and in these circumstances the sale can be said to have been held 'forthwith'. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed. No costs, as the respondent is unrepresented before us.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), Ss. 4 and 6—"Public purpose"—Provision of house-sites for Panchamas—Proviso to S. 6 not fulfilled—Objection before final declaration—Maintainability—Compensation "out of public revenue"—Payment of cost by grantees at a future date—Validity of declaration.

Provision of house-sites for Panchamas is a 'public purpose' within S. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act. Even if only a section of the public is benefited, still the purpose is a public one.

The validity of a declaration under S. 6, Sub-S. (1) cannot be called in question before the declaration is in fact made. To find out if the requirement of the proviso to S. 6 has been fulfilled, the Court should have regard to the state of things at the time of the declaration. Its validity cannot be made to depend upon some future contingent event.

Where the Government proposed to acquire house-sites by advancing 80 per cent. of the cost in the first instance and recover the same from the grantees of the sites in the course of the next twenty years,

Held, the condition in the proviso to S. 6 (1) was fulfilled.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam in Appeal Suit No. 154 of 1924, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Valangiman in Original Suit No. 133 of 1923.

The Government Pleader for appellants.

The Advocate-General (A. Krishnaswami Aiyar) for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The first question that arises is "whether the purpose in question is a 'public purpose' within the meaning of section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) as altered by the Amending Act (XXXVIII of 1923). So far, only a preliminary notification has been published under that section and the further stage of making the declaration under section 6 has not yet reached. The plaintiff says that the purpose is not a public one and that is made a ground on which the suit for injunction is made to rest. The notification issued under section 4, after referring to G.O. No. 3559, dated the 10th of November, 1917, says, that whereas it is intended to acquire the plots belonging to the plaintiff for Manaikats for Panchamas and other coolies, he should intimate to the officer specified, his objection, if any, within a certain stated time. The alleged public purpose stated in this notification is the provision of house-sites for Panchamas (persons of low castes) and other workmen. The subject of providing the Panchamas of Tanjore with house sites was examined by the Madras Government. An officer was placed on special duty to go into the question. He points out in his report the urgent necessity that exists for the Government providing Panchamas and other servants with houses. He describes the conditions in the district and shows that the houses in which the farm servants live are claimed by the landholders as their own, although the servants have been living in them for generations. He mentions that the disputes are carried to law courts, where, after unequal contests, the labourers are defeated. He further points out that the landholders contrive that the farm servants are for ever at their mercy and prevent their acquiring houses. These employers (says the report) sometimes adopt curious methods; they borrow petty sums of money from their own servants, on the security of the sites in which the latter live, thus making Panchama mortgagees recognise the right of the landholders to the sites mortgaged. This report was generally endorsed by the Collector, accepted by the Board of Revenue and ultimately by the Government. The Government thereupon passed the G.O. referred to above, which runs thus:

"The Government have considered the proposals of M.R.Ry. K. S. Srinivasa Achariar regarding the provision of house-sites and land for the Panchamas of the Tanjore District and accept his recommendation that an endeavour should be made to secure to them, as well as to other labourers, the ownership of the sites in which they live. They agree with the Deputy Collector that the most satisfactory method of attaining the object will be to acquire the sites under the Land Acquisition Act and to hand them over to the applicants on payment. The opportunity should also be taken to provide pathways to 'cheries' which may be surrounded by cultivation."

"Paragraph 32 (6).—The Government approve as a provisional measure the suggestion that applicants for sites should pay an initial

Secretary of State for India

Secretary of State for deposit of 20 per cent. of the cost of acquisition, and that the payment of the balance of the cost price of the site may be spread over a period of twenty years, recovery being effected in half-yearly or yearly instalments according to the convenience of the grantees. The rate of interest should be 7 per cent."

The question then is, is this a public purpose or not? The Government in order to remove the disabilities under which the depressed classes labour has undertaken to provide them with house-sites. The condition of the Panchamas calls for its intervention. The measures adopted, while directly benefiting the Panchamas, indirectly benefit the public at large. Even if only a section of the public is benefited, still the purpose is a public one. The expression includes a purpose in which the general interests of the community, as opposed to the particular interests of the individuals, is directly and vitally concerned. (See *Hamabai Framjee. v. Secretary of State for India*¹). If the purpose in question is not a public purpose, I fail to see what can possibly answer that description.

On behalf of the plaintiff, it is contended that the effect of the Government order is to enable it to acquire a particular house site for a particular individual. As the learned District Munsif has very clearly pointed out, this is a matter of detail, which does not affect the general question of the purpose being a public one. What the Government proposes is, to acquire the lands and once they are acquired, it may allot them in such manner as it pleases. But it is obviously the most sensible and convenient course to allot to each servant that particular house which he has been occupying. How this renders the purpose any the less a public one, I am unable to follow. The view taken by the Subordinate Judge is untenable, and must be rejected.

The next question that arises is, whether the proviso to section 6 (1) is fulfilled or not. It says that no declaration under that section shall be made unless inter alia the compensation to be awarded is to be paid wholly or partly out of public revenues. It seems to me in the first place that it is premature to raise this question. As I have said the proceedings have not gone further than the issue of the preliminary notification. The difference between section 4 and section 6 is that whereas the former section refers to land in a particular locality, the latter contemplates a particular land; and again, whereas under section 4, it must only appear to the Government that land is needed or likely to be needed for a public purpose, under section 6 it must be finally satisfied, that it is so needed. It is only when the second stage referred to in section 6 is reached, that the Government is to make a declaration as provided in that section. That declaration when made, the section goes on to enact, shall be conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose. The section further prescribes that no such declaration shall be made unless inter alia the compensation to be awarded is to be paid wholly or partly out of public revenues. It is the final declaration that can be called in question if this condition is not fulfilled. What the Government has so far done is, to merely outline its present intention in this respect. There is nothing to prevent it from changing its mind, and the point of time that matters is, the date of the declaration and not any earlier date. It has now notified that it proposes to advance out of public funds, 80 per cent. of the price, to be recovered in instalments in a period of 20 years. Having regard to the design of the Act, this must be deemed to be but a tentative proposal, which may or may not be adhered to, at the time when the final declaration is made. The decisions have held that it is open to a party to question the propriety of such a declaration, on the ground that the condition in question has not been satisfied. That right, therefore, a party may exercise after the declaration has actually been made. Thus, the suit is premature, in so far as it seems to question the propriety of the Government's action, on the ground that it offends against the proviso to section 6.

The
Secretary of State for India
v.
Gopala Aiyar

In any case, I am prepared to hold that the facts of this case bring it within the proviso. Only 20 per cent. of the cost is furnished by the future owners and the remaining 80 per cent. the Government provides in the first instance. Mr. Justice Sundaram Chetty in a case bearing on this very notification has held that the requirement of the proviso has been fulfilled. (See Secretary of State v. Murugesam.²) My reason for agreeing with his view is this. The validity of the declaration under section 6 cannot be made to depend upon some future contingent event. Supposing that, at the time of the declaration, the entire cost was met out of public funds, but ten years later, it was recovered from the party to whom the land was transferred, are the proceedings on that account to be held invalid? Again let us suppose, that initially the cost is wholly borne by the party himself, can it be held that the declaration is valid because, on a later date, the Government means to pay back the amount

The
Secretary of State for India
v.
Gopala Aiyar.

to the party? In each case, the answer is obviously in the negative. These considerations dispose me to the view, that what the Court in construing the proviso must have regard to is the state of things at the time of the declaration. A contrary view is bound to lead to inconvenient and absurd results. Though the wording of the proviso is unfortunately not explicit, the Courts must construe it reasonably. It is suggested for the Government that there is the possibility of its not recovering the 80 per cent. either wholly or in part. In my opinion, this is a factor that does not count. The section says that some portion of the cost must be paid out of the public revenue. That condition is here literally complied with. That is all with which the Court is concerned. On this point also, the view of the learned District Munsif is right and that of the Lower Court wrong.

In the result, the second appeal is allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

The East Indian possessions of France are not a “Foreign State” as defined in the Indian Extradition Act, 1903. The procedure to be observed in extradition proceedings between the British Indian Government and the authorities in the French Settlements in India is that prescribed by Art. 9 of the Treaty of 1815 between Great Britain and France, the legislative sanction for which has been provided by S. 18 of the Extradition Act.

Art. 9 of the Treaty of 1815 having provided for surrender on demand, a more elaborate procedure cannot be superimposed by the unilateral act of one of the High Contracting Parties. Nor is it open to a Municipal Court to say that the accused should in such cases be surrendered with a certain procedure.

ORDER. Wallace, J.—The point raised in this Criminal Revision Petition is of considerable importance, namely, what is the procedure to be observed in extradition proceedings between the British Government in India and the French Settlements in India.

Wallace, J.

The District Magistrate of South Arcot has, on a demand from the Governor of the French Settlement of Pondicherry and on information from him that judicial proceedings are pending in Pondicherry against two British subjects, arrested these two men and proposes to hand them over without further enquiry to the French authorities. The two arrested men have put in this petition alleging that the action of the District Magistrate is illegal, inasmuch as he has under the Extradition Act of 1903 no authority to deliver them up in this summary fashion, but must first hold an inquiry and satisfy himself that there is a prima facie case against them, as provided for in Chapter II of that Act. The learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Government contends that Chapter II of the Act has no bearing on the case, and that the case is governed by the provisions of and procedure indicated in Article 9 of the Treaty of 1815, the necessary legislative sanction for which has been provided by section 18 of the Extradition Act. The petitioners rejoin that section 18 has no application to cases where no procedure has been prescribed by the legislature, and that in any case its application is restricted to cases coming under Chapter III of the Act. They further urge that the extradition provision in the Treaty of 1815 had been abrogated by the Treaty of 1876 and by the English Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873. They argue further that any part of dependency of a Foreign State is for the purpose of the Indian Extradition Act a Foreign State to which Chapter II and not Chapter III will apply.

To take the last point first, a Foreign State is by definition in the Act a State to which the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 apply. Whether or not a part or dependency of a Foreign State is itself a Foreign State need not be decided here, since I am of opinion that in any case the East Indian Dependencies of France were expressly excluded from the Extradition Treaty of 1876, and, therefore, they are not States or parts of a State to which the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 apply. This is the view taken by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Rahamat Ali v. Emperor.¹ In a subsequent case in Calcutta, *In re Celeste Cullington*², a single Judge, Mr. Justice Buckland, differed, holding that Article 16 of the Treaty of 1876 does not exclude the East Indian Dependencies of France, but was intended to preserve the provision of the Treaty of 1815, and that the effect of the Order in Council of 16th May, 1878, was to put into operation as regards these Dependencies section 25 of the English Extradition Act, 1870. The learned Judge admitted that he had not then before him the exact terms of the Order in Council. That is a matter of regret since, if he had had these terms before him, I doubt, speaking with respect, if he would have differed from Rahamat Ali v. Emperor.¹ The concluding terms of the Order in Council are "that the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 shall after 31st May, 1878, apply in the case of the said Treaty," that is, the Treaty of 1876 "with the President of the French Republic." So that it is only in respect of that Treaty and not in respect of all Treaties then in force that these Extradition Acts apply; and unless that Treaty abrogated the Treaty of 1815 in respect of French Dependencies in East India, the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 do not apply to them, and they would, therefore, not be foreign States within the meaning of the Indian Extradition Act of 1903.

Article 16 of the Treaty of 1876 sets out "the manner of proceeding in the colonies and foreign possessions of the two High Contracting Parties," and ends up "the foregoing stipulations shall not in any way affect the arrangements established in the East Indian possessions of the two countries by the Article 9. of the Treaty of the 7th March, 1815."

2. (1920) I.L.R. 48 C. 328.

Now, as petitioners themselves argue, this Article 9 contains no procedure, strictly so called. Therefore, what the saving clause at the end preserves and intended to preserve, is the extradition "arrangements" provided by that Article. In other words that Article is in no way affected by Art. 16 of the Treaty of 1876, and extradition in the East Indian Possessions of the two countries remains governed by the Treaty of 1815. This is the view which has been taken of this clause both in *Rahamat Ali v. Emperor*¹ and In re Celeste Cullington.²

Muthu Redoi,
In re.
Wallace, J.

The petitioners urge that, as Article 9 of the Treaty of 1815 provides no procedure, it is in effect unenforceable. This argument I do not follow. If that Treaty provided no procedure such as was provided by the prior Treaty of 1802 or by the subsequent Treaty of 1876, that is a clear indication that the High Contracting Parties did not agree upon or intend that there should be any formal procedure for extradition. I do not follow the argument that the Treaty cannot be brought into operation until the Legislature has provided and sanctioned a procedure. That would obviously be exceeding its province. The Legislature can only sanction a procedure if the Treaty provides for one. The procedure must be found or provided for in the Treaty itself before any Legislature of either party can legislate about it. The Legislature cannot alter either by addition or subtraction the essentials of a Treaty which is the contract between the High Contracting Parties or impose upon one party conditions which do not form part of that contract. That would be tantamount to the subjects of one High Contracting Party forcing on its own Government a breach of the Treaty, or making it impossible for its own Government to keep its pledged word with the other party. See The Queen v. Wilson.³ Section 18 of the Indian Extradition Act lays down that nothing in this chapter, that is Chapter III, shall derogate from the provisions of any Treaty. That is, it incorporates in effect the provisions of such Treaty in the Municipal Courts of India. When, therefore, the Treaty says that offenders shall be extradited on demand, it is not open to a Municipal Court to say that they shall not be delivered up until some form of procedure initiated, prescribed and sanctioned by itself alone and not agreed upon by the High Contracting Parties is satisfied. There is, on this finding, no point here in emphasising that section 18 of the Extradition Act refers to Chapter III alone, since, as already pointed out, the French Possessions in India are not a Foreign State, and, therefore, Chapter III is the only one which would apply to the present case.

Muthu Reddi,

Article 9 of the Treaty of 1815 which is, therefore, in my view the provision to be followed contemplates summary delivery at the request of any authority of either High Contracting Party. That is the view which the Local Government itself has taken of its obligations as set out in the Extradition Manual, Chapter III, section 2 (a), and I think we may assume that that is the view authorised by the High Contracting Party from whom this Government derives this authority. The procedure in the Manual, however, seems to be regarded as applicable to the case of "grave" offences, and neither side has been able to point us to any orders of Government under which the general provision of Article 9 of the Treaty of 1815 has been so restricted. This question, however, does not arise here as theft is a "grave" offence. I find, therefore, that there is no substance in this petition and it is dismissed.

The collateral petition (Cr. M. P. No. 133 of 1930) put in under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code must also fail since the detention of the petitioners is not illegal or improper; and it is also dismissed.

Jackson, J.

Jackson, J.—I agree.

Under the Indian Act (XV of 1903) a Foreign State means a State to which the English Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 apply. The main Act is that of 1870. (Vol. I, p. 443, Coll. Stat.) As provided in section 2 of that Act the application of that Act to any Foreign State shall be by Order in Council. If the Order in Council has not applied the Act to French Possessions in India, the Act does not apply and these Possessions are not a Foreign State as defined in the Indian Act (XV of 1903).

The Order in Council applied the Act not generally to France, but in a restricted sense "in the case of the Treaty with the President of the French Republic." This is the Treaty of 1876 which in terms does not affect the arrangements in the East Indian Possessions of the two countries (Art. 16). Therefore the Extradition Act of 1870 has not been applied to that part of France which is Pondicherry and Pondicherry is not a Foreign State.

Therefore, Chapter III of the Indian Act (XV of 1903), "Surrender in case of States other than Foreign States," applies to Pondicherry. Section 18, falling within Chapter III, expressly preserves the provisions of any Treaty for the extradition of offenders, and its procedure. This makes the provision of the Treaty of 1815 applicable to the present case, and gives statutory sanction to its procedure. There is, therefore, no room for an argument that the Treaty cannot affect individual rights in the absence of statutory sanction.

Buckland, J., in In re Celeste Cullington,² says, "By an Order in Council, dated 16th May, 1878, the Extradition Acts were made applicable to France." It is here that with all respect I differ from him. I should have agreed, if the Order in Council stated "in the case of France" instead of "in the case of the said Treaty".

I agree that as the Treaty of 1815 practically provides for surrender on demand, a more elaborate procedure cannot be superimposed by the unilateral act of one of the parties.

If a statement is to be relied upon as an admission the whole statement must be taken.

The Mahant of Muth Sainwal in an application made by him called the Sainwal Gadi "Gadi Sainwal Kotha Koh Kerana," Koh Kerana being another muth. In the same application, however, there was a definite assertion that Sainwal was a Gadi, and the person making the statement the Gadinashin, Mahant.

The High Court, translating "Kotha" in the application as "granary" or "treasury," regarded the statement as an admission by the Mahant of Sainwal that Sainwal was nothing more than a part of the institution of Koh Kerana.

Held, that the statement in the application must be taken as a whole, and that, if that was done, there was no such admission as that inferred by the High Court.

There is no rule precluding a mahant of an independent muth from claiming to succeed to the Gadi of another independent and separate muth.

Appeal No. 44 of 1929 from a decree of the High Court, Allahabad, dated the 19th April, 1927, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 14th May, 1924, and decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The material facts of the case are sufficiently fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

Hyam for appellant.

De Gruyther, K.C. and Wallach for respondents.

Hyam for appellant.—The plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title. The custom alleged in the plaint was not established. Assuming the defendant is a trespasser, the plaintiff cannot dispossess him unless he proves a better right.

De Gruyther, K.C. and Wallach for respondents.—We have proved by the evidence on the record that the plaintiff No. 1 as the mahant of the parent gadi at Koh Kerana, was entitled to nominate a successor to the deceased Mahant. The plaintiff-respondent No. 2 was duly installed as mahant of the Jogiwarra at Hardwar. The custom set up by us is consistent with the general custom and the law of succession obtaining among the sects of Jogishwars.

20th May, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir George
Lowndes.

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—The question in this appeal is as to the right to appoint a successor to one Kan Das, the bairagi mahant of a muth in Hardwar, who died in 1923, leaving no chela and having made no appointment to the gadi. On his death the appellant took possession of the muth, claiming to be entitled thereto as the mahant of a neighbouring institution at Sainwal from which he asserts the Hardwar muth was founded. The moveable property was locked up in a room by the police. The respondents then came forward with a rival claim as representing another muth at Koh Kerana. The matter was investigated by the Sub-divisional Magistrate, who held that the appellant had made out a prima facie title to the succession, but ordered the moveables to be kept under lock and seal for a further period of six weeks to enable the respondents to take proceedings in the Civil Court, failing which the property was to be made over to the appellant, who was left in possession of the immoveable property valued at between two and three lakhs of rupees. The respondents thereupon filed the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur claiming a declaration of their title to and possession of the muth and property, upon the allegation that the first respondent as the mahant of Koh Kerana had the right of appointment to Hardwar, and that he had appointed his own chela, the second respondent, as the successor of the deceased Kan Das.

It is admitted by counsel for the respondents that under these circumstances the burden was upon them to establish the right they claimed, and their Lordships have no doubt that this is so.

Reliance was placed in the plaint upon a deed of appointment, executed in the interval between the Magistrate's order above referred to and the institution of the suit, by which a number of persons describing themselves as "mahants, santans and jogis" purported to appoint the second respondent to the vacant gadi with the consent of the first respondent, but no reliance has been placed on this document before their Lordships. It seems, indeed, to be inconsistent with the contention to which the respondents now pin their faith, namely, that the right of appointment lies solely with the mahant of Koh Kerana.

It is common ground that the Hardwar gadi was established in or about the year 1818, and that the first mahant was one Ottam Das, to whom Kan Das was according to one account the third, and according to another the fourth successor. Ottam Das was the chela of Godha Das who was the chela of Pir Sukol, the then mahant of Koh Kerana, a muth which though itself the offshoot of another and older muth at Tila, was an institution of considerable antiquity.

In his preliminary examination by the Trial Judge, the second respondent admitted that if the mahant of a subordinate gadi dies without leaving a chela, the "Sadar gadi" (i.e., the superior institution) has power to appoint a mahant to the subordinate gadi or to manage it himself. He also admitted that "if any other gadi sends its disciple and establishes an 'asthan' (i.e., an institution of this nature) at any place, and that disciple dies without leaving a disciple, the mahant who sent his disciple and established the asthan shall be entitled to manage that asthan or to appoint any person thereto." These statements were reaffirmed by the second respondent in his subsequent deposition before the Court.

It is clear, therefore, that what the respondents had to prove was that the Hardwar muth was the immediate offshoot of Koh Kerana, and the real question in the case is whether Godha Das, whose chela was the first mahant of Hardwar, was himself a mahant at Sainwal, and so intermediate between Koh Kerana and Hardwar.

The respondents alleged in their plaint, and it has been their case before this Board, that Sainwal is not a gadi at all but is merely a subordinate "kotha," i.e., the granary, or possibly the treasury, of Koh Kerana. The Subordinate Judge, before whom the suit was tried, in a careful judgment, came to the conclusion that this was not established, and that there was no direct link of any kind between Koh Kerana and Hardwar. He held on the evidence that Ottam Das, the first mahant of Hardwar, was the chela of Godha Das, the mahant of Sainwal; that Hardwar always remained subordinate to Sainwal, and that the right of management of Hardwar, on the mahant of that institution dying without a chela, belonged to Sainwal. He accordingly dismissed the respondents' suit. On appeal the High Court came to the opposite conclusion and made a decree declaring the right of the second respondent to the management of the Hardwar property and ordering possession to be given to him.

After perusal of the evidence recorded their Lordships have no doubt that the respondents have failed to establish that Sainwal, from which it is clear that Hardwar was founded, was merely a kotha of Koh Kerana and, therefore, that the necessary link between that muth and the Hardwar muth is not made out.

It has hardly been disputed before the Board that Sainwal is now, at all events, a muth of which the appellant is the recognised mahant, and there appears to have been a regular succession in respect of the property there from Godha Das downwards. How this could be if Sainwal was merely the "kotha"—whatever may be the true implication of that term—of Koh Kerana, has not been explained.

As far back as 1864, long before the present dispute arose, Santok Das, the predecessor of Kan Das, in proceedings in the Criminal Court at Saharanpur referred to Ram Das the guru and predecessor of the appellant as the "Sajjadanashin of Sainwal" (a title admittedly equivalent to gadinashin or mahant), and gave his spiritual pedigree from Godha Das. In 1875, on the death of Shanker Das, of Koh Kerana, Ram Das describing himself as "Gadinashin of Kotha Sainwal," laid claim to the Koh Kerana gadi. His claim was dismissed, but from the judgment in the case, which is part of the present record, it does not appear to have been disputed that he was the then de facto gadinashin of Sainwal, and what is almost more suggestive still, the judgment refers to a similar claim which had been made by his guru and predecessor Pir Ganesh Das, "Gadinashin of Sainwal." In 1895 Ram Das instituted a suit against one Narotam Das in connection with the Sainwal property. In this suit he deposed to the history of the Sainwal muth as founded by Godha Das, and said that he had been on the Gadi for 50 years. There was no suggestion in his cross-examination that Sainwal was not a muth at all but merely part and parcel of Koh Kerana. The Koh Kerana mahant was not a party to this suit, but he can hardly have been ignorant of it if Ram Das was really only a subordinate official of his muth, and the deposition is put in evidence in the present suit by the respondents. This deposition, taken in conjunction with the 1875 judgment above referred to, makes it abundantly clear that Sainwal had at least claimed to be a gadi from the time of Ganesh Das some time prior to 1845 or 1846. No attempt seems to have been made by Koh Kerana to refute or even to dispute the pretences of Sainwal, or to assert what is now claimed on their behalf that Sainwal was not and never had been anything but an integral part of Koh Kerana, and this is the more remarkable in view of the obvious hostility between the two institutions.

Their Lordships do not think it necessary to go further into the documentary evidence in this case or to deal with the oral evidence which is, as might be expected, contradictory and of little real weight. It is sufficient to say that counsel for the respondents has been unable to point to any evidence of direct connection between Koh Kerana and Hardwar during the course of more than a century, whether by way of pecuniary assistance, selection or appointment of a mahant, or even consultation on the affairs of the muth.

The learned Judges of the High Court before whom the appeal came founded their judgment in favour of the respondent.

ents largely upon the fact that the appellant, in his application to the magistrate shortly after the death of Kan Das, calls the Sainwal Gadi "Gadi Sainwal Kotha Koh Kerana," and translating "kotha" as "granary" or "treasury," they regard this as an admission that Sainwal was nothing more than a part of the institution of Koh Kerana. They also rely upon the statement of Ram Das in the proceedings of 1895-6 in which he refers to "Kotha" Sainwal having been founded by Godha Das, as an "admission" by him to the same effect, and upon his description of himself as "Baba" Ram Das, instead of "Mahant," which they say "has some significance." Their Lordships are not impressed by this reasoning. If a statement is to be relied upon as an admission the whole statement must be taken, and in each of the cases to which the learned Judges refer it is clear that there was a definite assertion that Sainwal was a gadi, and the person making the statement the gadinashin, which is admitted to be the equivalent of mahant. It may well have been that the building in which the Sainwal Gadi was originally established was a "kotha" of Koh Kerana, and that the title of the gadi had its origin in this. But if the burden of proving that Koh Kerana was the immediate founder of the Hardwar muth is upon the respondents, as it admittedly is, their Lordships cannot think that it has been discharged by inferences of this nature.

The learned Judges also held that "the very fact that Ram Das claimed to succeed to the mahantship of Koh Kerana goes to show" that he could not have been at that time the mahant of Sainwal, for "a mahant of an independent muth could not claim to succeed to the gadi of another independent and separate muth." It is not stated upon what this dictum is founded, and no attempt has been made to support it before this Board. Nor, in their Lordships' opinion, could Sainwal be regarded as "independent" of Koh Kerana. It was founded from Koh Kerana by a chela of the Koh Kerana mahant, and was clearly, therefore, subordinate to it in the sense in which this term has been used throughout the case.

Their Lordships do not, however, desire to criticise the judgment of the High Court in detail. For the reasons already given they think that the respondents have failed to establish the right that they have claimed in this litigation and that their suit must be dismissed. Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and that the decree of the High Court should be set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. The plaintiff-respondents must pay the costs both in the High Court and before this Board.

Where there is a custom to relieve the tenant of rent in respect of land allowed to lie fallow, the custom is one of the conditions under which the ryot holds his land within the meaning of S. 27 of the Madras Estates Land Act, and the operation of S. 4 of the Act is restricted to the extent to which the tenant by the custom is relieved of his rent.

Where the landlord alleged that, in order to determine what was his proportion of the produce of a crop, he had a right to harvest himself a section of the field by way of experiment and to have provisions in regard to it inserted in the puttah, held, that the claim of the landlord to have inserted in the puttah any provision entitling him to make such an experimental harvesting as was suggested was contrary to the provisions of S. 73 of the Estates Land Act.

Without examining the decree actually passed the true effect of the decision in the case cannot be ascertained.

...It is impossible for the Privy Council to vary a decree the contents of which have not been placed before it, and are not known with certainty.

In an appeal to the Privy Council from the decree in a second appeal, held, that the finding of fact of the first Appellate Court as to the existence of a custom was binding upon the Privy Council.

v.

The facts of the case are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

De Gruyther, K.C. and Narasimham for appellant.

Subbarow for respondents.

30th May, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord Tomlin.

LORD TOMLIN.—Their Lordships need not trouble the respondents' counsel.

This is an appeal which deals with the settlement of puttahs under the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908).

Before the subject-matter of the appeal is dealt with one preliminary observation can properly be made. This litigation has lasted from 1909 until the present time. Partly no doubt on this account the record has assumed substantial proportions. Their Lordships are indebted to Mr. De Gruyther for the lucid and concise way in which he has presented the case to them, thereby, in their Lordships' opinion, saving a great deal of public time.

Now, under the Act in question, where a difference arises between the landholder and the ryot as to the form which the puttah should take, procedure is provided by which the difference can be determined by the Collector. Sections 55, 56 and 57 of the Act contain the relevant provisions.

Section 55 relates to the case where the landholder fails to grant a puttah in such terms as the ryot is entitled to. There the ryot can sue for the proper puttah before the Collector.

Under section 56 when the ryot fails to accept the puttah tendered to him and to give a muchilika in exchange, the landholder may sue before the Collector to enforce the acceptance of such puttah.

Section 57 provides as follows:—

"In adjudicating suits under sections 55 and 56, the Collector shall first inquire whether the party sued is bound to grant or accept a puttah, and, unless this be proved, the suit shall be dismissed. If the plaintiff establishes that the party sued is bound to grant or accept a puttah, the Collector shall inquire whether the puttah demanded or tendered is a proper one. If it is found to be so, the Collector shall pass a decree directing the defendant to grant the puttah in exchange for a muchilika or accept the puttah and give muchilika in exchange. If the Collector is of opinion that the puttah demanded or tendered is not a proper one, he shall decide what the terms of the puttah should be, and shall embody such terms in his decree which shall be of the same force and effect as if a puttah and muchilika had been exchanged."

Under the procedure of the sections referred to these proceedings were launched. They came before the Special Deputy Collector. From him they passed to the District Judge. From the District Judge they proceeded to the High Court. Ultimately they are here before His Majesty in Council.

P. C.
Raja
of Ramnad
v.
Mangalam.
Lord Tomlin.

Now, six points have been placed before their Lordships by Mr. De Gruyther on behalf of the landholder as matters in respect of which he desires to complain of the conclusion reached by the High Court.

The first point is one which deals with the rent which the tenant has to pay in the case where he omits to cultivate some part of the land, that is, leaves it to lie fallow. Upon the puttah as actually framed in accordance with the conclusions of the Court below, the tenant is excused rent if the land is allowed to lie fallow.

The point turns upon the construction of sections 4 and 27 of the Act.

Section 4 of the Act is in these terms:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, a landholder is entitled to collect rent in respect of all ryoti land in the occupation of a ryot."

Section 27 provides:

"If a question arises as to the amount of rent payable by a ryot or the conditions under which he holds in any revenue year, he shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, to hold at the same rate and under the same conditions as in the last preceding revenue year."

In India it has been held that where there is a custom by which the tenant is relieved of rent in the case of land allowed to lie fallow, the custom is one of the conditions under which the tenant holds within the meaning of section 27, and that section 4, which entitles the landholder to collect rent in respect of all ryoti lands, is restricted in its operation by the existence of such a custom.

The District Judge in the present case has held that there was a custom to relieve the tenant of rent in respect of land allowed to lie fallow. Their Lordships are bound by the finding of fact of the District Judge as regards the existence of the custom.

In their Lordships' view, the custom is one of the conditions under which the ryot holds his land within the meaning of section 27 of the Act, and the operation of section 4 is restricted to the extent to which the tenant by the custom is relieved of his rent. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that

P. C.
 Raja
 of Ramnad
 v.
 Mangalam.
 ———
 Lord Tomlin.

there is no ground upon which the decision of the Courts below on this point can be interfered with.

The second point arises in this way: The land, the subject of the tenure, falls into two categories known as dry land and wet land, respectively. The rent fixed for wet land is a proportion of the produce paid in kind. The rent in respect of dry land is a rate paid in cash proportionate to the yield of the first and second crops. There are cases where wet land may be cultivated for dry crops, either because the water in the tank is not available or possibly at the caprice of the tenant, and the question is what rate the tenant should pay by way of rent in respect of any wet land which he cultivates dry.

Now, the Collector held that

"In adverse seasons, when a dry crop is raised for want of sufficient supply in the tank, the charge of sara sari will be improper and only varam is then payable as wet land pays rent in kind."

Their Lordships understand this to mean that where some part of the wet land is cultivated dry by reason of insufficiency of water, it would be improper to charge for that portion which is cultivated dry a rent based on the value of the share of average produce attributable to the landholder arising from the land cultivated wet; and that the proper rent payable in those circumstances is the landholder's proportion in kind of the actual crop raised.

When the matter came before the District Judge he said this (page 134 of the record):—

"It is objected before me that the tenants never raised the contention that dry crops should be specially treated if the water supply was insufficient. The Deputy Collector in his judgment himself states that the plaintiffs' pleader did not object to paying sara sari for dry crops on nanja land." [That is wet land.] "I must uphold the contention of the appellant that in these circumstances it was not open to the Deputy Collector to decree any special rate when there was an insufficiency of water in the tank. Sara sari will, therefore, be allowed to be levied whenever dry crops are raised on nanja land without permission."

That is to say, his conclusion is that the tenant raising by reason of insufficiency of water dry crops on wet land has got to pay in cash the value of the landholder's proportion of the produce based upon the average production of the wet lands.

Then on page 159 of the record there is to be found the High Court's conclusion upon this matter:—

"It is difficult to see on what principle the tenant should pay 'wet sara sari' if, owing to want of water in the tank, he is unable to raise a wet crop. The effect of the District Judge's judgment will be to compel the tenant either to leave the land waste when there is insufficiency of water or to penalise him if he raises a dry crop as the only possible means of raising something on the land. It stands to reason that if a tenant, having water in the tank and, therefore, means of raising a wet crop, chooses to raise a dry crop, this should not affect the right of the landlord to charge wet rates but where, owing to want of water, a wet crop could not be raised, there is no reason why the landlord should still be entitled to charge wet sara sari rates. We vary the decree of the District Judge by declaring that plaintiffs will be liable to pay sara sari wet rates if they raise dry crops while they could have raised wet crops and do pay the usual dry rates if they raised dry crops owing to insufficiency of water."

Lord Tomlin.

Now, it is said that the effect of that is not to restore the Special Deputy Collector's judgment, but to introduce a variation and to make the tenant where water is insufficient liable to pay for dry crops raised on wet lands only some rate in cash which has reference to the rates paid on dry lands. Without examining the decree actually passed the true effect of the decision cannot be ascertained.

The only decree of the High Court, printed in the record, does not deal with the point; as there were several suits, the matter may have been dealt with in some other decree, but their Lordships remain uninformed as to its contents. The appellant has failed to print it in his record or place it before the Board, and it is impossible for this Board to vary a decree the contents of which have not been placed before it, and are not known with certainty.

In these circumstances, in their Lordships' opinion, the appeal on this point must fail.

The third point is this: Apparently, it is the practice sometimes of landholders, in order to determine what is their proportion of the produce of a crop to harvest themselves a section of the field by way of experiment, and then to require the tenant to hand over produce in regard to the whole field upon the basis of what the yield of the particular section harvested by the landholder has been.

In this case the landholder claimed that that was a right which he had, and that provisions in regard to it ought to be inserted in the puttah. The Collector and the District Judge both refused to insert it, and the High Court at page 154 of the record said this:—

"It is difficult to see what right the landlord has under the Act to enter upon the land of the tenant for the purpose of making what has been described by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar as an experimental harvest. The object seems to be to arrive at an arbitrary figure by harvesting a small portion of the crops and to throw upon the tenant the burden of showing that the actual crop was not equal to the experimental harvest. We are of opinion that such a right is clearly opposed to the provisions of section 73

P. C.
Raja
 of Ramnad
 v.
Mangalam.
 Lord Tomlin.

of the Act and that both the Lower Courts were right in disallowing this claim."

Now, section 73 of the Act provides that:—

"(1) Where rent is taken by appraisement of the standing crop, the ryot shall be entitled to the exclusive possession of the crop. (2) Where rent is taken by division of the produce, the ryot shall be entitled to the exclusive possession of the whole produce until it is divided, but shall not be entitled to remove any portion of the produce from the threshing-floor at such a time or in such a manner as to prevent the due division thereof at the proper time. (3) In either case, the ryot shall be entitled to cut and harvest the produce in due course of husbandry without any interference on the part of the landholder. But before commencing to cut or gather the crop the ryot shall give reasonable intimation to the landholder or his authorized agent of his intention to do so."

In their Lordships' judgment the claim of the landlord to have inserted in the puttah any provision entitling him to make such an experimental harvesting as is suggested is contrary to the provisions of the section which has been read. The appeal on this head fails.

The next question relates to the tax or rent to be paid by the tenant to the landholder in respect of palmyra trees. The Collector and the District Judge have arrived at certain findings of fact in regard to palmyra trees, and they are these: That in two villages certain trees have been subjected to rent or tax, namely, 102 trees in one village, and 2 in another, but apart from those trees in those two villages, there has been no rent or tax paid in respect of any palmyra tree.

Section 12 of the Act provides that:—

"Subject to any rights which by custom or by contract in writing executed by any ryot before the passing of this Act are reserved to the landholder, every occupancy ryot shall have the right to use, enjoy and cut down all trees now in his holding, and in the case of trees which after the passing of this Act may be planted by the ryot or which may naturally grow upon the holding, he shall have the right to use, enjoy and cut them down, notwithstanding any contract or custom to the contrary."

Now, having regard to that section, it appears to their Lordships plain that the tenant is entitled to the trees unless in case of trees planted before the passing of the Act there is established any custom or contract in writing which limits his right. The finding of the District Judge, by which this Board is bound, is in effect that there is no custom or contract in writing for payment of rent or tax on palmyra trees except in so far as there has been a custom to pay rent or tax upon specific trees, namely, the 102 trees in one village and the 2 trees in another. In these circumstances, the appeal from that conclusion which has been affirmed by the High Court is, in their Lordships' opinion, hopeless.

Then the fifth point relates to temple service. The claim of the landholder is that certain temple service has been rendered from time to time by the tenants, and that they have rendered it as a condition of their tenure. The Collector and the District Judge have found that in fact, although service has been rendered from time to time by tenants, it is not proved that that service was rendered as a condition of their tenure, the evidence being consistent with that service having been rendered as voluntary service. This finding is conclusive.

In these circumstances, in their Lordships' opinion, the appeal on this point also fails.

The last point is upon the form of the decree. It arises in this way: the tenants sometimes cultivate part of the bed of the tanks where the tanks have in part run dry. The High Court has in its judgment at page 158 of the record said this: "We are of opinion that the plaintiff is bound to pay sara sari if he should put up ridges and cultivate kulamkorvai lands"—that is lands in the beds of tanks.

Now, that is a decision in favour of the landholder. Against that the landholder naturally does not appeal, and there is no appeal on the part of the tenant; but the landholder says that when you turn to the actual decree, you find a divergence between the language of the decree and the language of the judgment. The language of the decree is to be found at page 161 of the record, and it is in these terms:—

"that for clause 4 in the Lower Appellate Court's decree, the following clause, namely, 'that the tenants are liable to pay sara sari, if they should put up ridges and cultivate kulamkorvai lands with the aid of either rain water or tank water' be inserted therein."

It will be observed that the words "with the aid of either rain water or tank water" are words which do not appear in the judgment and it is said that they in some way alter the sense, and that the decree diverges from the judgment.

In their Lordships' opinion, in the absence of any light as to what is the effect of those added words, it is impossible for them to come to the conclusion that the decree is in any way erroneous. But they do not intend by saying that to preclude the appellant, if so advised, from making any application which may be open to him in India to have the decree corrected if, in fact, there is any error in the decree, having regard to the terms of the judgment.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 11—Title to land—Estoppel under S. 116, Evidence Act—Decree declaring A's title to land as against B based on—Expiry of lease—B's suit for declaration of title to same land as against A after—Maintainability.

The appellant was one of the four children of one S. V., who had died intestate. In an ejectment suit the first respondent sought to obtain a decree of ejectment against the appellant, the widow of S.V., and the three other children of S.V. The 1st respondent, whose title to the suit land was derived under a conveyance to him by the widow (and executrix) of S.V., had granted a lease to the appellant of the said land, upon which he and the other defendants were residing. That suit went up on appeal to the Privy Council. The Board was of opinion that the conveyance by the widow operated to pass to the 1st respondent only her interest as widow in the said land, and not the beneficial interests of the children, but that the appellant was estopped, under S. 116 of the Evidence Act, from denying the title of the 1st respondent as regards his (appellant's) own share of the suit land. The Board accordingly passed a decree declaring that the 1st respondent was entitled to a quarter of two-thirds (or a one-sixth share) of the land sued for.

The appellant sued subsequently to obtain a decision that the one-sixth share so declared by the Board to be the property of the 1st respondent was his (appellant's) property, not by any title acquired by him subsequently to the date of the Board's decision, but by virtue of a title existing in him as one of the children of the intestate. He claimed that the estoppel under S. 116, which prevented him from asserting his title in the ejectment action, was temporary only, and ceased to operate when he gave up possession of the land and when his tenancy accordingly came to an end. He claimed that being no longer estopped under S. 116, he was entitled to assert and obtain a declaration of his ownership, and that the matter was not res judicata.

Held, overruling the appellant's contention, that the subsequent suit was barred under S. 11, Civil Procedure Code, because the judgment of the Board in the prior suit had, in clear and unambiguous language, determined finally and conclusively the ownership of the share claimed by the appellant in the subsequent suit.

Appeal No. 48 of 1929 from the decree of the High Court, Rangoon, dated the 19th June, 1928, affirming a decree of the District Court of Insein, dated the 8th March, 1928.

The material facts of the case are set out in their Lordships' present judgment and in the previous judgment of the Board, delivered on the 31st March, 1927, and reported in Vertannes v. Robinson.¹

After the Board's judgment in the previous suit, the present appellant Vertannes made an application to the Judicial Committee for the addition to their judgment of some words to make it clear that the Board was only deciding that the then plaintiff, Robinson, as landlord was entitled to eject J. A. Vertannes as tenant and were not deciding that he (Vertannes) was not at the date of the application entitled to assert his title as one of the next of kin of his father to recover his share from the then plaintiff (Robinson). The Judicial Committee on the 1st July, 1927, dismissed this application giving thereon the following judgment (delivered by Lord Phillimore):—

"One of the issues to be determined in this case was: Are the defendants or any of them estopped from disputing the plaintiff's title by the provisions of sections 115 and 116 of the Evidence Act. Their Lordships thought it unnecessary to decide whether the present petitioner was estopped under section 115 because they thought he was estopped under section 116."

"It is now submitted that he was only partially or temporarily estopped by virtue of the language of the section. That amounts really to an argument of bad grammar. The section is perfectly clear. Their Lordships are going to omit the immaterial words of the section: No tenant of immoveable property shall, during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had at the beginning of the tenancy a title to such immoveable property. Now what is he not to be permitted to deny? That the landlord had at the beginning of the tenancy a title to such immoveable property. When is he not permitted to deny? During the continuance of the tenancy. It so happens that during the continuance of the tenancy this litigation arose and was brought to hearing and a decision. During that time the tenant, as he had not given up the property, could not deny the landlord's title . . . could not deny that the landlord had a title when he made him his tenant. He could have denied the landlord had kept the title; he could not deny that he did not, and as this point happened to arise during the continuance of the tenancy it had to be decided in one way and one way only, namely, that the landlord had the title because the man who was trying to dispute it could not deny that he had."

In the course of his judgment in the present appeal, Mr. Justice Das in the High Court, Rangoon, observed as follows:—

"It is argued before us that the plaintiff was not absolutely concluded by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the other suit and that the plaintiff could file a suit on his title after the tenancy between him and Robinson had terminated. . . . Their Lordships did not use any words limiting the estoppel in any way. If they had meant that the plaintiff could file another suit after the termination of the tenancy they would surely have used the words to that effect, and it seems to us that the tenant is concluded for ever from filing a suit on his title if the suit is filed during the continuance of the tenancy. . . . If their Lordships had intended to leave it open to the 1st defendant in that suit to file another suit after the termination of the tenancy, they would simply have passed a decree for ejectment against him and not passed a decree declaring that the plaintiff in that suit was entitled to the share of the present plaintiff and would not have given liberty to the parties in that suit to apply for partition. There can be no doubt that their Lordships intended to and did decide finally on the rights of the parties to that suit in that land. It will be absurd to hold that their Lordships intended to allow one of the parties in that suit to file another suit on his title after having finally declared that the plaintiff in that suit was entitled to his share of the property."

Dunne, K. C. and Raikes, K.C. for appellant.

H. G. Vaisey, K.C. and A. Pennell for 1st respondent (Robinson).

Dunne, K.C. for appellant.—In the previous suit the title of the present appellant, Vertannes, was not directly in issue, and he is not precluded by the rule of res judicata from asserting title after he has ceased to be tenant and given up possession of the property. The rule is well established that as soon as a tenant surrenders possession, he can question the landlord's title (*Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh*²).

Vaisey, K.C. for respondent (Robinson).—Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code operates as a bar to the present suit. The previous judgment of the Board clearly declares that the then plaintiff Robinson was "entitled" to the share of J. A. Vertannes. Your Lordships cannot now go beyond that declaration.

During the course of the argument, the following decisions were cited at the Bar:—

21st March, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.—The matter under appeal before their Lordships is a decree, dated the 19th June, 1928, of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, affirming a decree of the District Court of Insein, dated the 8th March, 1928. The last-mentioned decree dismissed, on a preliminary issue, a suit brought by the appellant to establish against the first respondent his title as absolute owner to a quarter of two-thirds (or an undivided one-sixth share) in certain lands. The appellant claimed to be entitled to such share as one of the four children of Sarkies Vertannes who had died intestate as to the land on the 18th May, 1897.

Lord Russell.

The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the ground that a judgment of this Board on appeal in a suit to which the present appellant and first respondent were parties, had finally dealt with the question of the ownership of the said share. The High Court affirmed this dismissal on the same grounds.

The said judgment of the Board was delivered on the occasion of an appeal in an ejectment suit in which the present first respondent (hereinafter called Robinson) sought as owner of the said land to obtain a decree of ejectment against the present appellant (hereinafter called Vertannes), the three other children and the widow of the said Sarkies Vertannes. Robinson, whose title to the land was derived under a conveyance to him by the widow (and executrix) of Sarkies Vertannes, had granted a lease to Vertannes of the said land, upon which he and the other defendants were residing.

The Board was of opinion that the conveyance by the widow operated to pass to Robinson only her interest as widow in one-third of the said land, and not the beneficial interests of the children. As regards the four children, Robinson contended that as against them his title was complete by estoppel under section 115 of the Evidence Act, and that in any event as regards the share of Vertannes, Vertannes being his tenant was estopped under section 116 of the Evidence Act.

The Board held that as regards the children, other than Vertannes, no case of estoppel under section 115 had been established; and that as regards Vertannes, he being clearly estopped under section 116, their Lordships were relieved from the necessity of considering whether he might also be held estopped under section 115. Their Lordships humbly recommended His Majesty that the judgments of the District Judge and of the High Court should be discharged and that in lieu thereof Robinson should have a decree for ejectment against Vertannes and the widow, and that it be declared that Robinson was entitled to one-third and one-quarter of the remaining two-thirds of the property in suit; and that the three children, other than Vertannes, were each entitled to one-quarter of the two-thirds, with liberty to Robinson or to any of the last-mentioned three children to apply for a partition.

Vertannes seeks by his present suit to obtain a decision that the one-quarter of two-thirds so declared by this Board to be the property of Robinson is the property of Vertannes, not by any title acquired by him subsequently to the date of the Board's decision, but by virtue of a title then existing in him as one of the children of the intestate. He claims that the estoppel under section 116, which prevented him from asserting his title in the ejectment action, was temporary only, and ceased to operate when he gave up possession of the land and when his tenancy accordingly came to an end. He claims that being no longer estopped under section 116, he is now entitled to assert and obtain a declaration of his ownership, and that the matter is not res judicata.

In view of the wording of the previous judgment of this Board in the ejectment action, their Lordships are unable to accede to these contentions. The language is clear and unambiguous, and according to its tenor the judgment of this Board purported to determine finally and conclusively the ownership of the share now claimed by Vertannes in the new action. Not only did the Board declare that share to belong to Robinson, but their Lordships classed it with the widow's one-third and made provision for partition of the entirety of the land among Robinson and the three children other than Vertannes.

In these circumstances, it is not open to Vertannes to seek to obtain in fresh proceedings a declaration of ownership of the share in question which would be inconsistent with the previous judgment of the Board in proceedings between the same parties.

While their Lordships think that the intention of the Board finally to determine the ownership of the share in question is clear from the language of the original judgment, this intention seems to be established beyond all doubt by subsequent proceedings before the same Board.

The judgment of the Board was delivered on the 31st March, 1927. Subsequently, Vertannes presented a petition alleging that he had, before the appeal had been heard, given vacant possession to Robinson, and asking to have the order on the appeal so framed as to make it clear that their Lordships were not deciding that Vertannes was not entitled to assert his title as one of the next of kin of his father against Robinson.

The Board heard this petition on the 1st July, 1927, and it was dismissed with costs. From the language used by Lord Phillimore in announcing the Board's decision on that occasion, their Lordships to-day are satisfied that the Board intended that the decision on the appeal should, as between Robinson and Vertannes, finally and conclusively determine the ownership of the one-quarter of two-thirds which is the subject-matter of the new suit. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine why, unless such was the Board's intention, no relief should have been granted on the petition.

Their Lordships feel themselves constrained, without expressing any views as to the construction or effect of section 116, to hold that the appellant is prevented by the judgment delivered on the 31st March, 1927, and the Order in Council made thereon, from obtaining the relief sought by him in the new action.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal fails, and should be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), S. 6 (a)—Tenure held from before Permanent Settlement—Enhancement of rent of—Right of—Conditions—Proof of—Onus on landlord—Assessments occasional due to increase of area—Enhancement by reason of—Right of—Civil Procedure Code, S. 100—Permanent Settlement—Tenure existing before—Question as to—Fact or Law—Settlement Officer engaged in preparation of record of rights—Order of—Not evidence under Bengal Tenancy Act.

The appellant was the owner of a Zemindary which consisted inter alia of a number of taluks and one nij taluk of the Zemindar, which was split up into a number of tuppahs. The taluks and tuppahs existed before the Permanent Settlement. In or about the year 1912 a survey of the estate was commenced, and a record of rights was prepared under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The entries in the record of rights described the said taluks and tuppahs as "rent liable to enhancement". After the publication of the final record of rights, the appellant instituted suits against the talukdars and tuppahdars under S. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, ostensibly for the settlement of a fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands held by them, but in reality for enhancement of rent. The Courts below took into account the presumption in favour of the appellant arising out of the entry in the record of rights that the tenures were liable to enhancement, but nevertheless held, on the evidence in the case, that the appellant had failed to discharge the onus cast on him by S. 6 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The only circumstance relied upon by the appellant against the permanency of rent was that the tuppahs were assessed in 1824 and that both the taluks and tuppahs were assessed in 1847 for 30 years. It appeared, however, from the various reports of the Revenue Officers that the rent of the tenure was intended to have been fixed for ever, and that no fresh assessments would have been made but for the fact that neither the areas nor the boundaries had ever been fixed. The Courts below also found upon evidence that the increase, if any, was due to excess of area.

Held, that in view of the special circumstances of the case under which the assessments of 1824 and 1847 were made, and the statements of the Revenue Officers above referred to, the said assessments were insufficient to raise an inference in law that the appellant had proved the conditions enabling him to enhance the rent.

The order of the Settlement Officer is not evidence under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The question whether the tenure existed before the Permanent Settlement is one of fact.

The principal points for determination on the present appeal were (1) whether the Taluks in question were independent, and (2) whether the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to enhance the rent payable by the respondents?

The material facts of the case are set out sufficiently fully in their Lordships' judgment.

In 1792 the zemindar of the four annas share was one Mahammud Ali, and by an Order, dated the 7th December of that year, he was imprisoned for life as a rebel and his zemindary was confiscated by the Government in February, 1793. It has been suggested before this Board that there was in reality no confiscation, but in the view that their Lordships take of this case the question is immaterial.

The zemindary consisted of 45 taluks belonging to different talukdars and one nij taluk of the zemindar which was split up into 35 tuppahs, and certain other lands.

It is not disputed that the taluks and tuppahs existed before the Permanent Settlement.

The Collector of Tipperah made dowl settlements with the talukdars, but neglected to record the extent of the land, nor were the boundaries ascertained.

Their Lordships set forth below a specimen form of such dowl:

The Government collected the revenue or rent by farming out the zemindary for some years, but subsequently realised the dues from the owners of tuppahs and taluks directly. There is a dispute as to whether what was collected was revenue or rent.

The other 12 annas share of the Pargana was permanently settled on the 17th March, 1798, and was partitioned into four separate shares, two of which were subsequently sold for arrears of revenue in 1835, and were purchased by the Government.

Considerable difficulty, however, was experienced in the management of the estate because whenever a dispute arose, as the areas were not specified, confusion was created by the uncertainty whether any particular land was included in the 4 annas estate or the other two shares out of the 12 annas which had been purchased by the Government, or the remaining two shares.

Counsel for the appellant has drawn their Lordships' attention minutely to the various reports of the Revenue Officers, and it appears from them that they were of opinion that the rent of the tenures was intended to have been fixed for ever, and no fresh assessment would have been made, but for the fact that neither the areas nor the boundaries had ever been fixed.

The Revenue Officers were, however, of opinion that the Government was suffering loss by fraudulent encroachment on its own lands by the talukdars and tupphadars, and to prevent such encroachment the Government decided to have the whole Pargana surveyed.

The tuppahs were assessed in 1824, and both the tuppahs and taluks were assessed in 1847 for a period of 30 years.

It appears that on the 28th May, 1845, the Commissioner passed an Order directing that the settlement should be for a term of 30 years, and that the rate of rent should not be enhanced on expiry of the term.

In 1847, as has already been stated, notwithstanding the protests of the talukdars, a settlement was made whereby the rate was fixed at Rs. 3-15-6 per kani, but there is no evidence as to what the rate of the rent of the taluks or tuppahs was before 1793, or whether any rate of rent was fixed in 1793.

In 1869 the 4 annas share zemindary was permanently settled with one Assima Banu, heir of Mahammud Ali, and Bharat Chandra Deb, who had purchased in the meantime the interests of the other heirs of Mahammud Ali. The present plaintiff's ancestor purchased the zemindary after it had been settled as aforesaid.

In or about the year 1912, on the application of the appellant, a survey of the estate was commenced, and a record of rights was prepared under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Settlement Officer passed a general order with regard to the taluks and tuppahs, directing that in preparing the record of rights these tenures were to be described as "rent liable to enhancement". The actual entries in the record of rights finally published, in which it is alleged the words "rent liable to enhancement" occur, have not been exhibited in these appeals, but the order of the Settlement Officer is on the record. The order is not evidence under the Bengal Tenancy Act, but their Lordships will assume that there are such entries in the finally published records, as alleged by the appellant.

After the publication of the final record of rights the zemindar brought several suits against the talukdars and tupphadars before the Assistant Settlement Officer under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, ostensibly for the settlement of a fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands held by them, but in reality for enhancement of rent.

After recording evidence, both oral and documentary, the Assistant Settlement Officer came to the conclusion: (1) That these tenures were originally independent taluks but had lost their character, and (2) that the tenures existed before the Permanent Settlement, and the appellant had failed to prove any local custom or the conditions of the tenure entitling him to enhance the rate of rent. He held that the appellant failed to discharge the onus cast on him by section 6 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He took into account the presumption in favour of the appellant arising out of the entry in the record of rights that the tenures were liable to enhancement.

There were appeals from his judgment and decree to the Special Judge of Noakhali. The Special Judge held—

- (1) That the taluks existed before the Permanent Settlement, and
- (2) That they were independent taluks within the meaning of the Bengal Regulations.

He further held as follows:—

"From 1848 till 1869 they paid uniform rents and previous to 1848, there having been no ascertainment of definite areas, it cannot properly be said that the rent of these taluks varied. If there was any increase it was for excess area. I, therefore, find that there is no good ground to assert that those taluks are on enhanceable rents and that the plaintiff has any right to demand any enhancement of rent under sections 6 and 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The presumption of Khatyan is clearly rebutted."

The appellant appealed to the High Court.

The learned Judges by their judgment under appeal stated:

- (1) "The question whether the landlord has succeeded in proving the necessary conditions is primarily a question of fact.
- (2) "It should be observed that the Special Judge finds that if there was increase in any case it was for increase of area, and there are materials on the record from which such a conclusion may be drawn."

They further held on the merits that the appellant had failed to prove that he was entitled to enhance the rent under the terms of section 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They were also of opinion that these tenures were independent taluks.

Two questions have been argued before their Lordships:

- (1) Whether the taluks and tuppahs were independent taluks.
- (2) Whether the appellant succeeded in proving that under the conditions under which the tenures are held their rents are liable to enhancement.

In the view that their Lordships take of the second question they think it unnecessary to express any opinion on the first.

Section 6, clause (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is as follows:—

“Where a tenure has been held from the time of the Permanent Settlement its rent shall not be liable to enhancement except on proof.

(a) “That the landlord under whom it is held is entitled to enhance the rent thereof either by local custom or by the conditions under which the tenure is held.”

No question of local custom has been raised.

There is no doubt that the tenures existed before the Permanent Settlement.

This is a question of fact and has been decided in favour of the tenants by all Courts in India.

The appellant has not argued, nor in the face of the findings could he argue, that by reason of what took place in 1847 a new tenure was created. This being so, the only question is whether the appellant has succeeded in proving that by the conditions under which the tenure is held he is entitled to enhance the rent. All that their Lordships have before them against the permanency of rent is that the tuppahs were assessed in 1824, and that both the taluks and tuppahs were assessed in 1847 for 30 years.

Having regard to the special circumstances of this case under which the assessments were made, and the statements of the Revenue Officers made from time to time that the rent of the tenures could not have been increased if the area or the boundary thereof had been fixed, their Lordships are unable to hold that these two assessments give rise to an inference in law that the appellant has proved the conditions enabling him to enhance the rent. There is ample evidence on the record that the areas of the lands occupied by the tenants had increased after 1793.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the questions involved in these appeals on which they are expressing their opinion are questions of fact.

Their Lordships find that the Special Judge did take into consideration the presumption under section 103-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They are of opinion that the Special Judge had before him evidence proper for his consideration in support of his finding that the increase, if any, was due to excess of area.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the appeals should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

A complaint was filed against the accused before a Second Class Sub-Magistrate for the offence of dacoity. The Sub-Magistrate, while holding that there was no basis for the charge, thought that the charge was one under S. 148, Indian Penal Code, namely, rioting armed with deadly weapons, and sent the case on under S. 346 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, to the Joint First Class Magistrate for disposal. The Joint Magistrate after going into the case differed from the view taken by the Sub-Magistrate. He thought that the accused might be guilty of some lesser offence and referred the case back to the Second Class Sub-Magistrate. Objection having been taken to the validity of the later transfer,

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Beasley, C.J.—This case comes before us on a reference made by our learned brother Jackson, J.

Beasley, C. J

The facts of the case are that a complaint was made against eight persons on a charge of dacoity and came before the Second Class Sub-Magistrate of Tirupattur. The Sub-Magistrate thought that there was no basis for that charge; but as of the eight persons accused before him one was alleged to have been armed with a stick and a deadly weapon, he thought that the charge was one under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code, namely, rioting armed with deadly weapons and accordingly sent the case on under section 346 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Joint First Class Magistrate for disposal. The Joint First Class Magistrate after going into the case differed from the view taken by the Second Class Sub-Magistrate and thought that the evidence disclosed that the accused might be guilty of some lesser offence. In dealing with the matter he pointed out that the fifth accused, who was the only accused stated to have been there armed with deadly weapons and having taken part in the riot, was merely a spectator and took no part whatever in the rioting, and dismissed the complaint against him. He referred the case back, under section 346 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, to the Second Class Magistrate on the 30th of May, 1929. The complainant in the case feeling aggrieved at this order preferred a revision petition to the District Magistrate and he dismissed it as he came to the conclusion that the case had been properly dealt with by the Joint Magistrate. Against this order the complainant presented a revision petition to the High Court. Jackson, J., before whom it came, whilst strongly holding the view that the Joint First Class Magistrate was acting within his jurisdiction when he referred the case back to the Second Class Sub-Magistrate, felt himself very much embarrassed by a decision in In re Kottur Hampanna.¹ This decision he took to be one holding that the question of jurisdiction is irrevocably fixed by the Lower Court when it submits the case under section 346 (1) to the superior Magistrate. Section 346.(2) reads as follows:—

“The Magistrate to whom the case is submitted may, if so empowered, either try the case himself, or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction, or commit the accused for trial.”

If our learned brother Jackson, J., is right in his interpretation of the judgment in *In re Kottur Hampanna*¹, then we are clearly of the view that that case was wrongly decided. But, first of all, we have got to see whether the interpretation placed upon that judgment by our learned brother is correct or not. He has taken the last paragraph of that judgment on page 848 to mean that the Magistrate therein referred to is the Magistrate who makes the submission under section 346 (1) and not the Magistrate who refers the case under section 346 (2). In that view of the judgment, that case does decide that it is the charge which the Magistrate who submits the case under section 346 (1) thinks is the right one that the Magistrate to whom he submits the case has to deal with and that charge alone. He has got to try it and dispose of it himself or commit the accused for trial. If that is the correct understanding of that judgment, then as before stated, we are clearly of the opinion that that judgment is wrong. Sub-section (2) to section 346 is perfectly clear, definite and wide and the Magistrate to whom the case is submitted has got to do three things. He has either got to try the case himself, or after having heard it to a certain point, refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him who has got jurisdiction to try the case or to commit the accused for trial. We think that that is really what was meant in In re Kottur Hampanna,¹ and that the Magistrate therein referred to is the Magistrate making a reference under section 346 (2). Although the section alone is referred to and no sub-sections are referred to, we think, having regard to the facts of the case and the observations made at page 847, that the Magistrate to whom the case has been submitted was intended to be referred to. At page 847 it is stated as follows:

“It may be urged that the Sub-Magistrate, who sent up the case, was subordinate to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and that his order was in effect a reference to him. If so, the reference should have been made explicitly and with some distinct indication of what action the Sub-Magistrate was to take, not with an obscure injunction, which could afford no real guidance.”

What happened in that case was that the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom the case had been submitted by the Sub-Magistrate made an order as follows:

"The Sub-Divisional Magistrate declines to transfer the case to the file of another Sub-Magistrate."

And then later on

"As regards the section under which the offence, if proved, is likely to fall, the Sub-Magistrate is requested to study the commentary carefully under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code."

In the opinion of the Bench that was not the proper way to deal with the case submitted to him. Reference was made in that case to two unreported cases, *Queen-Empress v. Fakira*² and *Queen-Empress v. Purushottam*³, as authority for the position that a superior Magistrate cannot simply return a case to the Subordinate Magistrate from whom it comes but must refer it to some other Magistrate or dispose of it himself. But these cases on examination do not seem to go to that length. If they do, we are clearly of the opinion that those cases were wrongly decided; because the terms of sub-section (2) to section 346 are quite clear and sufficiently wide to embrace a reference back of the case to the Magistrate who originally submitted it. In our view, therefore, there is no warrant for saying that the Magistrate who acted under section 346 (2) had no jurisdiction in this case so to act. The question argued before our learned brother Jackson, J., was merely the question of jurisdiction. No argument was addressed to him upon the merits. We have heard a brief argument upon the merits of the case and in view of the order of the Magistrate in which he states that the evidence points the fact that the fifth accused who is the only person alleged to have been present armed with deadly weapons was merely a spectator, we think that the view he took with regard to the offence possibly committed by the accused persons was correct. As soon as the fifth accused was eliminated from the charge, obviously no charge against the other accused persons of rioting armed with deadly weapons could possibly lie.

In view of the observations we have made, the petition must be dismissed.

Madras Land Revenue Assessment Act (I of 1876), Preamble and S. 1—Ownership by adverse possession—Whether amounts to an alienation—Application for separate registration.

Where a zamindar brought a suit for declaration that the suit lands were entitled to be separately registered in the name of the owner under the provisions of the Madras Land Revenue Assessment Act, the question that arose was whether according to the preamble of the Act the wording "alienation by sale or otherwise" would include a case of ownership by adverse possession for the statutory period.

Held, that the Act (I of 1876) applied not only to cases of transfer inter vivos but also to cases where a person had become owner of property by virtue of adverse possession for the statutory period.

Pusarla Peda, Brahmaji v. Krishnamachariar, (1919) 11 L.W. 389 and Subba Rao v. Raja of Pithapur, (1926) 53 M.L.J. 400, followed.

All that the Act contemplates is that there should be a separation from the main estate of the land in question in such a way that the ownership of the land in question becomes vested in the other person as owner.

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in A.S. No. 109 of 1924 and A.S. No. 94 of 1924 preferred against the decrees of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Cocanada in O.S. No. 31 of 1923 and O.S. No. 16 of 1923 (O.S. No. 574 of 1920 and O.S. No. 547 of 1920, respectively, Principal District Munsif's Court, Cocanada).

C. Rama Rao for appellant.

The Advocate-General for respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the Maharaja of Pittapuram against the Secretary of State for India in Council as the 1st defendant, and Avasarala Venkatarama Row of Panduru as the 2nd defendant, for separate registration of the lands situated in the village of Panduru alleged to be within the zemindari of Pittapuram. Prior to the suit, the plaintiff applied to the Deputy Collector under the provisions of Madras Act I of 1876 for such separate registration. The 2nd defendant having raised an objection, the Deputy Collector declined to order separate registration, with the result that the Maharaja of Pittapuram filed the suit from which this second appeal has arisen.

The main pleas raised by the 2nd defendant were (1) that there was no "alienation" in the present case within the meaning of Act I of 1876, and (2) that, on the merits, the plaintiff was not entitled to separate registration since these lands were not included within the assets of the zemindari at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Both the Lower Courts overruled the first contention raised by the 2nd defendant and held that, if on the merits the plaintiff proved that the suit lands were included within the assets of the zemindari, the plaintiff would be entitled to have separate registration as prayed for. On the merits the Trial Court found against the plaintiff and accordingly dismissed the suit. On the plaintiff's appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held, for reasons given in paragraph 10 of his judgment, that the suit lands must be taken to have been included in the assets of the zemindari, and he passed a decree for separate registration as prayed by the plaintiff. This second appeal has accordingly been preferred by the 2nd defendant in the case.

On his behalf, his learned Advocate argued two points; one relating to the preliminary question whether Act I of 1876 applies to this case and the other to the merits. Taking the first question about the applicability of the provisions of Act I of 1876, it was argued for the appellant that the Act deals only with cases of lands "alienated by sale or otherwise". It being common ground that the Maharaja is not able to point out to any particular act of alienation inter vivos the finding of the Lower Appellate Court was that the 2nd defendant has acquired ownership of this property by virtue of adverse possession for over the statutory period. The learned Advocate argued that such a case could not be said to come within Act I of 1876. He argued that the words "alienation by sale or otherwise" imply cases of transfer inter vivos. On behalf of the respondent it was argued that the word "alienation" is wider than the word "transfer" and that all that the Act contemplates is that there should be a separation from the main estate of the land in question in such a way that the ownership of the land in question becomes vested in the other person as owner. We think that the contention raised by the respondent should be upheld. It must be noticed that the wording in question occurs in an Act passed as early as 1876, and that the exact question that we are now called upon to decide has come before this Court, at least twice, as reported cases show. In *Pusarla Peda Brahmaji v. Krishnamachariar*¹ Oldfield and Krishnan, JJ., decided this very point against the contention raised by the appellant before us. Later on, in the case reported in Subba Rao v. Rajah of Pithapur,² the same question arose before Waller and Madhavan Nair, JJ., and the learned Judges, as we understand their judgment, followed the decision in *Pusarla Peda Brahmaji v. Krishnamachariar*¹ and were not prepared to have the question re-opened. If the learned Judges in *Subba Rao v. Rajah of Pithapur*² doubted the correctness of the decision in *Pusarla Peda Brahmaji v. Krishnamachariar*¹ they would not have sent the case back for enquiry on the merits (which would have been unnecessary if the appellant's contention was right). In addition to the two direct decisions on the point in question, there is also an observation in Proprietor of Siripuram Estates v. Venkatasurya Rao,³ where it is stated that all that was necessary to bring a case under Madras Act I of 1876 is that the land in question should be fully owned by a person other than the Zamindar Proprietor. Though the preamble to the Act speaks of "alienation of portions of permanently settled estates by sale or otherwise" when we go to section 2, which speaks of the exact nature of the enquiry to be conducted by the Collector, we find the following words:—

"The Collector shall thereupon hold an enquiry as to who is the present owner of the property in respect of which the application is made."

A person could become owner of property as much by transfer inter vivos as by the effect of adverse possession for the statutory period. As mentioned by this Court in Sambasiva v. Raghava,⁴

"It is hardly necessary to observe that it has been repeatedly held that the title acquired by adverse possession for twelve years is only equivalent to that given by a parliamentary grant of the interest vesting in the party affected by the adverse possession."

We may also refer to a recent decision of the Privy Council in the case reported in Sreemati Krishna Promada Dasi v. Dharendra Nath Ghosh.⁵ No doubt the Privy Council had there to consider a case that arose in Bengal. This is what their Lordships say:

"The owner of a part of a revenue-paying estate obtaining his title by adverse possession, remains liable for land revenue fixed on the estate

1. (1919) 11 L.W. 389.

2. (1926) 53 M.L.J. 400.

4. (1890) I.L.R. 13 M. 512 at 515-6.

under section 37 of the Land Revenue Sales Act. He may, if he so desires, have the portion of the estate which passed to him by adverse possession, separately assessed to land revenue; but, if he omits to do so, it continues to form part of the security for the whole land revenue of the estate and to be liable to be sold under the regulation in respect of any arrears due." (The italics are ours.)

Venkatarama
Row
v Maharaja of Pittapuram.

From this it is clear that it is ordinarily open to any person who has become owner of land by virtue of adverse possession to apply to have separate registration of the same in his name to avoid the risk of the land being sold to recover arrears due, not properly upon it but upon the whole estate of which it was a part. It, therefore, seems to us that Act I of 1876 applies not only to cases of transfer inter vivos but also to cases where a person has become owner of property by virtue of adverse possession for the statutory period. We, therefore, follow the two rulings of this Court mentioned above, and overrule the contention raised by the appellant.

On the merits, we find that both the Lower Courts refer to D.C.B. accounts and Amarakam accounts as having been filed as evidence in the case. By reference, however, to the list of witnesses examined and documents filed, we are not able to find any such documents having been exhibited. It is possible since it is clear that these suits were tried along with other suits, that there was some sort of agreement between the parties that these documents should be taken as exhibited and treated as evidence in these cases also, but as the record now stands, we are not able to state definitely what exactly happened. As we should like to know more about these documents before we dispose of these appeals, we call upon the Lower Court to procure and forward to this Court copies of Amarakam and D.C.B. accounts referred to in the Lower Court's judgment. It will also submit a copy of the judgment in O.S. No. 29 of 1923 with all the records, including the B. Diary filed in that suit. It will be open to either party to apply for the printing of any portion of the record so received, leaving it to the Court to decide upon any matters regarding the admissibility of the same in evidence in these second appeals at the time of the final hearing in these cases.

Second Appeal No. 823 of 1925.—This case follows our judgment in S.A. No. 821 of 1925.

Sastri, J.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—These appeals arise out of a suit filed by the plaintiffs, the 1st plaintiff claiming to be the legatee under the will of his grandfather, for an account of the estate and for possession. He also wanted damages for misfeasance and malfeasance of the executors. The executors are defendants 1 and 5. The Lower Court passed a decree in plaintiffs' favour. The 1st defendant's case was that the 5th defendant was managing the estate till his disappearance in 1915 and that his management was merely formal, i.e., he merely signed in the deposit account and the receipts, Exhibits IV and IV (a). The 5th defendant was admittedly not heard of for five or six years before the suit, and he is not heard of even now. His son has been impleaded as being a member of the undivided family. The 5th defendant is ex parte. The 6th defendant's mother and guardian, in her written statement, denied that the 5th defendant (her husband) ever took part in the management of the estate. Upon this, issues were raised and the case went to trial. It was found that the 5th defendant did take part in the management of the estate, that he put in monies and collected monies and that he also sold an item of property in which the testator had a third share. Out of the monies which belonged to the estate and which were invested, there was a claim in the plaint for Rs. 40,000 against the 7th defendant. This represented monies belonging to the estate which had been invested. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for Rs. 40,000 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. In Appeal No. 120 of 1925 we held that the amount in deposit with 7th defendant was not Rs. 40,000 but Rs. 37,100 on the date of the plaint, and we modified the decree by allowing Rs. 37,100 with interest, as stated above. That money has been paid into Court and there is no question of any loss to the estate so far as that money is concerned except as regards interest which is the subject-matter of the Appeal No. 257. The Subordinate Judge found that there was one more item for which the defendants were accountable and this was a sum of Rs. 3,000 proved to have been collected by the 5th defendant. He allowed that sum with interest at 9 per cent. per annum. As regards that sum, it is not disputed before us that that sum was collected by the 5th defendant, as that is proved beyond all doubt by the account books filed. What is argued is that the Court should not have allowed Rs. 3,000 and interest, but that an account should have been directed to be taken and the 5th defendant given an opportunity of proving certain expenses, which he had incurred for the estate and which he was entitled to credit for. When the case was closed, the 6th defendant put in a petition saying that certain accounts which showed dealings by 5th defendant with the estate were found behind some vessels in the house and wanted admission of these books. The Subordinate Judge, in our opinion, rightly rejected the petition. The question raised in Appeal No. 407 by Mr. Padmanabha Aiyangar is that the Judge ought to have passed a preliminary decree and then sent the case for taking accounts; and he refers to the Privy Council decision in *Hurrinath Rai v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi*¹ and to Mohesh Chunder Bose v. Radha Kishen Bhattacharjee,² Degambar Mozumdar v. Kallynath Roy,³ Rajhunath v. Ganpatji,⁴ Ayashabai v. Ebrahim,⁵ *Thirukumaresan Chetti v. also refers in this connection to Order 20, Rule 16, Schedule I of the Civil Procedure Code and Rules 120 to 136 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mufussal). There can be little doubt on these authorities that, ordinarily in a case for an account, even though the defendant may deny his accountability, the proper course is to pass a preliminary decree and send the case for taking accounts. But, we do not think that it follows that in every case, irrespective of other considerations, the Court is bound to send the case for taking accounts. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in dealing with this point, make a reservation. At page 158 they state:

“Their Lordships are not expressing an opinion that in a suit for account it may not appear at the hearing that the issue is so simple and so clearly raised and met by evidence, as to be ready for decision at that time. But the general rule is the other way.”

Order 20, Rule 16, also does not make it imperative to pass a preliminary decree apart from any other consideration. All that Rule 16 says is that a preliminary decree may be passed, where it is necessary, in order to ascertain the amount of money due to or from any party, that an account should be taken. In the present case we have the fact that so far as the liability of the defendants is concerned it is Rs. 40,000 which was claimed and ultimately decreed, not having been disputed by the 7th defendant except as to Rs. 3,000 and odd which he says was not deposited. His solvency was not disputed and he has paid the sum due into Court. The only question between the executors and the plaintiff was whether the Rs. 3,000 was collected. As regards a sum of about Rs. 780 which was got by the sale of the village, that there was a sale deed and that the amount was received is not disputed. The plaintiff will be entitled to a half of that amount. As regards the Rs. 3,000 as we have said before, it is proved beyond all doubt, and it is not denied before us, that that sum was collected by the 5th defendant. Therefore, when the case came up for disposal, there was the Rs. 3,000 proved to have been collected and no denial in the written statement that the amount was ever collected. No statement was made that any expenses were incurred, nor did the 6th defendant ask the Judge at that stage to allow the expenses he had incurred in connection with that item. The petition to file account books said to have been discovered behind some brass vessels was rightly rejected. It therefore comes, in our opinion, in the category of cases which the Privy Council describes as cases, where the facts are so simple that the taking of accounts will be unnecessarily lengthening the proceedings without any benefit to the parties. It may be more complicated, if, in (the connected) Appeal No. 257, the appellants insist on the usual procedure being adopted by reason of other items being charged. But their counsel does not want the case to be sent back for a preliminary decree being passed. In these circumstances, we do not think it is necessary to send the case back for a preliminary decree being passed, which will only mean unnecessary lengthening of the proceedings without any material benefit to anybody. The result is that Appeal No. 407 will be dismissed with costs.

Even in summary trials under Chapter XXII of the Code, the requisites of S. 250 must be satisfied and the record should contain the reasons for considering the complaint to be false and vexatious.

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Sessions of the Coimbatore Division in Criminal Appeal No. 14 of 1929 preferred against the judgment of the Court of the First Class Bench of Magistrates, Dharapuram, in B.C. No. 71 of 1929.

K. Periasami Goundar for petitioner.

Respondent not represented.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is a petition to revise an order awarding compensation to six accused (at Rs. 10 each) made by the First Class Bench of Magistrates of Dharapuram and confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge of Coimbatore. Two objections are raised (1) that the record of the trial does not contain, as it should, the reasons why the Bench considered the complaint to be false and vexatious, and (2) that this vitiates the order.

On the first point on which there seems to be no direct decision of this Court, the contention must be upheld that even in records of summary trials under Chapter XXII of the Criminal Procedure Code where the Magistrate or Bench acts under section 250, the requisites of that section as to recording of reasons must be carried out. This seems to follow from the provisions of section 262 which lays down that the procedure prescribed for summons cases shall be followed in summons cases and that prescribed for warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases even when they are tried in a summary way. The only exceptions to this rule are contained in the next two following sections 263 and 264. The former applies to cases where no appeal lies and the latter to cases in which an appeal lies, which means, to cases where an appealable sentence is or is not passed upon the accused. These sections 263 and 264 do not, if reasonably read, provide for proceedings under section 250 by which alone compensation to the accused is ordered against the complainant. There being thus no express exception from the general rule laid down by section 262, it follows that even in summary trials the requisition of section 250 must be satisfied.

The next question is whether in this case they have been satisfied. This point was apparently not raised before the Sessions Judge on behalf of the petitioner. But that learned Judge was of opinion that the Order of the Bench does not contain a record of reasons for awarding compensation although he also thought that the omission had not prejudiced the appellant and therefore did not, under section 537, invalidate the order. Taking the record of the trial as a whole and remembering that the record is itself the record of a summary trial, it is not quite accurate to say that it does not contain a record of reasons for awarding compensation. After the evidence was closed, the Bench put the following question to the complainant:—

“The case brought by you has been proved to be false and vexatious and it is clear that this has been brought simply to harass the accused. Please show cause why a compensation of Rs. 25 to each of the accused or Rs. 150 in all should not be ordered.”

The complainant answered that the case brought by him was true. The Bench, therefore, go on to state that when called on to explain why the compensation should not be ordered for bringing this false and vexatious complaint, P.W. 1 says that his complaint was true and that this is no explanation at all. Then they make the order directing him to pay Rs. 25 each. Reading this in a fair and reasonable way the passage where the Bench said that it is clear that this case has been brought simply to harass the accused, although it occurs as a portion of the question put to the complainant, may be understood and must have been intended as a record of their own reasons for thinking that the complaint was false and vexatious. They had just then taken the evidence and the impression made by it upon their minds was still quite fresh and they concluded, as they said in plain terms, that the case was false and vexatious because it was brought to harass the accused. I am not able to say that the requirements of law have not been satisfied. It is needless to add that, even if there had been any omission, section 537 would have been sufficient to cure the omission in view of the fact that the petitioner himself did not raise the question before the Sessions Judge.

The petition is dismissed.

[In the matter of P. Kumaraswami Rao, an insolvent.]

L. V. Narasimha Sastri

Appellant (Applicant)*

The Official Assignee of Madras . . . Respondent (Respt.).

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909)—Ex parte decree in suit on lost promissory note—Application for arrest of judgment-debtor—Application by judgment-debtor to be declared insolvent without seeking to set aside ex parte decree—Allegation that the promissory note was fictitious and that he was not properly served with summons—Decree debt shown as the only debt in the schedule—Power of the Official Assignee to investigate into the judgment debt.

Narasimha

v.
The Official

of Madras.

Where an ex parte decree was obtained on a lost promissory note and the judgment-debtor filed an insolvency petition, when he was sought to be arrested in execution of the decree, alleging that the promissory note was a fictitious one and that he was not properly served with summons in the suit and showing in the schedule to the petition this decree debt as the only debt for which he was liable without seeking to have the ex parte decree set aside on these grounds, and he was duly declared insolvent,

Held that, though the Official Assignee has power to investigate into the debts attempted to be proved before him whatever their nature may be and whether founded on a contract, loan, or a judgment or a decree, the basis of this jurisdiction is the necessity of protecting other creditors of the debtor, and that, as in this case there were no other creditors and the effect of holding this debt to be fictitious would be to annul the insolvency, and the debtor himself did not avail himself of the opportunity he had to get this judgment debt examined by the Court by filing an application to set aside the ex parte decree, the Official Assignee had no power to investigate into the judgment debt.

On appeal from the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, dated 21st January, 1929, and passed in the exercise of the Insolvency Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 190 of 1925 in Petition No. 263 of 1923.

K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar instructed by C. T. Sundaram for appellant.

S. G. Sadagopa Mudaliar for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

Ramesam, J.

JUDGMENTS. Ramesam, J.—This is an appeal against the order of our brother Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in the course of insolvency proceedings relating to the insolvency of P. Kumaraswami Rao, in I.P. No. 263 of 1923. The facts out of which this appeal arises may be stated. The appellant before us L. V. Narasimha Sastri got a decree against the insolvent in O.S. No. 282 of 1922 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Cocanada on a promissory note said to have been dated 28th January, 1921, and said to have been lost. This decree was sought to be executed against the insolvent. It was transferred to Madras and in execution of it the insolvent was sought to be arrested on the 20th August, 1923. He at once sought the protection of the Insolvency Court. In that petition he alleged that the promissory note on which this decree was obtained was a fictitious one and that he was also not properly served with summons from the District Munsif's Court of Cocanada. In the schedule to the petition he showed this decree debt as the only debt for which he was liable. He was duly declared insolvent and his properties vested in the Official Assignee. Immediately the appellant sought to prove his debt by producing his decree. The Official Assignee held that the debt was not proved. There was an appeal by way of notice of motion seeking to set aside the order of the Official Assignee. This was on 28th April, 1925. This petition was adjourned and on 19th August, 1925, an order was issued for a Commission to examine witnesses. On 4th September two witnesses were examined on Commission, (1) Mr. Y. Kameswara Rao, a First Grade Pleader of 28 years' standing of Cocanada, and (2) P. Bhimalingamurthi, a Municipal Councillor of Cocanada, but these were not cross-examined on that occasion. So a further Commission was ordered to issue for the cross-examination of these witnesses and on 24th October, 1925, these two witnesses were cross-examined. Afterwards two other witnesses, P. Subba Rao and the appellant himself were examined before the Official Assignee. P. Subba Rao was the original payee who was said to have endorsed the note to the appellant. The second witness Bhimalingamurthi was an attester and the first witness, the Vakil, says that the note was shown to him, that he issued the registered notice to the insolvent, that afterwards he filed the suit and in the interval the suit note was lost. On 1st February, 1926, the case was sent back to the Official Assignee. On 2nd November, 1928, the petition was ordered by the Assistant Registrar to be posted before the Court as nothing was done by the Official Assignee but it was not so posted. There were further adjournments in December, 1928 and finally on 11th January, 1929, the Official Assignee sent his report to the Original Side. On 21st January, 1929, the matter came up before our learned brother and he ordered the application of April, 1925, to be dismissed. The present appeal is against this order.

Narasimha
Sastri

Ramesam, J.

It appears that the only debt to which this insolvent is liable is this decree debt. If this decree debt is a spurious debt and is held to be no debt then there is no insolvency. A man cannot be insolvent without any debts to pay. But in the present case, because execution was attempted against him by arrest he applied to be declared insolvent and used the Insolvency Jurisdiction for attacking the nature of the debt and for contending that that was a fictitious debt. There is no doubt about the powers of the Official Assignee to investigate into the debts attempted to be proved before him whatever their nature may be and whether founded on a contract, loan or a judgment or a decree. In Ex parte Revell. In *re Tollemache*¹ Baggallay, L.J., says:

"The rule is clearly stated by Lord Justice James, in Ex parte Kibble,² thus:—'It is the settled rule of the Court of Bankruptcy, on which we have always acted, that the Court of Bankruptcy can inquire into the consideration for a judgment debt. There are obviously strong reasons for this, because the object of the bankruptcy laws is to procure the distribution of a debtor's goods among his just creditors. If a judgment were conclusive, a man might allow any number of judgments to be obtained by default against him by his friends or relatives without any debt being due on them at all; it is, therefore, necessary that the consideration of the judgment should be liable to investigation.'"

Then he proceeds:

"I do not wish to lay it down as a rule that the Court should inquire into the consideration for a judgment debt when nothing is shewn to justify the inquiry. I am disposed to think that prima facie a judgment ought to be considered as binding. But, if a proper case is made, I think the Court ought to direct an inquiry into the consideration for a judgment debt."

At page 725, Cotton, L.J., says:

"In bankruptcy a judgment certainly stands in a different position from that in which it previously stood as against the debtor himself, because the rights of the other creditors of the bankrupt have supervened. When a person is sui juris a judgment against him is a very strong prima facie evidence against him of the existence of a debt; if he disputes it, he must satisfy the Court that there is some reason which requires that the judgment should be set aside."

In *In re Flatau; Ex parte Scotch Whisky Distillers, Ltd.*³
Lord Esher, M.R., says:

"When an issue has been determined in any other Court, if evidence is brought before the Court of Bankruptcy of circumstances tending to shew that there has been fraud, or collusion, or miscarriage of justice, the Court of Bankruptcy has power to go behind the judgment and to inquire into the validity of the debt. But that the Court of Bankruptcy is bound in every case as a matter of course to go behind a judgment is a preposterous proposition."

In *In re Saville. Ex parte Saville*⁴ the same learned Judge observes:

"It does not decide that there being a judgment, on the mere suggestion of the debtor that the judgment debt is bad, the Court of Bankruptcy is bound to go behind the judgment and inquire into the validity of the debt. There is a judgment debt. That is a sufficient debt on which to found a bankruptcy. It is true, that if suggestions are made and some plausible evidence given, that the judgment debt does not really exist, the Court may well examine into it. . . . Nothing was offered against the circumstances except the statement of the debtor, which he had ample opportunity and which it was to his interest to bring forward before."

In the present case there seems to be some ground for suggesting that the insolvent was not properly served with summons in the District Munsif's Court of Cocanada. At any rate it appears that he was not personally served though the service may be declared sufficient in law. When he was arrested in August, 1923, he had an opportunity to contest before the District Munsif's Court to set aside the ex parte decree. Under Art. 164 of the Limitation Act he has 30 days to get that decree set aside, but not having done so the decree has now become incapable of being set aside. The debtor himself, therefore, cannot get rid of that decree assuming it is a wrong or an unjust decree. This, of course, does not prevent the Official Assignee in Insolvency from investigating into the nature of the debt if there are grounds for doing so. The cases I have cited show that the basis of his jurisdiction and the reason for his investigating into judgment claims is the necessity of protecting other creditors. Where there are no other creditors the reason for examining into this judgment-debt especially when the debtor himself allowed the opportunity he had to pass by becomes much less. In In re Van Laun. *Ex parte Chatterton*⁵ Cozens-Hardy, M.R., says:

3. (1888) 22 Q.B. 83.

4. (1887) 4 Morrell 277.

Narasimha
Sastri
v.
The Official
Assignee of Madras.

Ramesam, J.

"The trustee in bankruptcy can say 'You are a person who comes in to prove a debt. It is my duty to see that this bankrupt's assets are distributed amongst those who are justly, legally and properly creditors of the estate. In order to enable me to do my duty, I ask you to furnish me with such information as will enable me to do that which I am told to do by Rule 22 in the Second Schedule to the Act, to examine every proof and the grounds of the debt'."

Buckley, L.J., says:

"The trustee is entitled to say 'It is my business to see that those who seek to rank against this estate are persons who are really creditors of that estate'."

In In re Campbell. *Ex parte Seal*⁶ a judgment was obtained which was opposed to the terms of the Money-lenders Act. There was afterwards a further agreement with reference to that judgment. It was held that it is open to the Court to find that the judgment and the further arrangement are both illegal and as they are opposed to the Money-lenders Act, are unlawful and void and constitute a criminal offence. That case, therefore, does not help the respondent. In the present case, as already stated, the only purpose for which the judgment is being attacked is to say that the decree debt was wrongly passed. If the contention of the Official Assignee is upheld then there is no reason for declaring the insolvent an insolvent and if the insolvency is annulled his protection is lost and the decree can be executed against the insolvent by attachment and arrest. In the latter case he will resort to insolvency again. Thus, we got into a vicious circle. I do not think this jurisdiction of the Official Assignee to inquire into debts could be used as a device to escape the execution of a decree where the only debt of the insolvent is the decree and there are no other debts. It seems to me that the Insolvency Jurisdiction should not be used as a device to evade execution of a decree which has become final and unimpeachable as in the present case. However, evidence has been adduced by the appellant. His vakil, R.W. 1, says that he saw the promissory note. It is true that such evidence cannot prove the genuineness of the note. It only shows that the alleged note was shown to the vakil for the purpose of issuing a notice but that takes the appellant's case to a certain stage. Then we have got the evidence of R.W. 2. He was the attestor. He was a Municipal Councillor of Cocanada. Though it does not appear that he is a man of very affluent circumstances nothing is elicited against him as to why he should join in a conspiracy to support the alleged note or why he should depose against the insolvent. Then there is the evidence of the appellant which of course is somewhat interested but it must be remembered after all that he is only the endorsee of the note and not the original lender, the original lender being R.W. 3, P. Subba Rao. The Official Assignee in his report relies on two circumstances: (1) that the summons was not properly served and, therefore, the insolvent is not bound by the decree. In the first place it is for the Court which passed the decree to inquire into the question whether the summons was properly served. (2) He relies upon a judgment in Madras Small Cause Court Suit No. 9738, a suit instituted by the insolvent against an Advocate of this Court, Mr. P.C. Venkataramanayya Pantulu for a sum of Rs. 600 and odd. In that suit it was the case of the insolvent that the Rs. 1,300 admittedly sent by Subba Rao according to both the parties was sent not as a loan but as payment on behalf of Mr. P.C. Venkataramanayya, who owed Rs. 2,500 to the insolvent and that suit was for Rs. 600 settled by mediators as the sum still due in respect of the balance of Rs. 1,200. The subject-matter of this suit is not this Rs. 1,300 but the remaining Rs. 1,200. The appellant before us was not a party to that suit. The Small Cause Judge decreed the suit for Rs. 600 and odd. Incidentally he made remarks about the nature of the payment of Rs. 1,300. Surely observations in a judgment relating to a different matter though connected cannot bind a third party and the judgment itself cannot be evidence against him. The appellant was not a party to that suit and he had no opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses there. The Official Assignee beyond referring to the judgment of the Small Cause Court and the fact that the summons was not properly served did not go into the matter or examine evidence. The evidence for the appellant was not contradicted by either evidence on behalf of the insolvent or the Official Assignee. The respondent now asks for a further opportunity of adducing further evidence. We do not think there is a case made out for further evidence. The Official Assignee was content to report before the learned Judge on the materials available then. We do not think this is a case in which the suspicions that have been suggested against the appellant's case ought to be allowed to practically vacate the decree of the District Munsif's Court of Cocanada, especially when it is the only debt subsisting against the insolvent. We think the debt must be regarded as proved and we allow the appeal.

The Official Assignee will pay the appellant's and his own costs out of fees of his Office Charges Fund. No costs in the Lower Court for both sides.

Cornish, J.—I am of the same opinion. Although the debtor was probably ignorant of the suit filed by the creditor in the Cocanada Court he certainly became aware that an ex parte decree had been passed against him when he was arrested in execution of the decree. Instead of taking steps to have the decree set aside—and his omission is the more remarkable because in a subsequent affidavit he described the decree as a fraudulent decree—the debtor apparently preferred to take refuge in the Insolvency Act and to get himself adjudicated an insolvent. Order 9, Rule 13, Sch. I, Civil Procedure Code, provides a simple procedure for getting an ex parte decree set aside, and Art. 164 of the Limitation Act prescribes the time within which steps must be taken. By allowing this decree to stand, therefore, the debtor permitted strong prima facie evidence of the validity of the debt to remain. No doubt the Official Assignee acted within his rights in investigating the circumstances in which this decree was passed. As observed in In re Van Laun. *Ex parte Chatterton*⁵

"The trustee's right and duty when examining a proof for the purpose of admitting or rejecting it is to require some satisfactory evidence that the debt on which the proof is founded is a real debt. No judgment recovered against the bankrupt, no covenant given by or account stated with him, can deprive the trustee of this right."

It was open to the Official Assignee, therefore, to satisfy by evidence the Insolvency Court that, either on account of fraud or collusion or miscarriage of justice, the Court should go behind the decree and invalidate the decree-debt. But the only evidence—and I am assuming that it is evidence by reason of Rule 117 of the Insolvency Rules—before the Insolvency Court was the report of the Official Assignee, and the only ground given in the report for treating the decree as not binding on the debtor is the Official Assignee's finding that the summons in the suit was not properly served on the debtor. The only reason given in the report for discrediting the evidence of the creditor and his witnesses in support of his claim is a bare reference to a quite irrelevant finding (that is to say, irrelevant to this enquiry), by the Judge of the Small Cause Court in a suit between the debtor and some other person, to which the creditor was not a party and in which he did not give evidence. In my opinion these materials are not sufficient evidence either of collusion or of fraud or of miscarriage of justice as would justify the Insolvency Court in invalidating the decree and holding that the debt is not binding upon or proved against the debtor.

Pleadings—Variance between plaint and case alleged at the trial.

Sagarmull

J.C. Galstaun.

Pleadings should not be construed too narrowly, and, therefore, in dealing with the question whether there has been a variance between a plaintiff's pleadings and the case alleged at the trial, the Court must look not to the mere wording of the plaint but to the issues which were settled for trial and to the manner in which the case was deliberately fought out by both the parties in the Trial Court.

Appeal No. 116 of 1928 from a decree, dated the 16th January, 1928, of the High Court, Calcutta, Civil Appellate Jurisdiction, setting aside a decree, dated the 24th January, 1927, of the said High Court, Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The material facts of the case, for purposes of the present report, appear sufficiently fully in their Lordships' judgment.

LORD TOMLIN.—This is an appeal in two consolidated suits (Nos. 1136 and 1138 of 1920) brought by the assignor of the appellant against the respondent. The consolidated suits were tried before Mr. Justice Chotzner in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Original Civil Jurisdiction, with the result that a decree in favour of the plaintiff was made on the 24th January, 1927.

P. C.

Lord Tomlin.

The respondent appealed, and on the 16th January, 1928, the High Court Civil Appellate Jurisdiction reversed Mr. Justice Chotzner and dismissed the consolidated suits.

The appellant thereupon appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The story of the transactions out of which the suits arise is somewhat intricate, but for the present purpose is sufficiently stated in what follows.

One Pity owed the appellant money and in March, 1910, the appellant obtained a decree against Pity for Rs. 1,40,000. Pity was the owner of property in Wellesley Street, Calcutta. An arrangement was entered into and carried out between Pity, the appellant and the respondent to the following effect. The appellant borrowed from the Bank of Bengal Rs. 1,50,000. To enable the appellant to obtain this loan the respondent, for a 1 per cent. commission, guaranteed the loan to the Bank. The appellant drew a promissory note for the amount borrowed from the Bank in favour of the respondent, who endorsed it over to the Bank. Out of the monies so borrowed the appellant lent to Pity the amount required to enable the latter to discharge his indebtedness to the appellant. Pity accordingly paid his debt to the appellant. At the same time Pity deposited with the appellant and the respondent the title deeds of the Wellesley Street property to secure the amount lent to him by the appellant.

It is not suggested that as between the appellant and the respondent the latter had any interest in Pity's mortgage beyond his right to be secured thereout against his liability as guarantor to the Bank for the appellant's debt.

On the 9th August, 1910, the appellant and respondent launched a suit (No. 839 of 1910) against Pity to enforce the mortgage. On the 27th November, 1910, a final decree for sale was made in the suit, both the appellant and the respondent being given liberty to bid. Nothing further was done for some years. On the 5th August, 1914, the respondent paid to the Bank the sum of Rs. 31,350-12-5 for interest on the appellant's debt to the Bank, and also from time to time until the date of the sale next to be mentioned, under an authority from Pity, collected the rents of the Wellesley Street property, and paid them to the Bank on account of the interest due on the appellant's debt to the Bank.

On the 29th January, 1916, the Wellesley Street property was put up for sale under the decree of the 27th November, 1910, and the respondent, under the liberty reserved to him by the decree, bid for and was declared the purchaser of the property; the purchase price was Rs. 1,25,000, a sum less than the total amount owing under the decree. The respondent paid to the Registrar a deposit of Rs. 31,250 out of his own monies.

Apart from the debt to the Bank there was at this time another account open between the appellant and the respondent upon which money was owing to the respondent. To secure this account the appellant had deposited certain jewellery with the respondent. Differences arose between the appellant and respondent in connection with the transactions which have been described, and one Mitter, a mutual friend of both parties, intervened to compose them. Mitter's story, which was accepted by the Trial Judge, and is not questioned by the High Court, is that on the 12th July, 1917, a verbal agreement was made between the respondent and Mitter, who in this regard acted as agent for the appellant.

The first part of the agreement was to the following effect, namely:—

(1) That the amount due to the respondent in respect of the account secured by the deposit of jewellery was agreed as Rs. 31,000, of which Rs. 27,000 was to be paid at once and the balance of Rs. 4,000 was to be paid before December then next.

(2) That upon payment of the Rs. 27,000 the jewellery was to be returned by the respondent.

It seems clear that into the account so settled there was brought in the amount for interest paid by the respondent to the Bank in August, 1914, and his claim for commission in respect of the Bank's loan.

The second part of the agreement was that the appellant should pay forthwith to the Bank the amount then claimed by the Bank for interest, which had been ascertained at Rs. 30,275-14-1 and keep down the future interest so far as the rents were insufficient to meet them, and that the respondent should make over the Wellesley Street property to the appellant upon the ultimate payment of the capital and interest of the Bank's loan. The appellant alleged he was to have three years in which to make the ultimate payment, but in this respect he was not corroborated by Mitter. As soon as agreement was reached Mitter obtained from the appellant a cheque in his own favour for Rs. 57,275-14-1 to cover (a) the Rs. 27,000, the first instalment of the Rs. 31,000, and (b) the Rs. 30,275-14-1 due for interest, and endorsed this cheque over to the respondent. At the same time Mitter handed to the respondent a form of receipt which he was to sign and return with the jewellery on the following day.

The respondent took the cheque for Rs. 57,250-14-1 and paid Rs. 30,275-14-1 to the Bank, but on various excuses he refused to sign the receipt or to return the jewellery. The matter dragged on till October, when a modification of the July agreement was reached. Both Courts below find that a modification of the agreement took place in October, but it is not clear what either Court considered the full scope of the modification to have been. In their Lordships' judgment the effect of the modification was as follows, namely:—

(1) That the Rs. 4,000 balance of the Rs. 31,000, should be increased to Rs. 6,000.

(2) That upon payment of the Rs. 6,000 the jewellery should be handed over by the respondent to the appellant.

(3) That the sale of the Wellesley Street property should be confirmed in the respondent's name, the price of Rs. 1,25,000 being set off against the decree and that the deposit paid by the respondent should be returned to him.

(4) That the appellant should pay to the respondent interest at the usual Bank rate on the deposit from the time it was made until its payment, and

(5) That upon payment by the appellant to the Bank of what was due to the Bank and to the respondent of what is due to him in respect of the matters which have been mentioned, the respondent should make over the Wellesley Street property to the appellant.

Accordingly on the 20th October, 1917, an order was made confirming the sale to the respondent, who was given liberty to set off the amount of the purchase price, viz., Rs. 1,25,000, against what was due to the appellant and respondent under the decree, and the Registrar was directed to return the deposit to the respondent. The deposit, less the Registrar's commission, was returned to the respondent, but in the first instance, with a view to saving costs, no sale certificate was taken out.

On the 24th January, 1918, the appellant executed a fresh promissory note in favour of the Bank. No further progress was made during the year 1918. The appellant did not pay any interest to the Bank and no rents were paid into the Bank by the respondent after the 29th January, 1916. There is some suggestion that Pity made a payment to the respondent in respect of the balance of the decree against him remaining after the set off directed by the order of the 20th October, 1917.

On the 18th January, 1919, the appellant's solicitors wrote to the respondent's solicitors that their client had made every arrangement to pay off the amount due and asked for particulars of the Bank's debt. No answer was received.

On the 10th February, 1919, the respondent took out the sale certificate in his own name and on the 14th February, 1919, his solicitors wrote to the appellant's solicitors informing them of the fact and setting up a claim on their client's behalf to be paid a sum of Rs. 1,72,386-14-9, which included items already dealt with in the settlement of July, 1917, and a large item in respect of certain jute transactions which up to that point had not come into the matter.

Further correspondence followed in which in effect the respondent claimed the Wellesley Street property as his own, alleged that the cheque for Rs. 57,275-14-1, received by him in July, 1917, was paid on general account, claimed that the jewellery was deposited to cover all accounts, and reiterated his claim in respect of the jute transactions.

On the 22nd September, 1919, the respondent sold the Wellesley Street property for Rs. 2,04,000, and on the 17th February, 1920, he paid off the amount due to the Bank. The difference between the sale price and what was paid to the Bank was about Rs. 29,000. Shortly afterwards the appellant launched the present suits.

In the first suit he claimed (1) a return of the jewellery upon payment of the Rs. 4,000 in accordance with the agreement of July, 1917, and damages for conversion, or alternatively (2) payment of the value of the jewellery with interest.

It is to be observed that no reference is made in this plaint to the modified agreement made in October, 1917.

In the second suit the appellant claimed damages against the defendant, alleging in effect a sale of the Wellesley property in breach of the respondent's obligations to the appellant and at an undervalue. The parties were unable to agree the form of the issues, though both parties seem to have accepted the view that in each suit one of the issues should be whether if there was an agreement in July, 1917, there was any subsequent modification of that agreement.

Ultimately the trial proceeded and the issues were settled by the Trial Judge, who incorporated them in his judgment.

The issues were as follows:—

“(1) Was there an agreement on the 12th July, 1917, whereby:—

“(a) Defendant should accept Rs. 31,000 in full settlement of his claim? Rs. 27,000 to be paid at once and Rs. 4,000 in the following December and thereupon to return the jewellery to the plaintiff.

“(b) The plaintiff should pay the accrued interest to the Bank reducing the amount due to the capital figure of the loan, namely, Rs. 1,50,000, and on payment thereof become solely entitled to the property?

“(2) Was the agreement modified in the following October to the extent that the plaintiff was to pay the defendant Rs. 6,000 instead of Rs. 4,000?

“(3) Was this agreement broken by the defendant? If so, what damages is the plaintiff entitled to?

“(4) If there was no such agreement or if it was not broken by the defendant, is the plaintiff as a joint decree-holder with the defendant entitled to any relief against him in consequence of the sale of the property.”

The learned Trial Judge in substance found in the affirmative on issues 1 and 2 and on the first part of issue 3, and treated issue 4 as in the circumstances not arising. The learned Judge seems to have taken the view that the sale was a breach of agreement, and that there was some evidence to justify the question of undervalue being investigated on an enquiry as to damages.

By the decree in respect of the first suit the respondent was ordered to pay to the appellant Rs. 20 as damages for detention of the jewellery and upon payment by the appellant of Rs. 6,000 to deliver over the jewellery to the appellant, and in respect of the second suit (1) it was referred to the Assistant Referee to take an account of the sums, if any, due to the respondent by the appellant under the agreement mentioned in the plaint and issues in the second suit, and (2) to ascertain the amount of damages due to the appellant from the respondent in respect of breach of the said agreement, and the further hearing of the second suit was adjourned.

The respondent appealed. The High Court allowed the appeal and dismissed both suits. The ground of dismissal in the first suit was that the plaint was confined to the agreement of July, 1917, and that there was, therefore, a variance between the pleadings and the case alleged at the trial.

As to the second suit the High Court held that the proper inference from what took place in October, 1917, was that the parties agreed that the respondent should be the absolute owner of the Wellesley Street property, but subject to an option to the appellant to purchase back the property within a reasonable time, and that the appellant had failed within a reasonable time to exercise the option.

P. C.

v.
 J.C. Galstaun,
 Lord Tomlin.

A full and critical examination of the material available has, with the assistance of counsel, been made before their Lordships' Board.

Their Lordships, so far as the first suit is concerned, see no reason to differ from the main findings of facts of the Trial Judge, and are of opinion that the High Court founded themselves upon too narrow a ground in dismissing the suit for variance. Their Lordships are satisfied that, notwithstanding the form of the plaint, the suit was fought by the parties deliberately upon issues substantially as framed by the Trial Judge and ought upon that footing to be determined.

The second suit presents more difficulty, but their Lordships find themselves unable to escape the conclusion that the High Court in forming an opinion upon the events of October, 1917, have not given sufficient weight to what was the dominant relation between the parties in connection with the Wellesley Street property.

Their Lordships are unable to accept Mr. Justice Ghose's view that in law the property belonged to the plaintiff and defendant in equal shares when the order of the 20th October, 1917, was made.

There is no doubt that up to the moment when the respondent was declared the purchaser of the property his interest in it as between himself and the appellant was this and this only, that he was entitled to treat himself as secured by means of Pity's mortgage against any liability with which he might ultimately be fixed in respect of the loan by the Bank. What the purpose was in the respondent becoming the purchaser of the property is not clear upon the evidence, though there is material from which it might fairly be inferred that he did so by arrangement with the appellant merely to get rid of Pity's interest in the property and not so as to alter the relation between himself and the appellant. Their Lordships do not find anything to support Mr. Justice Buckland's statement that it was not disputed that the purchase was on behalf of the two unless that statement is intended to express the position which has just been indicated. However this may be, their Lordships are of opinion that the transactions of October, 1917, either continued or restored the original relation between the parties. In other words as from October, 1917, at any rate, the respondent had no interest in the property except as a creditor with a security upon it, but the field of indebtedness covered by the security was somewhat enlarged because in their Lordships' view the respondent was to have secured to him payment of the Rs. 6,000 and the interest on his deposit as well as to be protected against liability in respect of the Bank's loan.

Upon this footing the respondent held the property to secure himself in the manner indicated and subject thereto was a trustee of it for the appellant—a sale by him of the property without the concurrence of the appellant who was entitled in equity to redeem it could not be justified.

Upon the question of undervalue their Lordships see no reason to differ from the view taken by the Trial Judge, and think that there is sufficient evidence to justify an enquiry being directed to bring out whether the sale was or was not at an undervalue. In all the circumstances and for the reasons which have been indicated their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal should be allowed and that the decree of the High Court of the 16th January, 1928, should be discharged, and that the following relief should be given, that is to say:—

I. That the decree of Mr. Justice Chotzner should be restored so far as it directs delivery up by the respondent to the appellant of the jewellery upon payment of the Rs. 6,000, and so far as it gives relief by way of enquiry as to value in the event of the respondent failing to deliver up the jewellery to the appellant.

II. That it should be declared that the respondent held the Wellesley Street property as a security for (a) all sums paid by him since October, 1917, for principal and interest in respect of his obligation as guarantor of the Bank's debt; (b) the sum of Rs. 6,000 agreed to be paid to him in October, 1917; (c) interest at the usual Bank rate on the deposit of Rs. 31,250 in accordance with the agreement of October, 1917; and (d) his mortgagee's costs, charges and expenses properly incurred, including the Registrar's commission on the deposit, and any costs of taking out the sale certificate, and that, subject as aforesaid, the respondent held the Wellesley Street property in trust for the appellant.

III. That it should be also declared that the sale by the respondent without the appellant's consent of the Wellesley Street property was a breach of the respondent's duty to the appellant.

IV. That the matter be remitted to the High Court in order that directions may be given—

(1) for the taking of the following accounts and enquiry

(that is to say)—

(a) An account of what is due from the appellant to the respondent upon the footing of the declaration No. II.

(b) An account against the respondent of (i) the proceeds of sale of the Wellesley Street property received by the respondent; (ii) the rents of the same property since the 29th January, 1916, upon the footing of the respondent being a mortgagee in possession; and (iii) any monies received by the respondent from Pity in satisfaction of the decree against Pity.

(c) An inquiry what damages (if any) the appellant has suffered by reason of the sale, the question whether or not the sale was at an under-value to be taken into consideration upon the enquiry: and

(2) for setting off what is certified under account (a) against the aggregate of what is certified under account (b) and enquiry (c), with consequential directions for payment of the balance to the party entitled.

V. That the costs of the appellant before their Lordships' Board and in the Courts below heretofore incurred be paid by the respondent, but that the costs of and consequent upon the accounts and enquiry to be taken as the result of this appeal be reserved to be dealt with by the High Court or as the High Court shall direct.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The respondent was an employee of the appellant Bank. By his contract of service he was bound to serve as an employee of the Bank at Constantinople and other places. On being asked to the appellant Bank that he being a Turkish subject, his life was in danger at Constantinople in its then troubled state, and requested a provisional transfer to one of the Bank's agencies outside Turkey. The appellant declined to accede to that request and refused to allow him to leave, whereupon the respondent fled from Constantinople. The appellant Bank dismissed him from service without notice and without pension for grave fault within the meaning of the book of regulations which dealt with conditions of service and a contributory pension fund for the staff.

In a suit brought by the respondent for damages for wrongful dismissal,

Held, (i) that the risk to the respondent was such that he was not bound to obey the Bank's order to him to remain in Constantinople and the said order was, therefore, not a lawful one;

(ii) that the respondent's refusal was not a grave fault within the meaning of the book of regulations;

(iii) that the respondent's offer of service outside Turkey afforded a complete answer to the appellant's pleas that the respondent was under a permanent disability to serve the appellant and that that contract of service had become incapable of performance by the time of dismissal;

(iv) that respondent was, therefore, entitled to damages for wrongful dismissal.

21st January, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD THANKERTON.—In this action the plaintiff, who is respondent in the leading appeal, seeks to recover damages for wrongful dismissal from the defendant Bank, who are appellants in the leading appeal.

The Trial Judge found the appellants liable in damages, which he assessed on an alternative basis. The appellants appealed to the Supreme Court of Cyprus, who affirmed the Trial Judge on the question of liability, but directed the re-assessment of damages on a lower basis. From that judgment the leading appeal was taken by the appellants on the question of liability, and the respondent has taken a cross-appeal on the question of damages.

The respondent, who was an Armenian and a Turkish subject, became a temporary employee of the appellant Bank in 1901 at the branch office at Aidin in Turkish Asia Minor. In 1903 he entered the permanent service of the Bank, and subscribed to a book of regulations, called "Caisse de Pensions et de Retraites," which deals with conditions of service and a contributory pension fund for the staff. He continued in their service until 27th January, 1923, when he was dismissed without notice and without pension under the circumstances referred to later.

The respondent remained at the Aidin Branch until 1913, when he went to the Sokia Branch, from which he was re-transferred to Aidin in June, 1919, immediately before the destruction of Aidin by the Kemalists, by whom he was imprisoned and sentenced to death. The timely arrival of the Greek forces enabled him to avoid the execution of the sentence and to escape to Smyrna. After various changes he came back to Smyrna in July, 1920, and he remained there until 8th September, 1922, when he applied for and obtained leave, but was asked by Mr. Simmons, the branch manager, to take a confidential letter to the Head Office at Constantinople.

The respondent arrived at Constantinople on 10th September, 1922, delivered the letter, and was given temporary employment at the Head Office, which appears to have superseded his leave. Meantime Smyrna was destroyed by the Turkish forces. The respondent's story of his experiences at Constantinople, which substantially remains unchallenged, is as follows:—

"I found Constantinople in a disturbed state. I went to the Bank and saw Mr. Ungar, the sub-manager in the Direction Generale. I gave the confidential letter Mr. Simmons had given me to Mr. Ungar. I also told him what Mr. Simmons had told me confidentially. I explained to him the state of affairs in Smyrna. At this interview I asked him to allow me to leave Constantinople; because it was unsafe for me to remain. I told him I had been condemned to death at Aidin and that, therefore, I could not remain. Mr. Ungar referred me to Mr. Skanzianni, le chef du Personnel. I saw him. At the office of Mr. Skanzianni, Mr. Bouzourou happened to be present, and Mr. Skanzianni called in the Chef du Bureau, Mr. Goyar. I explained everything to Mr. Skanzianni and asked permission to leave. He laughed at me. Mr. Bouzourou was then Chef du Bureau du Personnel. I was not given leave. I stayed in Constantinople for 20 days, asking him every day to transfer me to any branch outside Turkey. They would not do so. Instead of giving me leave they gave me temporary work. On Thursday evening, on coming out of the office, I came across Tewfik Bey who had been Chief of Police at Aidin at that crucial time. He was in mufti. I could not recognise him. He questioned me. I was much perturbed and immediately changed my hotel for fear that he should betray me at any time. On the Friday (28.9.22), the Bank was closed. On the Saturday I went to relate the incident of meeting Tewfik Bey to my Chief. The Chief came late, 9-30 or 10 A.M., so I saw two Sub-Chiefs, Mr. Berturucchi and Mr. Baache. I related to both of them the incident of meeting Tewfik Bey, explained to them the whole affair; and stated that as my life was in danger I wanted to leave at once. There was a ship leaving on the Saturday morning at 10-30 A.M. for Athens. I had told these two gentlemen that I was going to Athens; and I left by this boat."

The respondent reached Athens on 1st October, 1922, and found there Mr. Simmons and most of the Smyrna staff. On 3rd October Mr. Simmons advanced to the respondent his salary for October, but took it back from him in view of a telegram he had received from the Head Office to the effect that the respondent was dismissed, though the ground of dismissal was not then stated.

In a letter of 2nd October, addressed to Mr. Simmons, and letters of 18th October and 15th November addressed to the Head Office, the respondent recounted the circumstances of personal danger which moved him to leave Constantinople, and again requested transfer to a branch outside Turkey. To the Head Office he protested against the dismissal. On 29th November the appellants wrote to the respondent:—

"We can hardly take into consideration the reasons put forward by you to explain your precipitate departure and your dereliction of the service. We would besides remind you that you have behaved in an analogous manner in 1920 when you were at Adana, and your relapse fully justifies the measure of revocation (dismissal) that has been applied in your case. However, we are willing to attenuate that penalty and would ask you to tender your resignation—which would enable us, on receipt of your letter, to consider the possibility of granting you pecuniary assistance. It should nevertheless be understood that this is a mere offer resulting out of extreme benevolence on our part, and that, should the same not be accepted by you, and should your acceptance of same not be notified to us within 25 days from to-day, it should be regarded as null and void."

The respondent declined that offer, and ultimately his name was struck off the list of members of the Bank's staff on 27th January, 1923.

Provision is made for dismissal in Art. 5 of the "Caisse de Pensions et de Retraites" as follows:—

"La Direction Generale a le droit de revoquer les employees pour faute grave ou abus commis dans leur fonctions, ou pour violation du secret qu'ils doivent garder sur les affaires de la Banque. La Direction Generale est seule juge d'apprecier le caractere de gravite de la faute. Elle a le droit de revocation pour fautes legeres successives et repetees malgre l'avertissement des superieurs."

Under Art. 18 neither an indemnity nor a pension of any other nature is granted to an employee who has been dismissed. Under Art. 19 an employee who resigns has no right to any pension or indemnity, but the Direction Generale have the faculty to grant him an amount not exceeding in capital the amount of the sums retained from his salary. Under Art. 2 a discharged employee has right to three months' notice and an indemnity borne by the Pension and Superannuation Fund and to be fixed in terms of Art. 21.

It was not disputed by counsel for the appellants that the risk of personal danger which caused the respondent's flight from Constantinople, in disregard of the appellants' repeated refusals to allow him to leave, was real and justified from the point of view of his personal safety, and, in their Lordships' opinion, this is established by the evidence, and, in particular, by that of Roy McLaughlan, an Officer in the Intelligence Department attached to the High Commissioner's Office in Constantinople. He stated that an Armenian who had been condemned by the Turkish authorities to death would be in "an uncomfortable position" there at the end of September, 1922, and that if he had been in the respondent's shoes he would have left Constantinople at the first possible opportunity.

On the contrary, the appellants submitted three contentions, all of which were based on the view that the respondent incurred a permanent personal disability, which incapacitated him from further ability to perform adequately his part of the contract. These contentions were (1) that, as a condition precedent to recovery of damages, the respondent must be in a position to offer implement of the contract on his part, and that the respondent, by reason of his permanent personal disability, was not in such a position; (2) that the supervening incapacity of an employee to perform the services contracted for, was a valid ground for dismissal, even though not founded on at the time of dismissal as a justification; and (3) that by reason of the respondent's permanent personal disability the contract became incapable of further performance, and that accordingly both parties were released from its obligations, thus excluding any action based on breach of contract. This contention was based on the principles to which effect was given in *Horlock v. Beal*¹ and cases therein referred to.

It was not seriously maintained by the appellants that their order to the respondent to remain in Constantinople was a lawful order which the respondent was bound to obey at the grave risk of his person. In their Lordships' opinion, the risk to the respondent was such that he was not bound to obey the order, which was, therefore, not a lawful one: *Turner v. Mason*² per Alderson, B. and per Rolfe, B.

1. (1916) 1 A.C. 486.

2. (1845) 14 M. & W. 112 at 117, 118.

It follows that the respondent's refusal was not "faute grave" such as is necessary to justify dismissal under Art. 5 of the regulations.

Admittedly the respondent undertook by his contract to serve the Bank in Turkey or any of its branches elsewhere, and the contentions of the appellants must all be tested as at the time of dismissal. In their Lordships' opinion, the appellants have failed to establish that at the time of dismissal they were entitled to regard the respondent's disability as a permanent one. In his letter of 2nd October the respondent requested a provisional transfer to one of the agencies outside Turkey "whilst awaiting the end of the present situation." The appellants have not suggested any impossibility of compliance with that request; indeed, they probably never considered it, in the view that they took of the situation.

On the views expressed above that the order to remain in Constantinople was not a lawful order, and that at the time the disability could not be regarded as a permanent one, their Lordships are of opinion that the respondent's offer of service outside Turkey is sufficient to entitle him to pursue the present suit, and that the appellants are equally unable to found on that disability as justification for the dismissal.

The failure of the appellants to establish that the disability had become permanent and that they could not employ him meantime at some place where the disability did not affect him, also disposes of the contention that the contract had become impossible of performance by the time of dismissal.

Accordingly their Lordships are of opinion that the dismissal of the respondent by the appellants was wrongful and that the respondent is entitled to recover damages.

On the question of damages, their Lordships agree with the majority of the learned Judges of the Supreme Court both as to the measure of the damages and the basis on which—for that purpose—the pension to which the respondent would have been entitled is to be calculated. Their Lordships are of opinion that the pension must be calculated, in terms of Art. 14, on the basis of the salary which the respondent in fact received on 31st December, 1922, irrespective of how that salary was arrived at. On that basis parties are agreed that the respondent would have been entitled to a pension of £T.56.375, but their Lordships are of opinion that the rate of conversion for the purposes of a decree in sterling should be the rate current at the time of dismissal instead of that current at the date of

In the view that their Lordships take of the measure of damages, parties are agreed that the amount of damages should be arrived at by taking the appropriate proportion of the £2,000 awarded by the Trial Judge on this basis, the amount of damages will be £1,378 10s. 6d., and the judgment of the Supreme Court will fall to be modified to that extent and the cross-appeal to be allowed for that purpose.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), S. 100—Charge on immoveable property—Deed creating—What amounts to—Deed prior to Transfer of Property Act—Provisions of section applicable under head of justice, equity and good conscience to.

In July, 1881, plaintiff's predecessor-in-title executed a usufructuary mortgage of a village to respondents, on the terms that the mortgagor was to have no power of redemption for a period of 15 years, and that after that he was to pay off the entire mortgage money. The respondents entered into possession, in the ordinary course, of the village.

In November, 1881, the plaintiff's predecessor executed a further document which recited that he had executed a possessory mortgage deed in respect of the whole village, and that he needed a further specified sum, which he had borrowed, and he then stipulated to repay the entire amount of the debt, principal and interest in a lump sum within the period stipulated in the former mortgage deed, namely, within 15 years, and he recited that he had borrowed the money by way of a further debt with interest at a certain rate. The deed then provided: "I shall first pay up this debt, including principal and interest, and thereafter I can redeem the mortgaged village, having paid up the mortgage money. Without the payment of this debt I cannot redeem the mortgaged village." It then provided that he should pay every year the interest on the amount, and if he did not, then he would execute separate bonds each year, bearing interest at the same rate.

*P.C. Appeal No. 30 of 1929.

Oudh Appeal No. 17 of 1928,

13th February, 1930.

Held, affirming the Court below, that the deed of November, 1881, created a charge upon the village.

When the deed of November, 1881, is looked at, it seems clear that the parties intended that the original village should remain in the possession of the mortgagees until the second debt was paid off, and intended, therefore, that the property should be security for the debt.

S. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to a transaction which took place before the date of the Act; but the principles that prevail in those circumstances for determining whether a deed prior to that date did or did not create a charge upon immoveable property are the principles of justice, equity and good conscience which for this purpose may be taken to be identical with the provisions in the Transfer of Property Act.

Appeal No. 30 of 1929 from a decree of the Chief Court of Oudh (Wazir Hasan and Mahomed Raza, JJ.), dated the 31st January, 1928, which varied a decree, which had been passed in a suit for redemption by the Subordinate Judge of Gonda on the 14th April, 1927.

The only question for determination on the present appeal was whether a document of 10th November, 1881 (the material terms of which appear from their Lordships' judgment) created a charge upon immoveable property. Differing from the Subordinate Judge on the construction of the deed, the learned Judges of the Chief Court held that it created a charge both for principal and interest due under it. They summed up their conclusion in the following words:—

“Condition 1 clearly means that the mortgagees will continue to remain in possession also in consideration of this fresh loan, principal and interest both. The mortgagees have, therefore, a lien of possession on the mortgaged property of which they can only be deprived on the discharge of the lien. This conclusion is further strengthened by condition No. 3, which is to the effect that the prior mortgage cannot be redeemed without payment of the debt, principal and interest, that might be found due under the deed of the 10th November, 1881. Nor do we see any justification in the language of the deed for accepting the argument addressed to us on behalf of the plaintiff that the charge or lien is restricted to the principal amount alone. The general rule is that the mortgagee, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, is entitled to treat the interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the estate. We are wholly unable to find anything in the deed in question which would bar the application of the general rule. On the contrary, the preamble, condition No. 1 and condition No. 3, all support the interpretation that the interest stands on the same footing as the principal itself (see the case of Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh).”

From the said decree of the Chief Court, the plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Lord Atkin.

13th February, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD ATKIN.—This is an appeal from the Chief Court of Oudh, in a redemption suit brought by the appellant against the respondents. The Chief Court had reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, and the question turns upon whether the plaintiff is obliged, in order to get redemption, to redeem a debt which was created by him by a document in writing of the 10th November, 1881. It appears that the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff was the Zemindar of the village of Parsapur, and that on the 11th July, 1881, he executed a usufructuary mortgage of the village to the respondents for Rs. 5,500, and the terms of the mortgage were that the mortgagor was to have no power of redemption for a period of 15 years; after that he was to pay off the entire mortgage money. The respondents entered into possession, in the ordinary course, of the village.

On the 10th November, 1881, the Zemindar executed a further document, and the question is, whether or not this document created a charge upon the village. It is unnecessary to set it out at length but it recites that he had executed a possessory mortgage deed in respect of the whole village, and that he needed a further sum of Rs. 2,500, which he had borrowed, and he then stipulated to repay the entire amount of the debt, principal and interest in a lump sum within the period stipulated in the former mortgage deed, namely, within 15 years, and he recited that he had borrowed the money by way, according to the correct translation, of a further debt with interest at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per month. The deed then provided: "I shall first pay up this debt, including principal and interest, and thereafter I can redeem the mortgaged village, having paid up the mortgage money. Without the payment of this debt I cannot redeem the mortgaged village." It then provides that he should pay every year the interest on the amount, and if he did not, then he would execute separate bonds each year, bearing interest at the same rate, and then it further stated, which is rather by way of repetition, that he could not pay up the prior mortgage money until he had paid off this debt, principal and interest.

Now, the question is whether that was intended by the parties to give a charge upon the property to the mortgagees for the amount of that debt. The Transfer of Property Act does not apply, as this transaction took place in 1881, and the Transfer of Property Act was passed in 1882; but the principles that prevail in those circumstances are the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and for this purpose their Lordships think, may be taken to be identical with the provisions in the Transfer of Property Act. The only question that the Court had to determine was, whether or not the parties intended that this debt should be charged upon the property.

The Chief Court, reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge, have held clearly that that was the intention. Their Lordships agree with that decision. It appears to them clear, when the subsequent deed is looked at that the parties intended that the original village should remain in the possession of the mortgagees until the second debt was paid off, and intended, therefore, that the property should be security for the debt.

In these circumstances it appears to their Lordships that the Court below could only come to one conclusion, and that their decision is amply supported by the case of Janardani Vishnu Kulkarni v. Anant Lakshmanshet,² a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, where the facts were almost identical with the facts in this case.

Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed, and that the appellant should pay the costs. The case, however, must be referred back to the Chief Court to extend the time beyond the 31st July, 1928, fixed by their decree, within which the appellant can redeem, and also to take any further accounts of principal, interest and costs.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), Ss. 164 (1) and 221—Encroachment—Proceeding before Magistrate to recover penalty—Plea of no encroachment—Sustainability.

When a Local Board moves a Magistrate under S. 221 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, to recover a penalty imposed under S. 164 (1) of that Act for alleged encroachment on land belonging to the Board, the defaulting party can plead that there was no encroachment at all, and the Magistrate can go into the question whether the alleged encroachment was true and therefore justified the imposition of the penalty.

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment in Mis. Case No. 44 of 1928 on the file of the Court of the 2nd Class Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Tadepalligudam at Pentapadu.

The facts of the case and the circumstances leading to the Reference to the Full Bench are set out in the judgment.

V. Govindarajachari for Petitioner.—In every proceeding under section 164 of the Madras Local Boards Act the first requisite is that the property, in respect of which it is instituted, must be shown to belong to the Local Board. There is no distinction in principle between cases arising under clauses (1) and (3) and cases under clause (2) of section 164. The section should be read with section 221 which contemplates an enquiry and not a summary order by the Magistrate regarding the amount to be recovered. To hold the contrary view will mean that even a genuine dispute between the accused and the Board as regards the character of his occupation cannot be gone into. Reliance was placed on the observations of Phillips, J., in *In re Gopayya*¹ and the observations of Waller, J., in *Union Board of Paramakudi v. Chellasami Tevar*² and Syid Mustapha Saheb v. Union Board of Kaveripattanam.³ The decision in Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi,⁴ was rightly dissented from in the later case of In re Raheem Sahib.⁵ The decision in *Rangesa Rao v. Swaminatha Aiyar*⁶ and *Narayana Aiyar v. Subramania Chetty*⁷ do not contain any discussion. Reliance was also placed on the unreported judgment in Cr. R.C. No. 1089 of 1928 and In re M. K. Narayana Aiyangar.⁸ Thus the preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that the Magistrate can go into the question if the encroachment was true.

F. B.
Ramaswami
v.

Taluq Board,
Tadepalligudam.

N. S. Mani for The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.—There is a difference in language between clauses (1) and (3) of section 164 on the one hand and clause (2) on the other. Section 221 applies only to a proceeding under clause (3). The section does not contemplate notice being issued to a party. Refers to section 207 (1) (c) of the Madras Local Boards Act.

[Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—The words in section 164 (1) are “vested in or belongs to a Local Board” and not “claimed to be vested in a Local Board.”]

If the question of encroachment is gone into the Magistrate will be constituted as a sort of appellate authority over the Local Board. Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi.⁴ There is a distinction between cases where the dispute is as to the amount due and cases where it is contended that the penalty cannot be levied at all.

K. Kameswara Rao for respondent argued on the same lines as the counsel for the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER. Curgenven, J.—This Criminal Revision Case comes before this Full Bench in the following circumstances. Under sub-sec. without permission upon ground belonging to the Taluq Board. The petitioner did not pay the penalty and accordingly the matter was referred to the Magistrate's Court under section 221 which provides that, in default of payment of such a sum, it may be levied under the warrant of a Magistrate. At the hearing of the case the point arose whether the Magistrate was competent to go into the question whether the alleged encroachment was true and, therefore, justified the imposition of the penalty; and following certain decisions, the Court came to the conclusion that it was not open to it to enquire into an issue of this character and accordingly although it recorded the evidence it refused to give an opinion upon the matter and directed that a warrant should issue for the recovery of Rs. 50 together with Rs. 10 as costs. The petitioner thereupon presented this Criminal Revision Case, which came in the first instance before Jackson, J. That learned Judge found that there were conflicting decisions with regard to the question at issue, and, deeming it to be an important point which frequently arises, directed that the matter should be placed before the Chief Justice for orders.

The case-law upon this subject has been laid before us and opens with the case of *Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi*¹, decided by Wallace and Devadoss, JJ. They were of the opinion that, if a contention of this kind were allowed to prevail, the Magistrate would be constituted as a sort of appellate authority over the Local Board in the matter of deciding whether or not there had been in fact an encroachment; and they pointed out what inconveniences would arise from such a situation. Nor did they think that the language of section 221 would justify such a construction. This case was followed by Devadoss, J., sitting alone, in *Rangesa Rao v. Swaminatha Aiyar*² and again by myself in *Narayana Aiyar v. Subramania Chetty*³. So far as my recollection of that case goes, no cases contra were cited before me and, sitting singly, I was of course bound to follow the ruling of a Bench. In the 1926 Madras Weekly Notes volume will be found two succeeding cases, *Union Board, Paramakudi v. Chellasami Tevar*⁴ and Syid Mustapha Saheb v. Union Board of Kaveripatnam,⁵ decided by Devadoss and Waller, JJ. In the judgments delivered by Waller, J., he was of opinion that under the parallel procedure by which a prosecution is instituted for breach of the law regarding encroachments and which is provided for in sections 164 (2) and 207 of the Act, it was open to an accused person to raise this question of whether the alleged encroachment was indeed an encroachment or not. But he was of opinion also that anomalous though it might be, when the case came before the Court under section 221 the decision in *Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi*¹ was right and should be followed.

The first Bench which seems to have taken a contrary view was in *In re Gopayya*², where Phillips and Madhavan Nair, JJ., had to deal with circumstances which gave rise to proceedings under section 221, the petitioner in that case having erected a pandal without the permission of the Union Board. The decision proceeded substantially upon other grounds but both the learned Judges, while acknowledging that this point did not really have to be decided, expressed their inability to follow Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi.¹ Phillips, J., observes with reference to the alleged inconvenience mentioned by Wallace and Devadoss, JJ., in that decision:

"The anomaly pointed out by Wallace, J., is that such a view would amount to the Magistrate being set up as a final Judge over the Local Board. When, however, it is remembered that the Board has applied to the Magistrate for the recovery of the dues, it is not open to the Magistrate to decide summarily and recover the amount without enquiry; and he must be satisfied before he issues the order that such order is correct. If the offender had been prosecuted under section 219, he would be able to plead that no offence had been committed by him, and therefore on the facts of this case it is difficult to hold that he must be precluded from such a defence because a different form of procedure has been taken against him."

That, in other words, of course, is the anomaly detected by Waller, J., in *Syid Mustapha Saheb v. Union Board, Kaveripatnam*³. A similar case came before Waller and Pandalai, JJ., in *In re Raheem Sahib*⁴ and there, after referring to all the previous decisions, the conclusion was come to that *Ramachandran Servai v. President, Union Board, Karaikudi*¹ had been wrongly decided and the view was expressed that a Magistrate should go into the question of the merits of the Board's action before enforcing the payment of the penalty. The same point has been decided in the same sense by Waller and Anantakrishna Aiyar, JJ., in Criminal Revision Case No. 1089 of 1928. As I have already said, it has not been disputed before us that, where a prosecution has been instituted for failure to comply with the terms of a notice, it is competent to the Court in disposing of the case under section 207 to undertake an enquiry of this character. This has been recently decided by a Bench composed of the learned Chief Justice and Cornish, J., in a case so far unreported, In re M. K. Narayana Aiyangar, in Criminal Revision Case No. 247 of 1929.

It appears then that the recent trend of authority has been distinctly in the direction of holding that the nature of an alleged encroachment may be investigated. Mr. Mani, however, for the Crown has asked us to hold on the language of the Act itself that this view of the matter is incorrect. Under section 164 (1) the land which is occupied must be vested in or belong to a Local Board. It is only then that the occupant shall be bound to pay such sum as may be demanded of him by the local authority by way of penalty and, "such sum," the section goes on, "may be recovered in the manner hereinafter provided". This seems clearly to mean that the recovery of the sum must be contingent upon satisfaction of the conditions which the section lays down, namely, that the land must be vested in or belong to a Local Board and accordingly it would be illegal for the Board to levy a penalty in respect of a so-called encroachment upon any land which does not satisfy that condition. Whether or not, however, it is open to the Court which has to enforce this order under section 221 to enquire into whether the land was so vested or not must, of course, depend upon the terms of that section. It may be conceded that they are not very clear. The last sentence of sub-section (1) provides that "the amount or apportionment of any such sum shall in case of dispute be ascertained by such Magistrate". It is possible to give a narrow and also a broad meaning to that direction. But we think that it would be very reasonable to give it the construction which has been adopted by the learned Judges who decided *In re Gopayya*⁶, namely, that where the Court has power to decide upon the amount or the apportionment of the sum "it is difficult to understand why it should not be open to it to decide that the amount is nil." It seems undesirable to go into the relative advantages and disadvantages of the two constructions. In the one case it has been suggested that the Magistrate would be converted into a Civil Court if he had to go into the difficult questions of title upon which many of these encroachment cases are founded. On the other hand there is the disadvantage that under section 164 a Local Board may, perhaps without due enquiry, impose and demand a penalty in respect of an alleged encroachment and that, if the power of the Magistrate to enquire into the truth of the prosecution allegations is withheld, the party has no remedy except that of a slow and troublesome civil suit. The clear preponderance of opinion is in favour of the view that the Magistrate has such a power and we are of the opinion that it is the correct view.

In these circumstances, we set aside the order of the Trial Court and remand the case for a finding on the evidence whether the alleged encroachment is true, and for disposal, accordingly. Meanwhile the fine and costs paid, if any, will be refunded.

A decree for specific performance directed the payment by the plaintiff of the purchase-money into Court within three weeks from the date of judgment. The plaintiff, however, committed default and applied for extension of time after the expiry of the time allowed by the decree.

Held, the Court had the power to enlarge the time; and the power can be exercised on sufficient cause shown even if the application is made after the date fixed by the decree.

N. C. Vijayaraghavachari for petitioner.

P. Satyanarayana for respondent.

The Court delivered the following

Jackson, J.

JUDGMENTS. Jackson, J.—The petitioner seeks to revise the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in C.M.P. No. 299 of 1925.

The petitioner was defendant in O.S. No. 308 of 1922 brought by counter-petitioner, the plaintiff, for specific performance of a contract to sell immoveable property. It was decreed against the petitioner that, on counter-petitioner depositing Rs. 300 in three weeks from the date of the decree, the petitioner should execute a sale-deed and put counter-petitioner in possession of the property (Appeal No. 39 of 1923, Additional Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam). The counter-petitioner did not deposit the amount within three weeks and applied after the expiry of that period for extension of time. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge extended the time accordingly and hence this revision petition.

There is clear authority that in suits under the Specific Relief Act where the decree has named as here a time within which payment should be made the Court can extend that period. See Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib.¹

It would hardly avail the petitioner in these proceedings to contend that there is equal authority to the contrary. This is not a second appeal and if the Lower Court has applied its mind to the question of law and has followed authority, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity.

The only possible contention is that *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib*¹ is so wrong as to be no authority at all. In that case the learned Judges point out that according to English practice a decree for specific relief is not regarded as closed and that the same rule obtains in India is clear from the Act itself. Section 35, Act I of 1877, lays down that the Court may rescind the contract if the purchaser has obtained possession of the property and has made default in payment of the purchase money. Obviously default in payment has not ipso facto rescinded the decree. The time fixed may be taken as a general indication of what is reasonable and is not an absolute condition.

Mahommadalli Sahib
v.
Abdul Khadir
Sahib.
Jackson, J.

This with all respect lays down an eminently sensible rule of procedure (as the Chief Justice observes the contrary view would seem to be absurd) and there is no ruling really to the contrary. In a suit not for specific relief but for recovery of certain property it was held in *Moideen Kuppai v. Ponmuswami Pillai*² that a Court cannot modify its decree either under section 148 or under section 151, Code of Civil Procedure, which seems to be a salutary rule, but here the question is not one of modification but of interpretation. In *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahman Sahib*¹ it is held that the decree as it stands admits of the extension of time and there is no necessity to alter it (page 155). In *Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi*³ a single Judge applied *Moideen Kuppai v. Ponmuswami Pillai*² to a decree under the Specific Relief Act. *Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone*⁴ which was also applied merely lays down that a confirming appellate decree does not enlarge the time. These rulings are fully discussed in *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahman Sahib*¹ and *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahman Sahib*¹ has been followed in Rama Bhatlu v. Annayya Bhatlu.⁵

The only circumstance which distinguishes the present case is that here the application for extension was made after the expiry of the period, but as the learned Additional Subordinate Judge correctly observes once it is held that time is not essential, it is immaterial whether the application be made before or after the expiry. Whether it has been made within reasonable time is a question of fact to be determined in each case. The learned Judge has found that the delay from October, 1923 to April, 1924, was reasonable.

There is, therefore, no ground for interference and the petition is dismissed with costs.

Thiruvankata Achariar, J.—The applicant before us was the defendant in O.S. No. 308 of 1922 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Gudivada and the respondent was the plaintiff therein. The suit was for the specific performance of a contract of sale of immoveable properties by the defendant to the plaintiff. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, but on appeal the Additional Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, passed as follows:—

"That on the appellant (plaintiff) depositing Rs. 300 in three weeks from this date in the Lower Court, the respondent do execute a sale-deed to the appellant in respect of the scheduled site and do put him in possession of the same."

This decree was passed on 30th October, 1923.

The plaintiff failed to deposit the amount within the time allowed by the decree. He deposited the amount only on 7th April, 1924, and filed an application for execution of the decree but it was dismissed on the ground that the payment of the money was not made within the time allowed by the decree. The plaintiff thereupon applied to the Appellate Court which passed the decree to extend the time for payment of the purchase money and that Court has by its order, dated 14th July, 1925, extended the time as prayed.

The defendant has preferred this application for the revision of that order. The grounds on which the application is pressed before us are:

(1) that the Lower Court had no power to enlarge the time for the payment of the purchase money which was allowed by the decree;

(2) that even if it had such a power it could be exercised only if the application for enlargement of time is made before the expiry of the period allowed by the decree;

(3) that in this case there were no sufficient grounds for excusing the delay and extending the time for payment of the purchase money.

As regards the first point the learned Subordinate Judge has on the authority of *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib*¹ held that he had the power to extend the time allowed by the decree for payment of the purchase money. He has also held that such an order can be made even when the application for enlargement of time is made after the expiry of the time allowed by the decree. The case in *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib*¹ has been followed by Phillips, J., sitting as a single Judge in *Rama Bhatli v. Annayya Bhatli*⁵ and it clearly supports the order made by the Subordinate Judge.

5. (1925) 49 M.L.J. 152.

It is contended before us by the learned Vakil for the applicant that the observations made by the learned Judges in *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib*¹, dissenting from the view taken in *Moideen Kuppai v. Ponnuswami Pillai*² and *Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi*³, which is in favour of the petitioner's contention, are obiter as they were made in the appeal itself which was preferred from the decree granting specific performance. The effect of the appeal which was preferred by the defendant in that case against the decree for specific performance passed against him was, it is contended, to re-open the whole case as between the parties and it was competent to the Appellate Court to vary the decree appealed from as regards the time to be allowed to the plaintiff for payment of the purchase money to the defendant and that was the effect of the appellate decree in that case.

The cases reported in *Moideen Kuppai v. Ponnuswami Pillai*² and *Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi*³ are, on the other hand, it is contended, direct authorities for the contrary view, namely, that the provision in the decree as to payment of the money within the time allowed therein is a condition imposed by the decree itself for securing the relief granted, namely the execution of conveyance for the property in plaintiff's favour and the delivery of possession of the property to him and an order extending the time for payment of the purchase money would be really a modification of the decree which can be made only in an appeal preferred against the decree or in an application for review of the decree. There is no doubt as to this contention being supported by the case in *Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi*³, which is a decision of K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., sitting as a single Judge. In the case reported in *Moideen Kuppai v. Ponnuswami Pillai*² the decree under consideration does not appear to have been a decree for specific performance, and, therefore, that case does not affect the question nor the case in *Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone*⁴, in which this question was not raised. We have, therefore, in support of the contention urged by the petitioner's Vakil only the decision of a single Judge in *Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi*³ and in that case the question was not considered in the light of the provisions enacted in section 35 of the Specific Relief Act which has a material bearing on the question. It may be that the present question did not exactly arise for decision in *Abdul Shaker Sahib v. Abdul Rahiman Sahib*¹, but the question was fully considered and dealt with by both the learned Judges in that case and their view has been followed by Phillips, J., in *Rama Bhatlu v. Annayya Bhatlu*⁵, in which the question did arise for decision. The weight of authority, therefore, is decidedly in favour of the view that even in the case of a decree framed like the decree in this case, which I may observe is the form which has been in vogue in such cases the Court which passed the decree has the power to enlarge the time allowed for the payment of the purchase money. There can be no doubt as to the desirability of the Court having such a power. If it has not, its power to render justice in such cases will be seriously crippled.

Turning to section 35 of the Specific Relief Act it will be seen that it deals with three cases enumerated as (a) to (c) of which case (c) alone is relevant to the present question. The section so far as that case is concerned runs as follows:—

“Any person interested in a contract may sue to have it rescinded, and such rescission may be adjudged by the Court in any of the following cases, namely:—

* * * *

(c) where a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale, * * * a lease has been made, and the purchaser . . . makes default in payment of the purchase money or other sums which the Court has ordered him to pay.

When the purchaser . . . is in possession of the subject-matter, and the Court finds that such possession is wrongful, the Court may also order him to pay to the vendor . . . the rents and profits, if any, received by him as such possessor.

In the same case, the Court may, by order in the suit in which the decree has been made and not complied with, rescind the contract, either so far as regards the party in default, or altogether, as the justice of the case may require.”

It will be seen that the decree for specific performance of a contract of sale has not the effect of extinguishing the contract of sale by merging it in the decree. On the other hand notwithstanding the decree, the contract of sale is still treated as a subsisting contract and when the purchaser makes default by not paying the purchase money or other sums within the time allowed therefor by the decree it is open to the vendor to have the contract rescinded and he may seek that relief either by a suit of his own or by an application made in the suit in which the decree for specific performance of the contract for the sale of land has already been made and not complied with.

5. (1925) 49 M.L.J. 152.

It was argued by the petitioner's Vakil that the words "in the same case" in the last sentence of the section refer only to the case put in the preceding sentence, i.e., the case where the purchaser who has obtained the decree for specific performance is also in possession of the subject-matter of the contract. Apart from authority, I think it is fairly clear that the words "in the same case" in the last clause of the section refer to case (c) and it has also been so held in Kurpal Hemraj v. Shamrao Raghnath.⁶ There is no reason for confining the summary remedy provided in the last clause to those cases where the purchaser who has obtained a decree for specific performance is also in possession of the property to which it relates. In the present case, therefore, it was open to the respondent to apply for the rescission of the contract on account of the default made by the applicant in payment of the purchase money. Upon such an application the Court may order either the immediate rescission of the contract if it considers that the purchaser has already had sufficient time and has made wilful default or it may grant further time peremptorily for payment of the purchase money and in case of default order rescission of the contract. See Fry on Specific Performance, 6th Ed., section 1173. On ordering a rescission of the contract, the Court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require. See section 38 of the Specific Relief Act. It follows from this that the right to enforce the decree is not extinguished unless and until a final order is made rescinding the contract. And as the Court has got the power to condone the default when the vendor applies for a rescission of the contract it would be anomalous to hold that it has not that power when no such application has yet been made.

It is argued that as there is no statutory provision for enlargement of time for payment of the purchase money as there is in the case of decrees for payment of mortgage money, such a power cannot be implied. This argument will have some force, if there was any statutory provision as to what a decree for specific performance of the sale of land should contain and there was in it no provision for enlargement of time. But as the matter has not been dealt with at all, the argument has no force, specific performance being an equitable remedy, it should be presumed that the Court here were left to be guided by long-established practice of the Courts of Equity in England which have been administering that relief. I am, therefore, of opinion that the contention that the Court has no power to enlarge the time for the payment of the purchase money was rightly overruled.

As regards the second point, I am of opinion that the power to enlarge the time originally granted may be exercised from time to time on sufficient cause being shown and the Court may do so even if the application for enlargement of time is made after the expiry of the period already granted.

As regards the question whether there was no sufficient cause to excuse the delay and to grant further time in the present case, that is a question relating to the merits of the case and even if it has been wrongly decided, we cannot interfere with the learned Judge's decision on that point in revision.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Interest—Improvement lease—Rent payable depending on future contingent event—Time depending on Government assessing lands to revenue—Suit to recover arrears of rent—Claim for interest on rent decreed—Interest Act (XXXII of 1839)—Applicability—Doctrine of equitable grounds for awarding interest—Interest whether recoverable by way of damages—Contract Act, 1872, S. 73, Ill. (n)—Rent charged on land—Different rule regarding interest.

An improvement lease, under which waste lands were to be gradually brought under cultivation, provided that the tenant should pay rent at a certain rate from the year in which the lands were in future assessed to Government revenue. The landlord instituted a suit to recover the arrears of rent, which accrued under the lease deed, together with interest thereon. The claim in respect of rent having been decreed,

Held: the plaintiff was not entitled to interest under the Interest Act, 1839, on the arrears of rent decreed to him, because neither the sum nor the time was certain within the meaning of that Act.

Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand, (1859) 7 M.I.A. 263 and Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co. v. Hart, (1929) A.C. 631, relied on.

Held, further, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest apart from the Interest Act, either on general equitable grounds or by way of damages under S. 73, Ill. (n) of the Contract Act.

Doctrine of "equitable grounds" for awarding interest discussed.

Per Madhavan Nair, J.—As regards a party's claim to interest, apart from the Interest Act, the law in India may be taken to be the same as in England. The Interest Act is exhaustive and only such equitable grounds as were recognised in Courts of Equity can be relied on in awarding interest on equitable grounds.

Where, however, under the lease deed, rent is charged on the leased properties or on other properties belonging to the lessee, the landlord will be entitled to recover interest on the arrears of rent, although there are no words allowing interest in the lease deed itself.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips. The question raised is whether the defendants are liable to pay interest on the rent due by them under a written lease. The learned Judge has held that the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839) is not applicable but that interest is nevertheless payable on general equitable grounds. The case has been argued fully on both sides and numerous authorities have been cited. To my mind, the case presents no difficulty, although the state of the law is not satisfactory, and I shall briefly deal with the points raised without burdening my judgment with needless citation of cases.

The effect of the lease deed is thus stated in the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips:

"It is clear from the terms of the document that the payment of rent to the plaintiff is to commence as soon as the lands are assessed. The lease is an improvement lease under which the lands are to be gradually brought under cultivation and until they are so brought under cultivation nothing would be payable either to the Government or to the jenmi."

Again, the learned Judge refers to a clause in the lease,

"Under which the tenant agrees to pay, from the year in which Government revenue is paid, rent at the rate of three-fourth of a para for one para seed area."

It is not disputed that these passages correctly represent the effect of the document. The question then arises, does the Interest Act apply?

I leave out the words which are not relevant for the present purpose and reproduce that part of the Act with which we are concerned.

"It is, therefore, hereby enacted that, upon all debts or sums certain payable at a certain time, the Court before which such debts or sums may be recovered may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time, provided that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law."

The question then is, is the sum certain and is the time certain? Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has contended that under the instrument, both the sum and the time should in the eye of the law be deemed to be certain. This contention cannot prevail in view of the authorities by which we are bound. In fact, the argument of the learned Advocate is precisely that which was adopted in the case of *Duncombe v. Brighton Club and Norfolk Hotel Co.*¹ A different view had been taken by the Exchequer Chamber in the earlier case of *Merchant Shipping Co. v. Armitage*². In the last mentioned case, the Court came to the conclusion,

"That where a sum of money was payable under a charterparty after the right delivery of the cargo, in cash two months after the date of the ship's report inwards at the custom house, although the time was ascertained and became settled by the event, the money was not payable at a 'time certain' within the meaning of the statute."

1. (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 371.

2. (1873) L.R. 9 Q.B. 99 at 114.

In the former case, the majority of the Court came to the conclusion "that although you had not the sum or the time actually mentioned in the written instrument, yet if the written instrument contained provisions which on the happening of an event rendered the time or the sum certain, that was sufficient within the meaning of the statute, and interest could be allowed."

It is in the words of Lord Herschell that I have stated above the effect of the two decisions to which I have referred; see *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co.*³ Having quoted these cases, the learned Lord, though disposed to treat the Armitage case as of greater weight, refuses to express any decided opinion as to which of these views is the correct one. Lord Morris feels no doubt that the law is correctly stated in the Armitage case (see p. 442). But Lord Shand observes that the Duncombe case appeals more forcibly to his mind than the other case. We are not concerned with this conflict, for the Indian Courts are bound by the law settled beyond doubt, by two Privy Council cases, one of them being a very recent one. In *Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co. v. Hart*⁴ (a case, the facts of which closely resemble the facts before us), the following passage contains a very clear statement of the law:—

"It is further to be observed that in *Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund*⁵ their Lordships' Board held under an Indian Statute (Act XXXII of 1839) identical in terms with the relevant section of Lord Tenterden's Act, that a sum certain is not payable by the written instrument at a time certain if its payment is contingent upon events which may never happen and the amount payable is capable of ascertainment only if and when those events happen and the time for the happening of those events, if they ever do happen, may be indefinitely postponed."

Judged by this test, in the present case, neither the sum nor the time is certain.

In re *Horner, Fooks v. Horner*⁶ is not inconsistent with this principle, for the contingency there mentioned was the death of a certain person and "death is not a contingent event—it is a certainty which must happen to all."

The sum was there payable within six calendar months after the testator's decease.

Venkatasubba
Rao, J.

"A covenant to pay within six calendar months after death, is a covenant to pay on the last day of the six months."

This case does not, therefore, help Mr. Venkatarama Sastri.

It is difficult to reconcile *Surja Narain v. Pratap Narain*⁷ with the decision of the Privy Council. In that case, a specified sum was agreed to be paid in the event of counsel being engaged. The learned Judges treated the time of payment as being certain, a view opposed to that taken in the two decisions of the Judicial Committee.

I agree with Mr. Justice Phillips that a case has not arisen which gives the Court jurisdiction to allow interest under the Act.

The question then arises, are the defendants liable for interest independently of the Act? In other words, is interest payable under the proviso above quoted, which says "interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law?" Before Lord Tenterden's Act, interest was payable at common law and in equity in certain cases. The object of that Act was to make the law more liberal by statute in regard to the granting of interest. (See the judgment of Lord Watson in *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co.*³) To carry out this object, a proviso was added, leaving untouched those cases in which there was already a right to interest when the Act was passed. The Indian Act, as its preamble shows, reproduces for this country the terms of Lord Tenterden's Act. What then are the cases which are saved by the proviso? Lord Lindley in his judgment in *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co.*⁸ attempts to state in what cases, before the Act, interest was granted first at common law and secondly in equity. The judgment does not, of course, profess to be exhaustive on the point, but the leading considerations are set forth in some detail. The learned Lord Justice refers to cases where a plaintiff for asserting his legal rights had to invoke the powers of the Court of Chancery and points out that that Court generally followed the law in dealing with legal claims. Such cases are those dealt with under the concurrent jurisdiction of the Court of Equity. Then the Lord Justice refers to purely equitable rights which fell within the exclusive jurisdiction of that Court. He

8. (1892) 1 Ch. 120 (C.A.).

thus mentions instances where interest was awarded before the statute at common law as well as in equity. Though, as I have just stated, the Court of Equity followed the law in dealing purely with legal claims, sometimes in order to prevent injustice, it applied to such claims principles such as,

Nanchappa
Goundan
v.
Ittichathara
Mannadiar.
Venkatasubba
Rao, J.

"A Court of Equity will treat a wrong-doer as having done that which he ought to have done."

This then is the effect of Lord Lindley's judgment. Bearing this in mind, let us examine the contentions now advanced. When it is sought to bring a case within the proviso, the question that really arises is, would interest have been granted in such a case before the Act either at law or in equity? It is unnecessary to make a complete list of instances where interest was so awarded. It is sufficient to point out that before the Act, in the case of ordinary debts, interest was not payable at common law unless there was an agreement express or it could be implied as in the case of usage. (See the judgment of Lindley, L.J., at page 140 and the judgment of Bowen, L.J., at page 146.) Vague notions as to what are equitable principles have led to some confusion; and a rule may vaguely be just, but it is not necessarily a principle of equity. This distinction is most clearly brought out in the judgment of Lord Herschell in the House of Lords in *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co.*³, already cited. The Courts at one time granted interest in cases of debts on general grounds of justice; for example, in one case Lord Mansfield held that a debt carried interest where there was "long delay under vexatious and oppressive circumstances". In another case, Best, C.J., observed that the Jury might give interest "in the shape of damages for the unjust detention of the money". This view of the law was not approved in later cases and interest was refused in cases of debts on any such broad equitable grounds. It was with the object of relaxing this law by statute, that Lord Tenterden's Act was passed. But the new rights created under that Act were within very narrow limits—too narrow indeed, as is pointed out by Lord Herschell, for the purposes of justice. Lord Shand similarly regrets that the law, as it stands, allows injustice to prevail.

I have now dealt with the principles that guide the Courts in England. Is the law of this country different? That would depend upon what the law was before the passing of the Interest Act. Cases, where before the Act interest was granted, are saved by the proviso in question. But there is no warrant for saying that the Courts awarded interest on debts on grounds such as were adverted to by Lord Mansfield and Best, C.J. The subject is fully and clearly dealt with in the judgment of Sir John Wallis, C.J., in Rajah of Pittapur v. Ballapragada Pallamraju.⁹ The Madras cases on which Mr. Justice Phillips relies must, with all respect, be held to be wrong. The learned Judge also refers to Müller v. Barlow.¹⁰ That is not a case of a debt at all. But as it is strongly relied on by him, it requires a closer examination. That was an action for money had and received. A firm was adjudicated insolvent and the Official Assignee impeached a certain transaction which the insolvent firm had with the plaintiff. He then obtained an order from the Insolvency Court directing the plaintiff to hand over to him certain goods and monies. They were accordingly handed over. In the action that was brought, the plaintiff complained that the order was wrongly made and prayed for a declaration of his rights in the aforesaid goods and money. The question was, "Was the Official Assignee liable to pay interest?" The effect of the judgment in the suit was that the order of the Insolvency Court was wrongly made. The money having been retained in the Official Assignee's hand by virtue of an order which was subsequently reversed, their Lordships held that the plaintiff was entitled to interest. The principle underlying this decision is further elucidated by another judgment delivered in the same year by the Privy Council in Rodger v. The Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris.¹¹ The question directly arose in that case, whether, on the reversal of a judgment, a party is entitled to get interest on the amount that had been recovered from him under that wrong judgment. It was held that he was. These cases give effect to definite and well-recognised rules of equity. They have never been treated as authorities, in English Courts, for the position that interest can be allowed on a debt, on what are termed general equitable grounds.

Venkatasubba

The Privy Council case of Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co. v. Hart,⁴ to which I have already referred, is a decisive authority also on this point. The facts there, as I have said, are very similar to the facts of the present case. Their Lordships, after disposing of the contention that interest was payable under the statute, further held:

"There is no place in the matter for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction and, therefore, no rule of equity in regard to interest can have any application."

I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that, under the proviso, the plaintiffs cannot claim interest on what are known as general equitable grounds.

Lastly, interest is claimed on the ground that it may be granted by way of damages under section 73 of the Indian Contract Act. This contention again is one which has been repeatedly overruled. In the judgment of the Court of Appeal of Lindley, L.J., already referred to, it is expressly laid down that damages cannot be granted for non-payment of debts. The question is directly raised by Lord Herschell in the House of Lords—Can interest be awarded by way of damages on the ground of wrongful detention of the debt? The question was, after full discussion, answered in the negative. Section 73 is merely declaratory of the common law as to damages. (See Pollock and Mulla's Commentaries on the Indian Contract Act.) If the English rule as to damages has not had the effect of superseding Lord Tenterden's Act in regard to interest on debts, why should it be assumed that section 73 of the Contract Act has produced just the contrary result? I am not prepared to hold that the Legislature, by adding illustration (n) to section 73, intended to depart from the law which must be treated as having been settled beyond doubt. The view I take is in conformity with several cases, of which *Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Larvai Rowthen*¹² may be taken as typical. I cannot, therefore, uphold the contention of Mr. Venkatarama Sastri.

In the result, the claim to interest is disallowed except as regards what is claimed in O.S. No. 65 of 1915 (S.A. No. 137 of 1922). In that case a special contention is put forward that, the rent being charged on land, interest becomes payable. This is taken to be settled law. See *Drax, In re; Savile v. Drax*¹³. Collins, M.R., thus observed:

"It seems to me to be well established on the authorities, and the result of those authorities does not indeed appear to be disputed, that a Court of Equity has power to give interest, and in point of fact does so where a charge is created on land, although there are no words allowing interest in the instrument creating the charge" (page 793).

Mr. Sitarama Rao has not contested this proposition. In O.S. No. 65 of 1915, the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs. In the other cases, the learned Judge's judgment is set aside and the appeals are allowed with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—The defendants are the appellants. They are lessees of the plaintiff holding lands under perpetual lease deeds, the terms of which in respect to material particulars are alike in all cases except in Letters Patent Appeal No. 255 of 1925, which will be referred to later. Under the lease deeds, waste lands were leased out on condition that rent should be paid on "reclamations" as they are made. The marupat of the lease in L.P.A. No. 258 of 1925, Exhibit A, may be taken as typical to show the terms under which the lessees held their lands. Its main terms, so far as these are relevant for these Letters Patent Appeals, are as follows:—

" the remaining sthalams shall be held and be held as saswatham (permanently) without surrendering the same for ever and enjoyed by me and my sons and grandsons for ever and ever in hereditary succession, and a proportionate pattom (rent) at the rate of 3/4th of a para of paddy for one para of the Nadan seed, will be paid by me to you from the year in which the assessment is levied by the Government."

The suits out of which these Letters Patent Appeals arise were instituted by the plaintiff for the recovery of arrears of rent together with "interest" on the arrears. The District Munsif gave decrees to the plaintiff for the arrears claimed and also for the "interest" on such arrears. On appeal the District Judge disallowed the "interest" on the ground that such interest was not claimable under the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839). In the Second Appeals filed by the plaintiff, Phillips, J., though he agreed with the District Judge that the Interest Act did not apply to these cases, reversed his decisions and held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim interest "on equitable principles". The learned Judge relied mainly on *Miller v. Barlow*¹⁰ and the decision in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴ in support of his conclusion.

The short question for determination in these Letters Patent Appeals is whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim "interest" on the arrears of rent decreed to him. The respondent supports the judgment of Phillips, J., not only on the ground of "equitable principles" on which he has based his decision but also on two additional grounds, namely, that interest can be claimed under the Interest Act and also under section 73 of the Indian Contract Act. The appellants argue that none of these grounds affords any justification for awarding "interest".

I shall first deal with the arguments based upon "equitable principles." To understand the operation of these principles in relation to the law awarding "interest" it is necessary to consider whether they were given effect to generally in all cases on grounds of equity and good conscience or whether their application was strictly limited to any special class of cases. At common law in England "interest" was not payable on debts unless by agreement or by mercantile usage, nor could damages be given for non-payment of such debts. The law in this respect was altered by 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 42 (which corresponds to the Interest Act, XXXII of 1839). In *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co.*³, the leading decision on the subject, the law was thus stated by Lindley, L.J.:

"As regards interest it was settled by *Higgins v. Sargent*¹⁵, *Page v. Newman*¹⁶ and *Foster v. Weston*¹⁷, that at common law interest was not payable on ordinary debts unless by agreement or by mercantile usage; nor could damages be given for non-payment of such debts. The law in this respect was altered by 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 42" (page 140). . . . "Except as altered by the Act, the 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 42, the old law as to interest remains the same" (page 142).

This decision was affirmed by the House of Lords in *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co.*³ According to this decision, under the English Law "interest" is not payable on debts nor could damages be given except in three cases—

1. Where there is an agreement to pay interest;
2. Where it is payable under the mercantile usage; and
3. Where it is payable under the statute.

To this may be added a fourth case:—Certain other actions in which also Courts of Common Law gave interest by way of damages, as for example, for breach of contract to give a bill of exchange, which, if given, would carry interest (see the judgment of Kay, L.J., at page 151). Before the Judicature Act, some cases in connection with debts, etc., where the question of "interest" was involved, ordinarily triable in Courts of Common Law, were tried in the Court of Chancery as the plaintiff's right in such cases could not be enforced at law owing to the defective legal machinery. "The Court of Chancery followed the law in dealing with legal claims." In cases of purely equitable demands, for instance, in suits against trustees, who misapplied trust moneys and in suits for equitable waste, the Court of Chancery usually decreed interest (see the observations of Lord Lindley at page 142). The cases in which interest is payable by the rules of equity are thus described in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, page 40—

1. Money obtained by fraud and retained by fraud can be recovered with interest;

2. Interest may also be recovered in equity in some cases where a particular relationship exists between the creditor and debtor, such as mortgagor and mortgagee, obligor and obligee on a bond, executor and beneficiary, principal and agent, principal and surety, trustee and cestui que trust, vendor and purchaser, or in the case of arrears of annuities;

3. Where a person who is an officer of the Court, such as a sheriff, a solicitor or a receiver, wrongfully withholds money which he has obtained in the course of legal proceedings, he may be ordered to pay it with interest.

So, unless a claim for "interest" on "debts" fell within any one of the above seven cases—assuming that the classification is exhaustive, for it is possible that further research may disclose more cases in "equity"—including in this number the four cases under "the common law" already mentioned, interest was not awarded under English Law. No authority has been cited to show that the abolition of the distinction between Courts of Common Law and Equity and their fusion by the Judicature Act resulted in enlarging the scope of cases in which interest could be claimed on debts or in increasing the power of Courts in awarding "interest". As a result of the fusion, the same Court was enabled to deal with "legal" as well as "equitable claims" and to award interest on "equitable principles" as well. The same Court being a Court of Law and Equity recognised not only "legal" claims to interest but also gave effect to such "equitable" constructions as would be recognised in Courts of Equity only.

As regards a party's claim to interest, apart from the Interest Act, the law in India may be taken to be the same as in England [*see Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Larvai Rowthen*¹² and *Juggomohun Ghose v. Kasiree Chund*¹⁸]. I shall now consider how far the principles referred to above and given effect to by English Courts have been followed in the decisions of this Court. As numerous cases were discussed in detail before us and as the case was very fully argued by both sides, a consideration of the case-law at some length becomes necessary. From 1863, that is, *Kisara Rukkumma Rao v. Cripati Viyanna Dikshatulu*¹⁹, onwards, the decisions of our Court proceeded on the view that interest not payable under the terms of the contract could only be paid under the Act or as being in accordance with the usage as to the particular class of instruments. [See Kamalammal v. Pearu Meera Larvai Rowthen,¹² Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar,²⁰ *Gopalaswami Chettiar v. Ramier*²¹ and Nanu Nair v. Ashtamoorthi Nambudripad.²²]

In 1919, in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴, Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., for the first time held that the Interest Act is not exhaustive of all cases where interest is allowed and that even in cases where payment of interest is not justified under the Interest Act interest may be allowed on "equitable principles". In so doing they mainly relied upon the decision in *Miller v. Barlow*¹⁰ in which the Judicial Committee pointed out that Indian Courts are Courts both of Law and Equity and that they can award as damages "interest" on equitable grounds. They also referred to the decisions of the Privy Council in Hurroopersaud Roy v. Shama Persaud Roy,²³ *Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi*²⁴ and *Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji*²⁵ and also to some decisions of the other High Courts in which interest was allowed apart from the Act. Though Seshagiri Aiyar, J., who delivered the judgment in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴, expressed this view, it may be noticed that it is not consistent with the view in *Nanu Nair v. Ashtamoorthi Nambudripad*²², to which he was a party and also with the subsequent decision in Rajah of Pittapur v. Ballapragada Pallamraju,⁹ to which also he was a party. In that case Sir John Wallis, C.J., followed the prior decisions of this Court and declined to award interest apart from the provisions of the Act. The learned Judge distinguished the case in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴ by pointing out that that was not a case of a contract and also observed, in the course of his judgment, that cases in which interest was allowed by the Privy Council in the absence of a contract and independently of the Act must be regarded as cases coming within the proviso to the Act, saving cases in which interest was payable by law when the Act was passed. Seshagiri Aiyar, J., who delivered a separate judgment agreed with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice and pointed out that he and the other learned Judge in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴ did not differ from the prior decisions of this Court.

The view that interest might be awarded apart from the Act on broad equitable considerations first adumbrated in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴, gradually began to find favour in this Court and that decision has been followed in three cases, namely, *Arunachalam Chettiar v. Raja Rajeswara Sethupathi*²⁰, by Oldfield and Krishnan, JJ., *Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Ponnuswami Aiyangar*²⁷, by Wallace, J., and *Krishnan Namudripad v. Ambu Kurup*²⁸, by Curgenvin, J. It is not necessary to refer to the facts of these cases, as I shall presently consider how far and to what extent the cases relied on by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴ support the conclusion that apart from the Act, interest can be awarded on equitable considerations. Before proceeding further I may here state, to make the position clear, that so far as the point under discussion is concerned, if the true nature and scope of the equitable considerations affecting the award of interest is correctly understood, the question whether the Interest Act is exhaustive or not, is not in itself a very important one, for, the cases in which "interest" could be awarded on equitable considerations may be brought within the proviso of the Interest Act, as observed by Wallis, C.J., in which view the Interest Act may be said to be exhaustive, or those cases may be treated as a separate class of cases not coming within the Act strictly, in which view the Act will not be exhaustive. However that may be, the important question to consider is to what extent do equitable considerations afford justification for decreeing "interest".

28. (1926) 51 M.L.J. 633.

The main case relied on in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴, and which was referred to in the present case also with great insistence is the decision in Miller v. Barlow.¹⁰ The facts of the case, which it may be observed is not one of contract, are somewhat complicated, but the head-note states them sufficiently to enable us to understand the scope of the decision so far as it relates to the point under discussion.

"Proceedings were taken under the Insolvency Act, 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21, and the proceeds of certain goods claimed by the Official Assignee, paid by the Assignee into the Bank of Bengal. In a suit brought in the High Court at Calcutta, by A against the Official Assignee, claiming the proceeds of the goods paid into the Insolvent Court:—Held, on the Court making a decree in favour of the plaintiff, that the High Court being a Court of Law and Equity, had power to award interest on the amount, as against the Official Assignee."

On the facts the learned Judges came to the conclusion that "by the wrongful act of the defendant, the plaintiff has been deprived of the money which was actually making interest." After observing thus, their Lordships proceed as follows:—

"Their Lordships are of opinion, that under these circumstances a Court of Equity would clearly be entitled to give interest; and it is by no means clear that even in a Court of Law, although the ordinary rule is that in actions for money had and received interest is not given, the fact of the defendant having received interest would not be a sufficient ground for making the defendant liable to pay interest; and as the High Court have the powers both of a Court of Equity and a Court of Law, their Lordships are of opinion that interest has been properly given".

These observations make it clear that their Lordships never intended by this decision to lay down a general rule that interest may be awarded in all cases on account of equitable considerations; for they draw our attention to the special circumstance that "by the wrongful act of the defendant the plaintiff was deprived of money which was actually making interest" and they state also that in such circumstances a Court of Equity certainly, and even a Court of Law departing from its usual rule would probably, award interest. In this connection it is important to note that in cases of this kind, where Officers of the Court withhold money they have wrongfully obtained in the course of legal proceedings, interest was always made payable by the rules of equity. The case we are dealing with falls within the last class of cases mentioned in Halsbury, Vol. XXI, page 40, already referred to, where interest is payable by the rules of equity. Courts of Equity having been accustomed to give relief in such cases, their Lordships state that Indian Courts, being Courts of Equity as well as Courts of Law, may properly award interest. When we propose to apply equitable considerations in deciding the question whether a party may be awarded interest we have to ask ourselves the question whether a Court of Equity in such a case would usually award interest and unless a particular case falls within the well-recognised class of cases in which interest is demandable in equity, the Indian Courts, in my view, have no power to award interest in such a case on equitable grounds. If the case is one in which Courts of Equity would ordinarily award interest, then, Courts of Law in this country, having the powers both of the Courts of Equity and of Law, can also award interest on equitable considerations. This seems to me to be the true scope of the decision in *Miller v. Barlow*⁴⁰ and understood in this light it is clear that that decision cannot be relied upon in support of the view that the plaintiff is entitled to interest in this case on broad equitable grounds; for, it is not shown that the nature of the claim made by the plaintiff is one which will bring the suit within the purview of a Court of Equity in which it will award interest. In a very recent case, on appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick (see *Mainie and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co. v. Hart*⁴¹, which will be referred to later on in connection with the Interest Act also) their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider whether any rule of equity entitles the plaintiff to interest and in considering that question they state the rule thus:

"In order to invoke a rule of equity it is necessary in the first instance to establish the existence of a state of circumstances which attracts the equitable jurisdiction, as, for example, the non-performance of a contract of which equity can give specific performance.

It must, however, be borne in mind that when once such a contract has been executed, then, apart from cases where rescission on the ground of fraud is sought, there remains nothing to attract the equitable jurisdiction, and the parties are left to their remedies at law."

Applying this principle to the case before them, their Lordships held that, where covenants between the parties when construed according to the ordinary rules of construction do not give the plaintiff interest, he cannot claim interest, unless it is given to him at common law or under Statute and apart from the case where rescission of payment on the ground of fraud is sought there is no place in the matter for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction, and, therefore, no rule of equity in regard to interest can have any application.

4. (1929) A.C. 631 at 640. . . . 10. (1871) L.R. 3 P.C. 733.

As the plaintiff, to use the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council, "has not established in this case the existence of a state of circumstances which attracts the equitable jurisdiction," I think he is not entitled to interest "on equitable grounds".

I shall now briefly consider the other Privy Council cases referred to by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴ in support of his decision, namely, *Hurroppersaud Roy v. Shama Persaud Roy*²³ and *Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi*²⁴ and *Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji*²⁵. In *Hurroppersaud Roy v. Shama Persaud Roy*²³ interest was allowed on mesne profits. This decision, as explained by Wallis, C.J., in *Raja of Pittapur v. Ballapragada Pallamraju*⁹, was based on the long settled practice of the Court and as the learned Judge remarked must be regarded as a case coming within the proviso to the Act, save in cases in which interest is payable by law when the Act was passed. In *Hamira Bibi Ammal v. Zubaida Bibi*²⁴, which was a case of unpaid dower, the Judicial Committee allowed interest as "reasonable compensation" to a Muhammadan widow on account of the special features of the case and their Lordships observed that her right to claim "interest" was consistent with the rules recognised under the English as well as under the Muhammadan Law. It seems to me that this does not support the broad proposition that interest may be charged on "debts" in all cases on "general equitable considerations". In *Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji*²⁵ interest was awarded on the well-settled principle "that in certain cases, when on the dissolution of a firm one of the partners retains assets of the firm in his hands without any settlement of account and applies them in continuing the business for his own benefit, he may be ordered to account for these assets with interest thereon and this apart from fraud or misconduct in the nature of fraud". As I understand these Privy Council cases they do not support the general proposition for which they are cited in Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal.¹⁴

In support of this portion of the argument Mr. Sastri cited a new case, namely, the decision in Canadian Pacific Railway v. Toronto Corporation.²⁹ In that case interest on the arrears of rent was allowed by the Privy Council; but from the facts it will appear that the suit was one for "specific performance" and for the enforcement of a covenant in a lease. Having regard to its nature the suit fell within the special jurisdiction of the Equity Courts and apparently it was on that account that interest was allowed. In this connection I may also refer to the decision in *Johnson v. Rex*³⁰ cited by Mr. Sitarama Rao. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council held that interest on two sums, which one Johnson, a Government contractor in Sierra Leone, admittedly received from the Army Paymaster in excess of what was due to him and which he retained in his own hands for over a year, was not payable by him to the Crown. In so holding they gave effect to the law as settled by the judgment of the House of Lords in the case of *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. The South Eastern Railway Co.*³ In the course of the judgment, their Lordships indicated the view that if the Crown had rested its case on fraud then interest would have been awarded, as interest is recoverable both at law and in equity on money obtained by fraud and retained by fraud. If fraud had been alleged and proved, the case would have come specially within the jurisdiction of the Equity Courts and would have fallen within the first class of cases mentioned in Halsbury, Vol. XXI, page 40. On this part of the case, my view is that the Interest Act is exhaustive and that only such equitable grounds as were generally recognised in Courts of Equity could be relied on in awarding interest on equitable grounds and that the case in *Abdul Saffur Rowther v. Hamida Bivi Ammal*¹⁴, having regard to the principles which I have discussed here, has not been correctly decided. The remarks of Lord Blackburn as regards Lord Tenterden's Act in *Duncombe v. Brighton Club and Norfolk Hotel Company*¹ that

"The statute ought to have said that wherever there is a debt at all it should bear interest, unless there is some strong reason to the contrary. But as the statute stands, this is not the case," may well be applied to the Indian enactment also. But however much we may deplore the present state of the law it seems to me that the decisions do not permit us to stretch the doctrine of "equitable grounds" to meet all the cases where we think interest should be awarded. In these circumstances, unless the plaintiff's claim to "interest" comes within the Interest Act or any other rule of law, it cannot be supported.

The next question for consideration is whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim interest under the Interest Act XXXII of 1839. That Act provides that "Upon all debts, or sums certain payable at a certain time, the Court before which they may be recovered, may, if it shall think fit, allow interest to the creditor, at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time when such debts or sums were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time. . . ."

To attract the provisions of this Act to a written contract, two conditions are necessary, (1) a certain sum must be payable, and (2) this sum must be payable at a certain time, under the contract. It was pointed out in *Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchand*⁵ that

"The certainty required must exist at the time when the promise is made; and, therefore, that the Act does not . . . affect debts contingent in amount, and time becoming due."

On this reasoning, their Lordships held that a "sum certain" is not payable by a written instrument at a "time certain" if its payment is contingent upon events which may never happen and the amount payable is capable of ascertainment only if and when these events happen and that the time for the happening of those events, if they ever do happen, may be indefinitely postponed.

This decision was followed by their Lordships in a very recent decision, *Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co. v. Hart*⁴ in deciding a case under section 24 (1) of the New Brunswick Judicature Act of 1909, which in this respect is similar in terms to the Interest Act. The Indian enactment was framed in order to extend to India the provisions of Statute 3 and 4 William IV, c. 42, section 28 and substantially adopts the language of it. That these terms are understood in the same way under the English enactment will appear from the decision in *London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. The South Eastern Railway Co.*³, which discusses the earlier English decisions on the same point, namely, *Merchant Shipping Co. v. Armitage*² and Duncombe v. Brighton Club and Norfolk Hotel Company.¹ In that case, Lord Herschell expressed the view that, where the time of payment is stated to be "as soon after the 1st of June as possible, and not later than the 15th of June"

"it is a little difficult to say that that is a 'time certain' even as regards the 15th of June". The decision in *In re Horner, Fooks v. Horner*⁶ does not lay down any different principle; for the death of the testator within six months after which the sum was made payable in that case "is not a contingent event, for death is a certainty which must happen to all; and so many days after death is a time certain for the purposes of the statute." Having regard to these principles, can it be said that the amount sought to be recovered as rent in the present case is "a certain sum;" recoverable at "a certain time" within the meaning of the Interest Act? I think not. I have already referred to the main terms of the document at the commencement of this judgment. According to these terms, as pointed out by Phillips, J., in his judgment, the rent which the lessee has to pay varies with circumstances which are necessary to be proved, such as, the extent of the land cultivated in any particular year and also the amount of assessment levied by the Government in that year. It is also noticeable that no definite period is fixed for the payment of rent. In these circumstances it cannot be said in this case that "a sum certain" is payable at "a certain time" within the meaning of the Interest Act. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to invoke the provisions of the Act in support of his claim to interest.

The last question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to interest under section 73, Illustration (n) of the Contract Act. This question of law arose for decision in *Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Larvai Rowthen*¹². In that case, the plaintiff sued to recover some money due to her on an oral contract together with interest. No agreement or usage having a right to interest was alleged and no written demand or notice had been given under the Interest Act. It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest. It was argued in that case that the plaintiff could claim interest under section 73 of the Contract Act coupled with illustration (n). The learned Judges held that to construe the section as giving a right to interest in those cases in which it cannot be awarded according to the provisions of Act XXXII of 1839 would be to hold that the latter enactment was virtually repealed by the former. Their Lordships were not prepared to hold that it was so repealed. They also pointed out that there was no real conflict between section 73 of the Contract Act and Act XXXII of 1839, since effect may well be given to section 73 by holding that the award of interest as compensation contemplated by that section has reference to cases in which such award can be made without infringing the provisions of the other Act. In other words, illustration (n) to section 73 merely states that, if a contract to pay a sum of money on a specified day is broken, nothing except interest up to the date of payment can be claimed as damages, provided such interest can be claimed under the Interest Act or any other rule of law. After referring to the "Common Law Rule" regarding interest on debts, Pollock and Mulla make the following observations regarding the scope of illustration (n) to section 73:—

"There does not seem to be any sufficient ground for reading into illustration (n) to the present section an intention to abolish this rule and supersede the Act of 1839. Indeed, the illustration does not say that the defendant is necessarily liable to pay interest, but only assumes that he may be so under the Act of 1839 or otherwise, and says that he is not in any event liable for more."

(See page 414, Pollock and Mulla, the Indian Contract Act, 5th Edition.)

The decision in *Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Levvai Rowthen*¹² has been dissented from in Calcutta [see Surja Narain Mukhopadhyaya v. Pratap Narain Mukhopadhyaya, per Banerjee, J., and Khetra Mohan Poddar v. Nishi Kumar Saha.³¹] The view of the Calcutta High Court, says Sir Frederick Pollock, goes indeed beyond the English Common Law. The view of the Bombay High Court in *Saundanappa v. Shivbasawa*³² is also opposed to the decision in *Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Levvai Rowthen*¹². In that case it was held that "neither the Interest Act nor the Contract Act affects the rule of Hindu Law, that in the case of a debt wrongfully withheld after demand of payment has been made, interest becomes payable from the date of demand by way of damages. That law was in force when the Interest Act was passed, and under the proviso to the section of the Act it has continued to be in force. The Indian Contract Act has not interfered with that law. On the other hand, that law is consistent with the provisions of that Act."

This view of the Bombay High Court which is somewhat novel was not pressed before us by the respondents' learned Advocate. In Ghanshyam Singh v. Daulat Singh,³³ which was a suit by the landlord for arrears of rent together with interest, it was held that though the lessee was not entitled to "interest" under the N.W.P. Act, he was entitled to claim it under section 73 of the Contract Act; but the learned Judges do not discuss the scope of illustration (n) on which the judgment is based; nor do they refer to the Interest Act. The observations of the learned Judges in *Zivala Prasad v. Hoti Lal*³⁴ do not throw any clear light on this question. Two decisions of the Privy Council, namely, *Muhammad Mehdi Ali Khan v. Muhammad Yasin Khan*³⁵ and *Ganesh Bakhsh v. Harihar Bakhsh*³⁶ were referred to in this connection to show that in one of the cases, namely, *Muhammad Mehdi Ali Khan v. Muhammad Yasin Khan*³⁵ their Lordships indicated, though very faintly, that their inclination is in favour of the view that interest cannot be awarded under section 73 of the Contract Act and that in the other, namely, *Ganesh Bakhsh v. Harihar Bakhsh*³⁶ their Lordships indicated, though inferentially, that their view is in favour of the contention that interest can be so awarded. But the judgments do not bear those interpretations; on the other hand they show that the question was not considered by their Lordships. In this state of authorities I must hold following the decision in *Kamallammal v. Peeru Meera Levvai Rowthian*¹², which has not been departed from in this Court in any of its subsequent decisions, that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim interest under section 73 of the Contract Act read with illustration (n).

For the above reasons, the decision of Phillips, J., under appeal in Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 256 to 258 should be reversed and the plaintiff's suit so far as it relates to interest should be dismissed with costs.

L. P. Appeal No. 255 of 1925.—The lease deed in this appeal contains the following additional term:—

"If I allow the said Janmavakasa pattom (rent) to fall into arrears without paying the same at proper time, there is no hindrance by this Saswatha pattom for your duly recovering the said Janmavakasa pattom out of these properties or out of my other properties."

By this term, the leased properties and the other properties of the lessee are charged with the payment of rent due under the lease. Having regard to this fact, following the decision in *Drax, In re; Savile v. Drax*¹³, I must hold that the landlord is entitled to claim interest on the arrears of the rent in this

“It seems to me to be well established on the authorities, and the result of those authorities does not indeed appear to be disputed, that a Court of Equity has power to give interest, and in point of fact does so where a charge is created on land, although there are no words allowing interest in the instrument creating the charge. Indeed, we may go back to the principle laid down in many cases showing that, in point of fact, the Court of Equity does charge interest.”

Romer, L.J., and Cozens-Hardy, L.J., also express the same view. This principle is not disputed by Mr. Sitarama Rao. This Letters Patent Appeal is dismissed with costs.

In a suit for foreclosure or sale on foot of certain mortgages instituted in the Sub-Court of Satara in the Bombay Presidency, it appeared that the properties, in respect of which relief was sought, were situated in Satara, Belgaum and Kolhapur, Satara and Belgaum being, and Kolhapur not being, within British India.

Held, that the Sub-Court of Satara had no jurisdiction to try the suit, so far as it related to the mortgaged properties situate in Kolhapur; that it had jurisdiction to try the suit so far as it related to the mortgaged properties situate in Satara; and that, inasmuch as the mortgaged properties in Belgaum were within the jurisdiction of a different Court in British India, it had jurisdiction to deal with those properties also.

The words "a suit to obtain relief respecting immoveable property" in S. 17, Civil Procedure Code, are wide enough to cover suits for foreclosure or sale on foot of mortgages. The words "within the jurisdiction of different Courts" in that section must, however, be held to mean within the jurisdiction of different Courts to which the Code of Civil Procedure applies, that is to say, Courts in British India, because the provisions of the Code are regulations dealing with the jurisdiction and governing the procedure of the Courts in British India.

Where in a case in which the mortgage deeds were not cancelled but remained with the mortgagee, and there was no evidence of any surrender of the mortgagee's rights, the High Court thought that the fact that the mortgagee gave up possession of a portion of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor, his spiritual guru, and took no steps to recover possession thereof until the suit was filed long after raised the presumption that the mortgagee had agreed that the security of that portion of the mortgaged property should be given up, held that the fact relied upon was insufficient to raise that presumption.

Sub-S. 3 of S. 15 of Bombay Regulation V of 1827 is not limited to the case where the creditor has been placed in possession and remains in possession. Its terms are general and wide enough to cover a mortgage which is not strictly a usufructuary mortgage, but under which the mortgagee has the right to collect the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, and under which he does enter into possession of the mortgaged property and collect the rents and profits arising therefrom but subsequently gives up possession to the mortgagor.

In a suit for sale on foot of certain mortgages, which provided for interest at a certain rate, and that the mortgagee should have the right to collect the rents and profits arising from the mortgaged property, an account being taken for each year and the balance due for principal and interest settled, but which fixed no time for payment of the debt, held, that the mere fact that the mortgagee permitted the mortgagor to receive the rents and profits subsequent to the dates of the mortgages did not give rise to a cause of action for the suit, and that on the facts of the case the mortgage money did not become due and the cause of action did not arise until demand for payment of the mortgage debt was made by the mortgagee and it was refused by the mortgagor.

The mortgagee was not bound by the terms of the mortgages to enter into possession of the mortgaged properties and to apply the rents and profits thereof towards the payment of the debt, though he had power to do so.

Consolidated Appeal No. 71 of 1927 from two decrees, dated the 12th February, 1924, of the High Court, Bombay, varying a decree, dated the 21st July, 1919, of the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara.

Nilkanth Balwant Natu and other appellants in the first appeal and respondents in the second brought the suit in which those decrees were made against the respondent and his rival claimant to the office of Jagad Guru of the Sansthan (Foundation) of the great Sankeshwar and Karvir Math.

They brought that suit as successors-in-title to one Balaji Narayan Natu on five mortgages which they asserted that the Jagad Guru of that Math had in the years 1840-43 granted to him.

The Courts in India held that, of the properties which the mortgages purported to charge, only one situate in the foreign State of Kolhapur was subject to them; the mortgagees admitted that they had been out of possession of the only other properties (situate in British India) against which they sought relief since some date before the year 1860 and on this admission the Trial Judge held that the suit as to these properties was barred by limitation and the High Court without deciding the question of limitation held that the mortgagees had released those properties.

The chief questions in the present appeals to His Majesty in Council were as to whether the claim of the mortgagees against the properties in suit in British India had not become barred or been released; as to the jurisdiction of the Satara Court over the properties in suit in Kolhapur; and as to all the properties in suit the extent of the original mortgagor's interest in, and authority to mortgage, them, the necessity for the mortgage, and its true construction.

Dunne, K.C. and M. R. Jardine for plaintiffs-appellants.

De Gruyther, K.C., Raikes, Parikh and B. B. Joshi for respondents-defendants.

Dunne, K.C. for appellants.—The High Court was wrong in inferring from the mortgagee's discontinuance of the Satara and Belgaum properties that it was agreed that only the Kolhapur properties should be treated as security for the mortgage debt. There is no evidence to support the finding of the High Court that we elected to accept the Kolhapur property as sole security and for the whole debt.

As regards jurisdiction, the question was never raised in the High Court that the Trial Court had no jurisdiction over the Kolhapur property.

On the question of limitation, we submit that we do not want possession, but only the usual mortgage decree for sale, and Art. 142 of the Limitation Act does not deprive us of that right.

[SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—Your contention is, that so far as relief by way of possession is concerned, you are time-barred, but that you are not barred of your remedy by way of sale.]

We have 60 years within which to bring the suit for sale. Refers to sub-clause (2) of section 20, Limitation Act, as to effect of receipt of rents and profits, and to the observations of Baron Parke in Juggeewindas Keeka Shah v. Ramdas.¹

De Gruyther, K.C. for respondents (defendants).—The Satara Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as regards properties outside British India: *Scitrucherla Ramabhadraraju v. The High Court were right, on the evidence, in coming to the conclusion that the mortgagees had released the properties in British India.

As these were usufructuary mortgages, an order for sale is not competent; Bom. Reg. V of 1827, section 15; *Shaikh Idrus v. Abdul Rahiman*⁶ and *Sadashiv Abaji Bhat v. Ramrao Shinde*⁷; definition of "usufructuary mortgage" in section 58, Transfer of Property Act, 1882, referred to.

[LORD BLANESBURGH.—The mortgagee here is liable to account for the rents and profits, and he gets 9 per cent. interest. Would that make it a usufructuary mortgage?]

The definition in the Transfer of Property Act, section 58, is very comprehensive.

In this case, the mortgagees, being deprived of possession, could only get back their property by a suit for possession, and they could not sue for sale.

[LORD RUSSELL.—Your contention is that if the mortgagee is barred by time from suing to recover possession, he is not entitled to an order for sale under clause (3) of section 15 of the Bombay Regulation V of 1827?]

Yes. The decision in *Juggeewindas v. Ramdas*¹, relied on by my friend, is not in point. The only right which the mortgagee had in this case was to possession, and his right was barred after 12 years from the time he gave up possession in 1859; Limitation Act (XIV of 1859), section 12.

Dunne, K.C. replied.—The suit is not time-barred. The mortgage-money did not become “due” within the meaning of Art. 132, Limitation Act, until after demand. There is no evidence of any demand having been made more than 12 years prior to the institution of the suit.

1st April, 1930. Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON.—The first appeal is by the plaintiffs in the suit, and the cross-appeal is by the second defendant, Vidya Narasinh Bharati Guru.

The plaintiffs brought the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Satara, as successors-in-title to one Balaji Narayan Natu, who was the mortgagee under certain mortgage deeds specified in the plaint, and executed between the years 1840 and 1844. The mortgages were made by Vidya Shankar Bharati, who is deceased. *The first and second defendants were rival claimants to the office of Jagad Guru of the Sankeshwar and Karvir Math, and each of them claimed to be the sole successor of the mortgagor. The first respondent is the legal representative of the first defendant.

The cross-appeal presented by the second defendant is with reference to mortgaged properties situate in Kolhapur district and is based upon the allegation that the Satara Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit with regard to the said properties in Kolhapur, which lie outside British India.

The appeal is against a decree, dated the 12th February, 1924, of the High Court of Bombay, in Appeal No. 146 of 1919, which varied a decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Satara, dated the 21st July, 1919.

The cross-appeal is against the said decree of the High Court and another decree of the said High Court of the same date, in Appeal No. 169 of 1920, whereby the appeal of the second defendant was dismissed with costs.

The properties, in respect of which relief is now sought by the plaintiffs, are situated in Satara, Belgaum and Kolhapur.

Satara and Belgaum are, and Kolhapur is not, within British India.

It will be convenient to deal first with the question relating to the properties in the Kolhapur district and the cross-appeal.

The learned Subordinate Judge among other issues settled the following:—

“(1) Did the mortgagor consolidate by his conduct or agreement all the mortgages together and is he estopped from contending that the several bonds are not a charge on the entirety of the property but only on property covered respectively by each?

“(2) Whether one suit can lie in this Court on different causes of action arising in different jurisdictions in respect of different bonds relating to different properties.”

The learned Subordinate Judge tried as preliminary the first two issues and, deciding each of them against the plaintiffs, dismissed the suit on the 4th December, 1912, but the High Court on the 7th June, 1916, reversed his decree, holding on the first issue that there were stipulations in the mortgages which amounted to an agreement that the principle of consolidation should apply to them and on the second issue, that the Satara Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, under section 17 of the Code as relating to properties situate within the jurisdiction of any Courts.

The preliminary decree was set aside and the case was remanded to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for disposal.

The learned Subordinate Judge tried the remaining issues; he made an order for the appointment of a Commissioner, and on the return of the report he made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 3,31,882-0-8, and for recovery of possession of the mortgaged properties situate in Kolhapur.

On appeal the High Court amended the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge by giving liberty to the plaintiffs to bring to sale the mortgaged properties in the Kolhapur State and by giving certain directions as to interest.

The section of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, on which the High Court relied, as giving jurisdiction to the learned Subordinate Judge of Satara with respect to the mortgaged properties in Kolhapur is section 17.

The plaintiffs in the suit, among other matters, prayed for foreclosure or sale of the mortgaged property; it is therefore necessary to refer to the provisions of section 16 (c) of the Code, which are as follows:—

“Subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law, suits for foreclosure, sale or redemption in the case of a mortgage of or charge upon immoveable property shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate.”

There is a proviso which does not affect the present case; and the “Explanation” is as follows:—

“In this section ‘property’ means property situate in British India.”

The terms of section 17 are as follows:—

“17. Where a suit is to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts, the suit may be instituted in any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any portion of the property is situate:

“Provided that, in respect of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, the entire claim is cognizable by such Court.”

The High Court decided that the words “respecting immoveable property” are wide enough to cover suits for foreclosure, sale or redemption in the case of mortgages or charges upon immoveable property mentioned in section 16 (c), and that section 17 is supplementary to section 16 and in order to prevent multiplicity of suits.

Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges’ decision that the words “a suit to obtain relief respecting immoveable property” are wide enough to cover the suit in the present case, which included prayers for foreclosure or sale of the mortgaged property; but that does not conclude the matter.

The question remains whether the words “situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts” does not limit the operation of the section to suits to obtain relief respecting immoveable property situate within the jurisdiction of different Courts within British India.

The preamble to the Civil Procedure Code recites that it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of Civil Judicature, and section 1 (3) provides as follows:—

“This section and sections 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India; the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India, except the scheduled districts.”

The provisions of the Code are regulations dealing with the jurisdiction and governing the procedure of the Courts in British India, and their Lordships are of opinion that the words in Section 17 "within the jurisdiction of different Courts" must mean within the jurisdiction of different Courts to which the Code applies, that is to say, Courts in British India. This is in accordance with the decision of the Judicial Committee in Setru-cherla Ramabhadra Raju v. Maharaja of Jeypore.¹ Inasmuch as the properties in Kolhapur are not within the jurisdiction of any Court in British India, the learned Subordinate Judge of Satara had no jurisdiction to try the suit, so far as it related to the mortgaged properties situate in Kolhapur.

The learned Judge had jurisdiction to try the suit so far as it related to the mortgaged properties situate in Satara; and, inasmuch as the mortgaged properties in Belgaum are within the jurisdiction of a different Court in British India, he had jurisdiction to deal with those properties also.

The result therefore is that the cross-appeal of the second defendant must succeed, and the decrees of the Courts in India, so far as they relate to the properties situate in Kolhapur, must be set aside. The question of costs will be dealt with at a later stage.

The plaintiffs' appeal relates to the mortgaged properties situate in Satara and Belgaum. Both Courts in India rejected their claim in respect of these properties.

It was alleged on behalf of the defendants that the properties comprised in the mortgages were Dewasthan or Saranjain and not liable to be mortgaged. Both the Courts in India have decided against the defendants in respect of this contention, and their Lordships see no reason for doubting the correctness of that decision.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an order for sale of the properties in Satara and Belgaum, and further that the plaintiffs' claim for possession of these properties was not brought in time.

The learned Judges of the High Court held that there was nothing in the mortgages to exclude the right of sale given by Section 15 of the Bombay Regulation V of 1827, but they came to the conclusion that the properties in British territory were given back to the mortgagors before 1860 and that no steps were taken to recover possession until the present suit was filed. They thought that the proper presumption was that the parties agreed that the security of the above mentioned properties should be given up, and that the Kolhapur properties only should be considered as security for the debt.

As already stated, the High Court made a decree that the plaintiffs were entitled to bring the properties in Kolhapur to sale, but the decree gave the plaintiffs no relief in respect of the mortgaged properties situate in Satara and Belgaum.

It is against that part of the decree that the plaintiffs' appeal is directed.

The Exhibit 38, which is a translation of the mortgage-deed of the 15th July, 1840, may be taken as a specimen of the mortgages. It was made between Vidya Shankar Bharati, the mortgagor, and Balaji Narayan Natu, the mortgagee. It recited that Rs. 20,000 had been borrowed for the expenses of the Sans-than; that it had been agreed to pay interest thereon at the rate of twelve annas per cent. per mensem without remission; that for the repayment of the debt the four Inam villages of the Sansthan therein specified were mortgaged.

The total revenue of the four villages, 4,300, made up of 2,700 in Shambhu Pirkhani (coin) and 1,600 in Panhali (coin), was assigned in mortgage. The deed contained certain clauses as to management, of which the following are relevant:—

"An account of the debt due to you, i.e., of the principal borrowed and interest will be made on the 1st of Ashad Vad (latter half) and after deducting the vasul (collection) of the villages that may have been applied towards the debt, we shall approve and pass the account of balance that may be found due and affix our seal thereto. Even if we fail to pass the account yet we shall get the said villages released after clearing off the total amount of balances found due every year. . . .

"Within one month after the closing of the year, the accounts in respect of the villages should be got prepared by the Patil Kulkarni and submitted to the Huzur. The same will be examined and passed within one month. If any additional vasul (revenue) be received by you, the same shall be entered towards the repayment of the debt at the time of the passing of the accounts by confrontation with your Karkun (clerk). You will have nothing to do with any difference after two months subsequent to the passing of the accounts. . . .

"If we can manage to get moneys from other sources for the repayment of your debt, you should accept the amount when we pay it and release the villages. If in the year in which we pay the money, it is paid within a month after the expiry of that year, the amount of remuneration stated above will be given proportionately; and if the amount is paid after one month, the amount of remuneration for the whole year will be given."

The other mortgages are to the same effect, and this appeal was argued by both sides on the assumption that the mortgages were consolidated, as held by the High Court, and that the debts due under all the mortgage deeds were a charge upon all the properties.

There is no doubt that the mortgagee, or his successors in title, went into possession of the mortgaged properties and received the rents and profits arising therefrom. It has, however, been established that after 1859 the mortgagee did not collect the rents and profits of the mortgaged properties which are in Satara and Belgaum.

It was alleged by the defendants that there was an actual adjustment between the parties in 1849 or 1850 to the effect that a sum of Rs. 1,32,000 should be paid without interest in full settlement of the mortgage debts, that the mortgage deeds were cancelled and that in pursuance of the said adjustment the mortgagee gave up his possession of the mortgaged properties in British India.

The Courts in India held that the above mentioned allegation was not proved, and no reliance was placed upon it at the hearing of this appeal.

Their Lordships are unable to agree with the decision of the High Court, that the parties agreed that the security of the mortgaged properties in British India should be given up and that the mortgaged properties in Kolhapur only should be considered as security for the debt.

The learned Judges came to that conclusion, holding that a presumption to the above mentioned effect was raised by the facts. The two facts relied upon were that before 1860 the properties in British territory "were given back" to the mortgagors and no steps were taken to recover possession until the suit was filed.

In the first place, in their Lordships' opinion there is no evidence to justify the finding that the said properties "were given back" if by these words the learned Judges meant a re-transfer of the properties. The mortgage deeds were not cancelled. They remained with the mortgagee or his successors, and they were produced and proved by the plaintiffs at the trial. There is no evidence of any surrender of the plaintiffs' rights, except the fact that after 1859 the plaintiffs or their predecessor ceased to receive the rents and profits of the mortgaged properties situated in Satara and Belgaum.

In the second place, even if the facts relied upon by the learned Judges are sufficient to raise the presumption to which they referred, they are consistent with other presumptions, which may be said to be just as reasonable as that on which the learned Judges founded their judgment. As, for instance, the learned Subordinate Judge thought it was quite reasonable to adopt the suggestion that, the mortgagor being the spiritual guru of the mortgagee, the mortgagee might have given up the possession of the villages in British Territory to enable the mortgagor to maintain the establishment and meet the expenses of the Sansthan, without in any way intending to give up his rights as mortgagee or to abandon his remedies, if and when he desired to enforce them.

It is not necessary to deal with this part of the case at any length, as it was not seriously argued that the judgment of the High Court could be supported on the above mentioned ground.

The main ground on which the defendant-respondents relied at the hearing before the Board was that the mortgages were usufructuary mortgages, and that if the mortgagee was not in possession, his only right was to be placed in possession or to sue to recover the money from the mortgagor personally by reason of his breach of contract to place the mortgagee in possession, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an order for sale of the mortgaged properties.

The provisions regulating the rights of the parties under the mortgages in suit are contained in the Bombay Regulation V of 1827.

Chapter V of the said Regulation is headed "Of the disposal of property mortgaged or pledged." The chapter consists of one section, viz., section 15, which is as follows:—

"First. When a creditor is placed in possession of property by mortgage or otherwise, as security for a debt, his claim over such property shall, in the absence of other special agreement, constitute his sole security for payment of the debt, or such part of it as the said property may have been given in security for, and interest thereon is to be considered as included in the said security.

"Second. If the property yield profit, and no stipulation has been made respecting the disposal of the said profit, or payment of interest on the debt, the profit shall be considered as equivalent for the interest.

"Third. In the absence of any special agreement or recognised law or usage to the contrary, either party may at any time, by the institution of a civil suit, cause the property to be applied to the liquidation of the debt, the surplus, if any, being restored to the owner."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judges of the High Court were right in holding that section 15 (3) of the Regulation is applicable to the mortgages in suit. That sub-section, in their Lordships' opinion, is not limited to the case where the creditor has been placed in possession and remains in possession.

The chapter purports to deal with the disposal of property mortgaged, and in their Lordships' opinion the terms of section 15 (3) are general and wide enough to cover the mortgages now in suit, and the property thereby charged.

The plaintiffs, therefore, were entitled by the institution of a civil suit to cause the property to be applied to the liquidation of their debt, or in other words to bring a suit for the sale of the properties, unless it could be shown that there was a special agreement or recognised law or usage to the contrary.

There is no suggestion that there is any law or usage to the contrary, and their Lordships are of opinion that there is no evidence of any special agreement to the contrary either in the terms of the mortgages or otherwise.

Consequently, the rights of the plaintiffs under the mortgages being still in existence, and the monies being due, the plaintiffs, subject to the question of limitation, are entitled to an order for sale of the mortgaged properties situate in Satara and Belgaum.

The question remains whether the plaintiffs' suit is out of time.

It was argued on behalf of the defendants that the cause of action arose in 1859 or 1860, when the plaintiffs' predecessor ceased to be in possession of the mortgaged properties in Satara and Belgaum: that the Limitation Act, No. XIV of 1859, was then in force and that by reason of section 1 (16) the suit was out of time, inasmuch as it should have been brought within the period of six years from the time the cause of action arose.

Reliance also was placed upon Art. 132 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1871, by which it is provided that a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property must be brought within twelve years from the time when the money sued for becomes due. This section is in similar terms to Art. 132 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

Their Lordships are not able to accept the defendants' contentions in this respect.

In the first place the plaintiffs or their predecessor were not bound by the terms of the mortgages to enter into possession of the mortgaged properties and to apply the rents and profits thereof towards the payment of the debt, though they had power so to do, and the mere fact that the mortgagee permitted the mortgagor to receive the rents and profits in and from 1860 did not give rise to a cause of action.

In the second place there was no specific time fixed for the payment of the debt, and their Lordships are of opinion on the facts of this case that the money did not become due and the cause of action did not arise until demand for the payment of the mortgage debt was made by the mortgagee and it was refused by the mortgagor.

Their Lordships' attention has not been drawn to any evidence of any such demand and refusal prior to the institution of this suit, and the filing of the written statements by the defendants. Consequently they are of opinion that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The appeal of the plaintiffs, therefore, must be allowed so far as the mortgaged properties in Satara and Belgaum are concerned.

The decree of the High Court in Appeal No. 146 of 1919, and dated the 12th February, 1924, should be set aside and a decree made in the suit in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants for the sum of Rs. 3,31,822-0-8 and interest thereon at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem from the date of suit until realisation, and for the balance of costs, if any, hereinafter mentioned, with a direction that the said sums are to be paid within six months of the date on which the order of His Majesty in Council is received by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and that in default the plaintiffs will be entitled to bring to sale the mortgaged properties situate in Satara and Belgaum.

As already stated the cross-appeal must succeed. Consequently the decree of the High Court, dated the 12th February, 1924, in Appeal No. 169 of 1920, must be set aside.

The position is that the plaintiffs have succeeded in their appeal so far as the mortgaged properties in Satara and Belgaum are concerned, but the cross-appeal, which concerns the mortgaged property in Kolhapur, has succeeded, and the plaintiffs consequently have failed to hold the decree in their favour in respect of the property in Kolhapur.

In their Lordships' opinion the order as to costs should be that the cross-appeal be allowed with costs, that the plaintiffs' appeal be allowed to the extent already stated, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to one-half of their costs on their appeal to His Majesty in Council, and in both the Courts in India, that the costs of the cross-appeal be set off against the costs thus awarded to the plaintiffs and that the balance, if any, be added to or deducted from their above mentioned mortgage debt as the event may require.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

In appeals to the Privy Council raising the question of the proper value to be allowed for land compulsorily acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, their Lordships will not interfere with the amount awarded by the High Court unless it can be shown that there has been some real mistake in law or some palpable omission which would invalidate the valuation.

VISCOUNT DUNEDIN.—This is a case which follows many other cases raising the question of the proper value to be allowed for certain compulsorily-acquired land. The general principles on which the Board deals with these cases have been laid down particularly in two cases cited *Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India in Council*¹ and *Nowroji Rustomji Wadia v. Bombay Government*². It is clear from those cases that their Lordships cannot interfere with the figures that have been settled by the High Court unless it can be shown there has been some real mistake in law or some palpable omission which would invalidate the valuation. Now here, the whole case for the higher valuation which is asked for depends upon the appellants being able to appeal to a certain contract for sale of part of the lands which fixed a very much higher figure. The learned Judges, acquainted with the circumstances on the spot, have come to the conclusion that that contract, though it did exist on paper, did not in any way represent the value in the market, but was a sort of speculative endeavour of a certain party to get at a foundation for acquiring some of the land with a view of obtaining the rest eventually, so that he might avoid competition. But the transaction was never proceeded with and remained only a piece of paper, and the Judges have held that this was not a circumstance which should affect their minds in arriving at the true market value. On the view arrived at of the whole circumstances of the case, it would be impossible for this Board to take any other view in accordance with the principles laid down in prior decisions. Therefore, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Although a reference, in a Will, to death will, prima facie, refer to death at any time.

Held, on the construction of the particular wording of the Will in suit, that the reference to death there must be taken to be a reference to death in the lifetime of the testatrix.

Appeal No. 69 of 1929 from a decree of the High Court, Calcutta, dated the 23rd February, 1927, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 13th August, 1924.

The sole question for determination on the present appeal was, whether, on the true construction of the terms of the Will, dated the 3rd October, 1913, of one Kripamoyee Debi, there was an intestacy with regard to the residue of the estates devised therein, as contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants.
Both the Courts in India decided against the plaintiffs' contention, answering the question in the negative.

The material passages from the Will are set out in their ties described in clause 6 of her will, which was given to her niece, Indumayi Debi for life.

The Subordinate Judge at Dacca held that there was no intestacy, and his decision was affirmed (though on different grounds) by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.

There is no dispute as to the relevant facts. The testatrix, Kripamoyi Debi, had no child of her own, but she had three nieces, the daughters of her deceased youngest brother, to whom she had acted as a mother. She had also stepsons and a stepdaughter, the children of her husband by another wife. In those circumstances she made her will on the 3rd October, 1913.

Clause 2, so far as relevant, is in the following terms:—

“My said deceased youngest brother has left three daughters. The eldest is Indumayi Debi and her husband is alive; she has three sons and a daughter named Suramasundari Debi. The second daughter is named Jyotirmayi Debi; she has lost her husband; she has a son named Jalad Chandra Mukhopadhyaya, and two daughters named Promodebala and Bibhubala Debi. The third daughter is named Taritmayi Debi; her husband is alive, and a son and a daughter have been born to her. I have brought up my said three nieces from their infancy, and I bear great affection for them and they too respect and regard me as their mother. It is one of my principal objects to make special provisions regarding them by this Will, and it is also my desire to entrust the post of the Shebait to them in succession.”

By clause 3, she made some provision for her stepsons and the sons of deceased stepsons. By clause 4, she made a disposition of cash, Government notes and book debts, under which benefits were conferred upon her husband, her stepsons, her stepdaughter and the daughters of her three nieces. The residue of the specific property covered by this clause remaining after paying the legacies to the legatees appears to be given to the three nieces absolutely with gifts over if “at that time” any of the nieces be dead.

Clauses 5 and 6 run thus:

“5. On my death the executrix shall so long as the estate left by me will be under the management of the executrix, pay to my husband at the rate of Rs. 6,000 per year in four equal instalments. Afterwards from the time when she will, according to the provisions of this Will, make over two-thirds of all the immoveable properties left by me save and except the properties of Schedules (Ka), (Kha), (Ga) and (Gha), to her two sisters, or to any of her sisters and in case any of her sisters being dead, to her sons, the said enjoyers of the properties shall be bound to pay to my husband the said sum of money in equal shares, that is to say, the enjoyers of each one-third share shall pay a one-third share of the said Rs. 6,000, i.e., rupees 2,000 per year in four equal instalments. My husband will get the said allowance so long as he will live. On his death none of his heirs shall get the said money, and he shall not be competent to transfer in any way or sell his right to get the said money, and the same shall not be liable to be attached or sold for his debt. If the enjoyers of the properties fail to pay the said amount according to the instalment, then my husband will be competent to realize the same from the enjoyers of the properties with interest at 8 annas per cent. per month out of the properties left by me.

"6. As regards such of my moveable and immoveable properties, claims and arrears of rent, etc., as will remain after excluding the immoveable properties of Schedules (Ka), (Kha), (Ga) and (Gha), and after the division in three equal shares, as provided herein, of the cash Tahabil, G.P. Notes, and loans, and paying the legacies, and leaving out the amounts to be reserved in the hands of the executrix for carrying out the works provided for above and which cannot be performed within six months, the persons named in paragraph 7 will get the properties described therein, and of the immoveable properties, the right of enjoyment of my dwelling-house shall be regulated by the provisions of paragraph 8. The right of enjoyment and ownership of all the remaining moveable properties except the moveable property described in paragraph 7, and of all the remaining immoveable properties, except the dwelling-house, which is to be controlled by the rules provided in paragraph 8, shall devolve on the enjoyers of the properties in the following manner, that is to say, each one of my nieces will get in life-interest an one-third share of all the said residue of the moveable and immoveable properties. If at the time of my death any of my nieces be dead and her sons, or sons or grandsons of a deceased son, be alive, then they will get, in absolute right, the share of the said niece according to the rules of inheritance of the Hindu Shastras. And in the event of the death of any niece without leaving any male heir born of her line, such as son, grandson, etc., then her other two sisters, i.e., my other two nieces, will get her share equally. If one of them be alive and the other dead then the male heirs of the dead niece born of her line, such as her sons, sons' sons, etc., will, according to the rules of inheritance, get the share which this niece would have been entitled to, and in the absence of any such male heir the only surviving niece will get the said share; and if she, too, be not alive then her male heirs belonging to her line such as sons and sons' sons, etc., will get the said share. The husband, daughter or daughter's children of any niece shall not get her share."

No other portion of the will appears to their Lordships to be of assistance in the solution of the questions discussed before them.

The testatrix died on the 27th April, 1920. Her three nieces all survived her, but the niece Indumayi Debi died on the 29th August, 1920, leaving three sons. She, therefore, did not die "without leaving any male heir born of her line."

It is the death of Indumayi which has given rise to the present difficulty. The beneficial interest of Indumayi Debi in a third share terminated with her death. Is there a gift over of that share to anyone either expressly or by implication? or does the share devolve as on an intestacy?

The Subordinate Judge held in reference to clause 6 of the will, that—

"The provision that the two other nieces remaining alive on the death of her other niece (without any limitation regarding the time of her death) should get her share only in case she dies without male descendants, goes clearly to show that if she leaves male descendants they are to get her share."

In other words, he finds an implied gift in favour of the male descendants of Indumayi, or, as he expresses it later:

"On consideration of the context of the Will, I find that the real intention of the testatrix was that on the death of any of her three nieces who survived her, the share for life left to her out of the residuary immoveable estate was to vest absolutely in her male descendants according to rules of inheritance under Hindu law."

A decree was accordingly made upon the footing that no intestacy had occurred.

This decree save in so far as it related to costs, was affirmed by the High Court, but as it appears to their Lordships, upon different grounds. The Judges in the High Court construed clause 5 of the Will as containing a gift of the property to the three nieces and their sons, who were to form the whole body of residuary legatees. As to clause 6 their view was thus expressed:

"What effect then should be given to paragraph 6 of the Will? In my judgment, paragraph 6, following paragraph 5, only gives directions as to how the residue should be possessed by the different residuary legatees, in other words, how the interest should be divided between the nieces and their sons, i.e., it says that the nieces would only get life-interest, and necessarily it follows that what is left would belong to their various descendants according to the limitation in the Will. And then the provision follows that if any of the nieces dies before the testatrix what would happen to her share of the property. In this view of the construction of the Will there is no contradiction between one clause and the other and the entire dispositions made under the Will may be reconciled without any difficulty."

In the opinion of their Lordships it is not possible to construe clause 5 as containing any gift of the property covered by clause 6 in favour of any person. It only in terms refers to two-thirds of the immoveable property covered by clause 6, and in relation to the property to which it does refer, clause 5 is in form narrative only. The object of clause 5 is to provide a life annuity to the husband of the testatrix, and it may with sufficient accuracy be paraphrased thus:

"So long as the estate is undistributed my executrix is to pay Rs. 6,000 per year to my husband. After my executrix has (according to clause 6) handed over two-thirds of the immoveable property to her two sisters, or to any of her sisters, and, in case any of her sisters being dead, to the dead sisters' sons, the persons enjoying the properties shall be bound to pay Rs. 6,000."

Their Lordships are unable to agree with the reasons given by the High Court. Nor do they feel able to imply any gift in favour of the male descendants of Indumayi Debi. The portion of clause 6 of the Will which commences with the words "And in the event of the death of any niece without leaving any male heir," is the only possible provision in the Will under which such a gift could be implied in favour of male heirs who survived the niece. But even then, the gift could only be implied if the death of the niece took place at a time to which the clause relates. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider whether the clause relates to death at any time or at some particular time.

Although a reference to death will, prima facie, refer to death at any time, the wording of clause 6 seems to their Lordships to confine that provision to death in the lifetime of the testatrix. Upon no other hypothesis does it seem possible to account for the testatrix (after giving the share to the other two nieces, and, in certain events, to "the only surviving niece") then proceeding to dispose of the share on the footing that "the only surviving niece" is herself dead. Upon the particular wording of this Will their Lordships think that this reference to death must be taken to be a reference to death in the lifetime of the testatrix.

Difficult as it would be to imply the suggested gift if the clause had referred to death at any time, it is in the opinion of their Lordships impossible to make the implication if the clause is confined, as they think it must be, to death in the lifetime of the testatrix.

Their Lordships derive no assistance from any authorities in the construction of the very special language employed in this particular will. The result is that the testatrix has not in the events which have happened made any disposition after the death of Indumayi Debi of the share in which, under clause 6, she had a life-interest, but has died intestate in respect thereof. The same reasoning will apply to the other two shares in which Jyotimayi Debi and Taritmayi Debi the first and third respondents took similar interests, though their life-estates are still subsisting.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed, and that it should be declared that as regards the one-third share of the property in which, under clause 6 of the will, Indumayi Debi had a life-interest and subject to such life-interest, the testatrix died intestate in respect thereof. There should also be a similar declaration in the case of the other two shares. The costs of all parties of this appeal will be paid out of the estate of the testatrix.

The case will be remitted to the High Court in order that the necessary variations in the existing order, including and consequent upon such declarations, may be made.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Adverse possession, title by—Waste and uncultivated land—Burden of proof.

In a suit by the plaintiff to establish a right by adverse possession to a Bela (a chur or an island of waste ground), the onus is on him to establish affirmatively his adverse possession for 12 years preceding the suit. The possession which he is required to prove must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor; and though there may be special difficulty in establishing this in the case of waste or uncultivated jungle land, the onus nevertheless lies upon the plaintiff to prove affirmatively his exclusive possession of the Bela for the requisite period of 12 years.

Held, that, having regard to the revenue entries in which possession was throughout shown as being with the defendants, and the other evidence on the record, the plaintiff had failed to discharge the onus that lay upon him.

17th June, 1930. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by SIR GEORGE LOWNDES.—The Khans of Zaida and Hund are owners of adjacent landed estates on the bank of the Indus. Near by and situated between two branches of the river is an island of waste ground, a portion of which, comprising about 20 acres, is covered with shisham trees of considerable value. This plot is known as Bela Fakir Buti, and now bears survey number 2084, but is unassessed. The part of the island in which the Bela lies is just opposite to a bungalow belonging to the Khan of Zaida in the village of Rana Dheri, and has for long been a subject of dispute between the rival estates. Prior to 1875 the Bela, together with most of the rest of the island, then bearing Khasra numbers 1—6, was entered in the revenue records as the property and in the possession of Zaida. In that year the Khan of Hund instituted a suit in respect of this area, claiming both title and possession, and praying that it might be recorded as his property. His suit succeeded; it was held that the area claimed was part of the Hund estate, and it was ordered that the Revenue authorities should make the necessary entry in the settlement papers. The decree also directed possession to be given, but there is no evidence that this was done.

In the present proceedings it is only the Bela that is in dispute. It is admitted that it was part of the area covered by the decision of the 1875 suit, and it is clear, therefore, that so far as the claim of Zaida is based upon title, it must fail.

The real question in the case, however, is whether the Khan of Zaida has established a right to the Bela by adverse possession. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen followed upon proceedings taken under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In 1922, the Khan of Zaida commenced to fell trees on the Bela and his men were forcibly evicted by the Khans of Hund. The Khan of Zaida then applied to the District Magistrate under the section above referred to, alleging that he was in possession, and praying for reinstatement and protection. The District Magistrate held an enquiry and came to the conclusion that ownership and possession were with Hund.

Thereupon the suit was instituted by the Khan of Zaida praying for a declaration of his title and for possession.

Under these circumstances it lay upon him to establish affirmatively his adverse possession of the Bela for 12 years prior to 1922. The District Judge of Peshawar, by whom the suit was tried, held that he had not done so, and dismissed his suit. The Judicial Commissioner, on appeal, held that he had, and gave him a decree for possession as owner. The Khans of Hund now appeal to His Majesty in Council. The Khan of Zaida is the respondent.

The possession which the respondent is required to prove "must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor" (per Lord Robertson, in delivering the judgment of the Board in Radhamoni Debi v. Collector of Khulna.¹) Their Lordships think that there is special difficulty in establishing this in the case of uncultivated jungle land such as the Bela in dispute, which produces nothing beyond self-sown trees and a seasonal crop of wild grass: see the remarks of Lord Shaw in Kuthali Moothavar v. Peringati Kunharankutty.²

There is, as might be expected in such a case, a mass of oral evidence on both sides, most of which is unsatisfying. Standing out from it is the evidence of the Government records, in which, apparently from 1891, and certainly from 1895 right down to 1922, when the present dispute arose, possession is shown as being with the appellants. It is not disputed that these records come within the terms of section 44 of Act XVII of 1887, and, therefore, that the entries of the appellants' possession must be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved.

In the course of the settlement proceedings of 1894 the old dispute between the two estates was reopened, and the settlement collector ordered all the land except certain plots, which admittedly do not include the Bela in dispute, to be entered as the property and as in the possession of Hund. This order was carried out by the records above referred to. It is clear that the respondent was a party to and fully informed of these proceedings, but he took no steps thereafter to establish his title, though his case even now is that his possession had continued undisturbed after and in despite of the 1875 decree. The Patwari of Hund, who had held office from 1919, and whose duty it was to inspect twice a year every survey number in his circle and to enter, with other particulars, in whose possession they were, was a witness in the case. In addition to vouching the Government records he deposed to having found at his biennial inspections prior to 1922 men from Hund in possession of the Bela. The Trial Judge attached considerable weight to his evidence, supported as it was by the records, and their Lordships think that he was right in so doing, and that the Judicial Commissioner who disagreed with him on this point failed to appreciate its true significance. Entries of possession would be open to the inspection of the respondent, who was not merely an educated man, but a first grade District Judge, and their Lordships find it hard to believe that if he had in fact been in open and continuous possession of the Bela for a number of years, a man of his position and experience would have allowed such entries to pass unchallenged. This would, their Lordships think, be the more remarkable if, as the respondent stated in his application to the District Magistrate in 1922, the appellants and their ancestors had been "incessantly trying to secure possession of the Bela from 1875."

Under these circumstances their Lordships must hold that it would require very clear and definite evidence of possession by the respondent to discharge the onus which is upon him. Their Lordships doubt whether the Judicial Commissioner approached this question in the right way. He seems rather to have thought that where both sides gave evidence of possession it was sufficient for him to be satisfied that the evidence adduced for the respondent was more worthy of credit than that on the other side. He says that "though none of the individual points" upon which the respondent relied "may be very strong, yet the cumulative effect of all of them is sufficient to discharge the initial burden of proof which lay upon the plaintiff," and that "this being so it is for the defendants to show that they have maintained their title and have not been excluded by the plaintiff."

It is impossible for their Lordships to accept this as the true criterion in such a case. The only question can be whether the respondent has established affirmatively his exclusive possession of the Bela for the requisite period of 12 years, and this, in their Lordships' opinion, he has failed to do.

Their Lordships have been taken through all the evidence upon which the respondent's counsel relies, and they have come to the conclusion that taken with the other facts, to which reference has already been made, it falls short of establishing his case. The cutting of trees by the respondent does not go back beyond 1916, and it is at least noteworthy that as soon as felling was planned on any large scale the appellants interfered. The marking of the trees to which one witness deposes is not even referred to by the respondent in his examination, and if it in fact took place may be ascribed to no earlier date. The grazing and carrying away of grass and the cutting of firewood could be little more than sporadic invasions of a conveniently adjacent jungle. The temporary occupation by a fakir with the respondent's permission is of no real significance. The absence from the long tale of witnesses of Shera, who is said to have been employed by the respondent for eight or nine years as his custodian of the Bela, and whose evidence would have been most material, is altogether unexplained. The fact that in 1911 the respondent succeeded in establishing his title by adverse possession to certain cultivated plots on the other side of the river which were within the Hund boundary, is clearly no evidence of his possession of the Bela.

Their Lordships think that the Trial Judge approached his examination of the case from the right point of view, and that he came to a correct conclusion upon the evidence. They think that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside, and that of the District Judge restored, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The respondent must pay the costs before the Judicial Commissioner and here.

theft by persons unconnected with business—If allowable in computing profits.

Held, by the Full Bench, The Chief Justice and Curgenven, J. (Anantakrishna Aiyar, J., dissenting): Loss incurred by the assessee due to theft by persons unconnected with his business cannot be said to be incidental to the business of a money-lender. It cannot, therefore, be deducted in computing his taxable profits.

Cases of embezzlement by employees stand on a different footing.

Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—What should be considered as “stock-in-trade” should be decided with regard to the nature of the business and other circumstances. It is well known that Nattukottai Chetties carry on their business even after the usual banking hours. Monies kept for purposes of their trade after such office hours are monies kept in the usual course of business as part of the stock-in-trade. A loss of such monies by theft is a risk incidental to the money-lending business and should, therefore, be allowed.

This conclusion is supported by the analogy of allowances made in practice, for losses sustained by Railway administrations and other common carriers by way of compensation paid for accidents to passengers, for damages awarded to an employee for wrongful dismissal, for defalcations of employees, and for loss by flood or tempest.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, is as follows:—

In accordance with the High Court’s order I have the honour to refer the following case for the decision of the Honourable the Judges of the High Court under section 66 (3).

2. The facts are as follows:—The petitioners are a registered firm carrying on banking business at Karaikudi, Kayan, Moulmeingyun and Einme in British India and at Kuala Lumpur in Federated Malay States with their headquarters at Karaikudi in the Ramnad District within the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Karaikudi, I Circle.

3. On the night of 21st October, 1926, certain persons broke into the strong-room of a house at Moulmeingyun occupied by the petitioners and by two other firms, and stole cash and currency notes of the value of Rs. 9,335, besides certain jewels not now in question. On 5th August, 1927, four persons were convicted of the said offence by the Special Power Magistrate, Myaungmya. One of these persons had been employed as a cook at the above-mentioned premises, but was not so employed at the time of the offence. This person was convicted in addition under section 328, Indian Penal Code, of administering drugs to the inmates of the house to facilitate the commission of the theft. Adjoining the house were a kitchen and cattle-shed and it may be taken that the house was used partly for the business of the firm and partly as a residence.

4. The petitioners claimed that this sum of Rs. 9,335 should be allowed as expenditure in computing the profits of their Moulmeingyun branch. The claim was disallowed on the ground that the loss was of a capital nature. On application being made to me to state a case to the High Court, it appeared to me that the sum in question had not been lost or expended in the course of the petitioners' business, and that in this state of the facts no question of law could arise.

5. In the above order the High Court has directed me to refer the following question:—

"Whether the loss incurred by theft of money used in the money-lending business and in the business premises should be allowed for in computing the income-tax."

6. The deductions to be allowed in computing the profits of a business are described in Section 10, Sub-section (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922). In my opinion the deduction now claimed is not covered by any one of the provisions of that sub-section. Clauses (i) to (viii) refer to rent, cost of repairs, interest on capital, insurance premium, allowance for depreciation, land revenue and local taxes. The present claim does not come under any of these descriptions. Clause (ix) refers to "any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains." The sum claimed here is not money expended or laid out. It is not expenditure, but an accidental loss. I do not consider that a loss is a kind of expenditure, but even if I am wrong in this it cannot be said that this loss was "incurred solely for the purpose" of earning the profits and gains of the business.

7. In my opinion the loss was not one incurred in the business at all. The petitioners quote the analogy of money lent out and found to be irrecoverable. But the loss of money lent out is, in my opinion, a result of business transactions, whereas the loss now claimed is due to an occurrence which was not part of the business at all and had nothing to do with it. It is also claimed that this loss should be allowed because a loss due to embezzlement by an employee is allowable. The decision reported in *Jagarnath Tharam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa*¹ is quoted in this connection. The ground of that decision is that the loss "springs directly from the necessity of deputing certain duties to an employee," in other words, is one incurred in the course of the business. It seems to follow from this that a loss due to theft committed by persons unconnected with the business is not allowable.

Curgenven, JJ., which I have had the advantage of seeing and I therefore do not propose to state them. The question seems to me to resolve itself into one as to whether the loss sustained by the assessee in this case was one which can be described as incidental to his business. If it was, then he is entitled to have his profits upon which he is liable to pay income-tax reduced by the amount of that loss. It was argued for the assessee (1) that the robbery of the assessee's money was one which was incidental to his business of a money-lender, and (2) that the money stolen was his "stock-in-trade," because it was money which, had it not been stolen, was available to him for the purpose of lending to borrowers and making a profit thereby. There is no evidence in this case that this sum was "stock-in-trade" at all and the money would seem to me to be capital plus the profits collected by the assessee. If this money was capital, then the assessee would not be entitled to a deduction on account of its loss. So far as the money stolen was the profit of the assessee, unless it can be shown that its loss was incidental to the business he carried on, he cannot claim a deduction in respect of it. If any one is paid a sum due to him as profits and he puts that in his pocket and on his way home is robbed of it, it would be, I think, difficult to contend that such a loss was incidental to his business. Still more so when he has reached his home and put those profits in a strong room or some other place regarded by him to be a place of safety. I can well understand that in cases where the collection of profits or payment of debts due is entrusted to a gumastah or servant for collection and that person runs away with the money or otherwise improperly deals with it, the assessee should be allowed a deduction because such a loss as that would be incidental to his business. He has to employ servants for the purpose of collecting sums of money due to him and there is the risk that such servant may prove to be dishonest and instead of paying the profits over to him convert them to his own use. But I cannot distinguish the present case from the case of any professional man or trader who, having collected his profits, is subsequently robbed of them by a stranger to his business. In this case none of the thieves were the then servants of the assessee although one of them had formerly been his cook. This is no doubt a very hard case and, whilst I have every sympathy with the assessee, I am unable to answer the question except in the negative. The question referred to us is rather too general but upon the facts of this case which, in my opinion, are not at all adequately set out, that must be my answer.

The result is that the answer of this Full Bench is in the negative and the assessee is directed to pay the costs of the Income-tax Commissioner which we fix at Rs. 250.

Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—I have the misfortune in this case to differ from the opinion of my Lord the learned Chief Justice, and of my learned brother Curgenvén, J.

The question referred for our decision under section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act is "Whether the loss incurred by theft of money used in the money-lending business, and in the business premises should be allowed for in computing the income-tax."

The question raised is one of very great importance, and the case is one of first impression, no case directly deciding the point having been brought to our attention.

One should have liked that more facts were available; the facts, as they appear in the records before us, are the following:—

The petitioners are a registered firm of Nattukottai Chetties carrying on money-lending business at Karaikudi and other places in British India, and at Kuala Lumpur in Federated Malay States, the headquarters being at Karaikudi in the Ramnad District. On the night of the 21st October, 1926, certain persons broke into the strong room of the house at Moulmein-gyun (Burma) occupied by the petitioners and by two other firms, and stole cash and currency notes of the value of Rs. 9,335 besides certain jewels which had been pledged with the firm, as security, by certain customers. On 5th August, 1927, four persons were convicted of the said offence by the Magistrate. One of these persons had been employed as a cook at the above-mentioned premises. Though he was not so employed at the time of the offence, he was convicted, in addition, under section 328, Indian Penal Code, of administering drugs to the inmates of the house to facilitate the commission of the theft. The Commissioner of Income-tax stated that he had since the decision of the Income-tax Officer ascertained that the loss of the cash and the jewels was genuine. He, however, was of opinion that there was no provision of law under which the assessee would be entitled to deduction claimed in respect of the cash and currency notes, that the loss could neither be said to be a business loss nor expenditure incurred for earning profits; and that the loss in question is loss of capital. The decision in Jagannath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and *Orissa*¹ was distinguished on the ground that the loss in the present case could not be said to have been incurred in the business at all, and that such a loss could not be said to have been incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits and gains of the business. He, therefore, held that the loss due to theft committed by persons unconnected with the business is not allowable as a deduction.

The learned Counsel who appeared in support of the assessment argued that the allowance now claimed could not be brought under any one of the clauses of section 10 of the Act, which, he argued, exhausted the headings under which allowances could be claimed by assessees. I am unable to accede to that contention. Section 10, no doubt, directs that the allowances mentioned in the section should be made in favour of the assessee; but in my view it does not necessarily follow that the assessee is not entitled to the allowance now in question simply because it is not specifically mentioned in section 10. Under clause 1 of section 10, tax is payable only in respect of the profits or gains of any business carried on by the assessee. The Court has to find out what the profits or gains of the business amounted to. In the absence of any specific provisions in the Act, the profits or gains of a business have to be ascertained by the ordinary commercial methods. If the argument advanced on behalf of the Crown be accepted, it would follow that no allowance could be claimed for instance for bad debts actually written off during the year, since there is no specific provision in section 10 for allowing such deduction. But it could not be, and in fact was not, contended that allowance should not be made for such bad debts. The practice of making allowance for such bad debts has become firmly established. As the Court has to find out the amount of profits or gains of the business during the period, the question arises whether the loss by theft in question should be deducted when the profits are ascertained.

As pointed out in Konstam's book,

"The net profits of the trade or business should be computed by reasonable business methods, subject to any specific directions contained in the Income-tax Act."

Lord Herschell observed in *Russell v. Town and County Bank*² as follows:

"The profit of a trade or business is the surplus by which the receipts from the trade or business exceed the expenditure necessary for the purpose of earning those receipts. . . . Unless and until you have ascertained that there is such a balance, nothing exists to which the name 'profits' can properly be applied."

1. (1925) 2 I.T.C. 4.

2. (1888) 13 A.C. 418 at 424.

Similar observations were made by Lord Parker in *Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce*²:

"Where a deduction is proper and necessary to be made in order to ascertain the balance of profits and gains, it ought to be allowed. . . provided there is no prohibition against such an allowance."

It was argued for the assessee that the allowance claimed would come under section 10 (2) (ix):

"Any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains."

It was also argued that in the case of money-lending business of Nattukottai Chetties, the loss in question must be taken to be loss of stock-in-trade. On the other side, it was argued for the Crown that the loss in question could not be said to be an expenditure incurred, much less, solely, for the purpose of earning such profits or gains, and that in any event it should be taken to be expenditure in the nature of "capital" expenditure. It was also argued that the monies in question could not be said to be "stock-in-trade" in the ordinary sense of the expression. Having regard to the way in which such people carry on their money-lending business, it would seem to be essential for the successful carrying on of their business to have cash with them even after "the usual banking hours". They carry on their business operations, as is well known, even after the offices of the European Banks are closed for business for the day. Keeping monies with them for purposes of their trade after such office hours could not, therefore, in my view, be said to be anything else than keeping monies in the usual course of their business. The profits made by them by doing business after the usual office banking hours are surely liable to income-tax. The finding, as I understand it, is that in the usual course of business the remaining cash, etc., on hand and the jewels received on pledge from the customers were kept in the "strong room" of the business premises, and that thieves broke into the strong room and stole the cash and currency notes and the jewels. The fact of theft having been found, I think that the loss in question should be taken to be a loss connected with or arising out of the money-lending trade or business of the assessees. With reference to the jewels thus lost, the Income-tax authorities have, and, in my opinion, rightly, made allowance; but I think that allowance should be made also for the cash and currency notes amounting to Rs. 9,335

thus lost. I am unable to agree with the contention of the Crown that the loss in question, should, if at all, be taken to be loss of "capital". It is true, as pointed out on behalf of the assessee, that the profits of the Moulmeingyun business for the period in question was computed by the Income-tax authorities to be over Rs. 20,000. But that circumstance by itself is no ground for holding that the item in question should be taken as loss of profits, and not loss of capital. Whether a particular item is really capital expenditure or not has to be decided having regard to various considerations. Of course it is well established that when once profits have been earned during the period, it does not matter how the same is dealt with subsequently.

I am inclined to the view that in the case before us, the cash and currency notes, etc., lost, should be taken to be "stock-in-trade" of the assessee's business. What should be considered as stock-in-trade of a business should be decided after having regard to the nature of the particular business, its requirements, and other circumstances essentially connected with the successful carrying out of the particular business.

In *Punjab National Bank v. Commissioner of Income-tax*³ the question was raised whether allowance should be made for depreciation in the case of certain Government securities held by a firm. The answer would depend on the question whether those securities were held by the firm (Bank) with the object of dealing with them from day to day in the ordinary course of its business including that of buying and selling Government securities in the usual course, or whether such Government securities were purchased by the firm (Bank) with the object of constituting the same as a sort of reserve in lieu of cash. In the case of the former, allowance should be made for depreciation (the reason being that the Government securities should, in such a case, be treated as "stock-in-trade" of the Bank); but not in the case of the latter.

In the case of money-lending business such as the one before us, I think that the reasonable view to take as regards stock-in-trade is the one indicated by me before.

The decision in *Jagannath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa*¹, so far as it goes, also supports this view. There, some money was entrusted to a gumastha of a firm in the usual course of business with instructions to pay the same to a creditor of the firm. The gumastha embezzled the monies. He was criminally prosecuted, but was acquitted, his defence being that he was robbed of the money. The case in *Jagarnath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa*¹, however, was comparatively a plainer case than the one before us, and the Court, if one may say so with respect, very properly held that the loss was connected with and arose out of the business, and was not prima facie a loss in the nature of capital expenditure.

1. (1925) 2 I.T.C. 4.

3. (1926) I.L.R. 7 L. 227; 2 I.T.C. 184.

On behalf of the assessee, the decision of Rowlatt, J., in *Curtis v. J. & Y. Oldfield, Ltd.*⁴, was referred to before us. At page 330 the learned Judge observed as follows:—

"I quite think, with Mr. Latter, that if you have a business, in the course of which you have to employ subordinates, and owing to the negligence or the dishonesty of the subordinates, some of the receipts of the business do not find their way into the till, or some of the bills are not collected at all, or something of that sort, that may be an expense connected with and arising out of the trade in the most complete sense of the word."

Stress was laid on the words "something of that sort" occurring in that judgment. But the words are too wide and one cannot be certain that the learned Judge had a case like the present in his view. Too much importance should not, I think, be attached to the above observation in the circumstances. It was argued on behalf of the Crown that theft should not be taken to be anything connected with or arising out of the assessee's money-lending business. In my view that is stating the position rather too broadly. In the case of Railway Administrations and other common carriers, the practice seems to be to make allowance for losses sustained by them in compensating passengers for accidents in travelling over the railway, etc. That the practice is to make such allowance in favour of common carriers is taken for granted in the judgment of Lord Loreburn, L.C., in Strong and Company, Ltd. v. Woodfield.⁵ At page 452 the Lord Chancellor observed as follows:—

"In my opinion, however, it does not follow that if a loss is in any sense connected with the trade, it must always be allowed as a deduction; for it may be only remotely connected with the trade, or it may be connected with something else quite as much as or even more than with the trade. I think only such losses can be deducted as are connected with in the sense that they are really incidental to the trade itself. They cannot be deducted if they are mainly incidental to some other vocation or fall on the trader in some character other than that of trader. The nature of the trade is to be considered. To give an illustration, losses sustained by a railway company in compensating passengers for accidents in travelling might be deducted.”

If losses sustained by a railway company in compensating passengers for accidents in travelling over its line could be deducted, it would seem to follow that losses similarly sustained by a railway company in compensating owners and consignees of goods entrusted to them for carriage, but which were lost during transit by theft, could also be deducted in proper cases. That could seem to resemble the present case, and the observations by the Lord Chancellor, I think prima facie, support the contention of the assessee before us.

No doubt the further observations made by the Lord Chancellor should also be kept in view. It was remarked later on at page 452:

“Many cases might be put near the line, and no degree of ingenuity can frame a formula so precise and comprehensive as to solve at sight all the cases that may arise.”

The loss must be something in the nature of a commercial loss. Whether a particular loss is of that nature or not would have to be decided with reference to all the circumstances of a case. In *Royal Insurance Co. v. Watson*⁶ Lord Shand expressed the opinion that damages awarded to an employee for wrongful dismissal would be allowable as a deduction. Damages for libel against a newspaper proprietor would appear to be loss in the ordinary course of business of proprietors of newspapers. See Pratt and Redman's Income-tax Law, 10th Edition, page 112.

To the argument urged on behalf of the Crown that it is no part of the assessee's business to deal with thefts, the following observations of Lord Buckmaster in *Gliksten & Son, Ltd. v. Green*⁷ may be referred to. There, the question was whether the amount received by a firm of timber merchants from fire insurance companies in respect of stock of timber destroyed by fire could be assessed to income-tax. At page 384 Lord Buckmaster observed as follows:—

“If this results in a gain, as it has done, it appears to me to be an ordinary gain—a gain which has taken place in the course of their trade—none the less because, as Mr. Macmillan put it, and as I think Sir John Simon before him appears to have put it, it is no part of a timber merchant's business to trade in fires.”

If, in the present case the stock-in-trade of the assessee before us including balance on hand each day and the jewels, etc., received on pledge from customers, had been insured at a particular figure against fire or theft, and the amount was accordingly received from the insurers on the occurrence of fire or theft, then the amount so received would, according to the decision in *Gliksten & Son, Ltd. v. Green*⁷ be prima facie taxable. The premia paid in respect of such insurance is allowed to the assessee [see S. 10 (2) (iv)], and in return, the amount received by the assessee from the insurers would seem liable to be assessed to income-tax. If no insurance had been effected by the assessee, no premium is paid and no allowance is made on account of premium; and in case of loss, the assessee receives no amount from insurers, and therefore no such amount could be included in the assessment. The reasoning would seem to lead to the conclusion that the loss even if uninsured should be deducted, as I have come to the conclusion that the loss is connected with the business and is really incidental to the trade itself, having regard to the nature of the trade or business of the assessee.

6. (1896-7) A.C. 1.

7. (1929) A.C. 381; 14 T.C. 365.

Turning to the English Text-Books on Income-tax Law. I find the following statements in Sanders' Income-tax, 3rd, edition. At page 310 it is stated that "a deduction is allowed in respect of employees' theft." At page 196, it is stated, that "loss from embezzlement is deductible." Similarly at page 163, "deduction is allowed in practice for the loss arising from defalcations of employees." At page 203, there are two passages which are rather important: "a deduction is permitted in practice for fire insurance premiums"; also, "loss of stock through fire is deductible in so far as it is not recovered by insurance, but loss of building does not form an admissible deduction." I also note that, "loss by flood or tempest" is allowed in case of assessments under Sch. A. The above statements, so far as they go, would seem to lend support to the assessee's contention in the present case.

Each case has to be decided with reference to the facts and circumstances relating thereto, and having regard to the nature and methods of trade or business in question. Having regard to the circumstances of the present case, and the findings of fact arrived at by the Income-tax Commissioner, I think that the assessee is entitled to the deduction of Rs. 9,335 claimed by them, and I would answer the question in the affirmative.

Curgenven, J.—The question which the Commissioner refers is:

"Whether the loss incurred by theft of money used in the money-lending business and in the business premises should be allowed for in computing the income-tax."

The Commissioner rightly observes that a loss of this character is not included within any of the deductions permissible under section 10 (2) of the Act. But that does not conclude the matter, because section 10 provides for the taxation of the profits of a business, and we have therefore to consider whether, in computing profits, the amount of such a loss may be deducted from them. It is settled, for instance, that a bad debt incurred by a money-lender may be so deducted, on the ground that it is a loss incidental to his business, so that it is fair, in assessing his net profits, to take account of losses as well as gains. Such a loss, it appears to me, must satisfy two conditions: (1) it must be a loss of part of the stock-in-trade of the business, and (2) it must be a loss of such a kind as is incidental to the business.

As regards (1), the question describes the money lost as "money used in the money-lending business," and taking this to mean money actually in use in the carrying on of the business, I feel no difficulty in holding that it was part of the money-lender's stock-in-trade. It may have included profits earned in previous transactions, but if those profits were themselves to be applied to the business, and were kept in hand for that purpose, they would not, I think, be any the less part of the stock-in-trade.

Requirement No. (2) presents greater difficulties, because I think it is clear that not all kinds of losses of stock-in-trade can be said to be incidental to the business. A loss, to be incidental, must be such as in the ordinary course, and having due regard to the peculiar risks attendant upon the conduct of the business, is likely from time to time to occur. Cases of embezzlement by subordinates, such as formed the subject of *Jagarnath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa*¹ would be losses of this nature, because the employment of clerks and servants is unavoidable, and the employer is likely, sooner or later, to be the victim of their dishonesty or negligence. That such a loss might be classed as a form of expense arising out of trade was recognised in *Curtis v. J. & Y. Oldfield, Ltd.*⁴ although in the particular circumstances of that case, as I read it, the money lost no longer formed part of the stock-in-trade. The test whether the loss was, in the language of the English rule, "connected with or arising out of trade," was applied in two other English cases, *Strong & Co., Ltd. v. Woodfield*⁵ and

*Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Warnes & Co.*⁸ The former related to damages claimed from an inn-keeper in respect of injuries caused to a customer by the falling of a chimney; the latter to a penalty incurred by a trading firm for negligently failing to observe certain conditions imposed during War-time on the export of goods to neutral countries. The loss was held, in the language of the English rule, to be a loss "not connected with or arising out of trade." These cases do not help us further than to show what manner of test should be applied. Now in the present case it may be conceded that a money-lender's business requires that he should keep a considerable sum in cash on his premises. Even if a bank is accessible to him, it would unduly restrict his activities to transact his affairs only within banking hours. The practice is certainly otherwise, and it is only fair to have regard to custom in deciding what the exigencies of a business require. That means that cash must be kept in a safe or strong room. The receptacle in the present case is described as a strong room and the question resolves itself into whether theft from a strong room may form the foundation of a claim to remission of tax. I exclude cases of theft by a clerk or servant employed in the business and having access to the strong room, because that is not in question here and special considerations might apply. In general, I am not prepared to say that theft by some external operator, with or without the complicity of domestic servants, ought to be recognised as the basis of a claim. To recognise it we must, I think, find not only that the cash had to be kept on the premises, but that its loss by theft was a circumstance which was so far probable as to be an occurrence incidental to, if not inseparable from, the manner in which it had to be kept. In my experience, the abstraction of money by theft from properly constructed safes or strong rooms is not within the competence of the ordinary thief or house-breaker, and we have not yet in this country to reckon with gangs of safe-breakers, such as may be found elsewhere. Perhaps the circumstance that no decision upon a case of this nature is to be found suggests the infrequency of such claims. The only test to apply, in order to see whether a loss of this kind is one incidental to the business, is, I think, the comparative likelihood of its occurrence, the requirements of the business being what they are. For example, injury to life and limb, and probably theft too, must occur sooner or later in the running of a railway. Bad debts and embezzlement have already been adverted to. Very likely the theft of stock-in-trade which have to be kept exposed to the public would fall into the same category. But I doubt whether cash kept in a safe should, if it should happen to be stolen, be allowed for.

We have not been furnished with any adequate narration of the facts of the present case, so that the question has had to be answered, as indeed it is put, in general terms. So considering it, I agree with my Lord in returning a reply in the negative.

Privy Council Appeal—Right of—Legislative Body—Election to membership of—Validity of—Decision as to—Appeal from—Malta Court of Appeal—Decision of—Malta Letters Patent, S. 33—Effect.

S. 33 of the Letters Patent of Malta provides: "All questions which may arise as to the right of any person to be or remain a member of the Senate or the Legislative Assembly shall be referred to and decided by Our Court of Appeal in Malta."

Held, on a construction of the section, that no appeal lay to the Privy Council from the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Malta deciding against the validity of the election of two of the appellants to be members of the Senate of Malta.

Appeal No. 64 of 1929 by special leave from a judgment of the Court of Appeal of Malta, dated 14th August, 1928.

H. P. Macmillan, K.C., Prof. A. B. Keith and Davies for appellants.

LORD BLANESBURGH.—This appeal is concerned with the validity of the election in July, 1928, of two of the appellants, Messrs. Mifsud and Borg, to be members of the Senate of Malta, representatives there of the Trade Union Council of the Islands. The Court of Appeal in Malta, by a judgment of August 14, 1928, has declared their election to be null and void and this is an appeal from that judgment.

A preliminary question of serious importance at once arises: viz., whether His Majesty can be advised further to entertain the appeal, and their Lordships, in the first instance at all events, must direct their minds to the consideration of that question to the exclusion of every other.

Although special leave to appeal had been granted by His Majesty in Council, it was recognised that it was not thereby intended that the Board, with all the facts before it, should be precluded from reconsidering whether the appeal was competent, and counsel on both sides before their Lordships agreed that that problem could only be satisfactorily solved after the Board had become seized of the history and nature of the controversy out of which it emerged. The arguments accordingly proceeded on that footing to their conclusion. Their Lordships will follow the same course, and before specifically dealing with this preliminary issue, will, without canvassing in detail the legal and constitutional questions discussed before them, give some account of the circumstances which have led up to the present situation.

Responsible self-government for Malta in internal affairs was in 1921 granted by His Majesty through the Malta Constitution Letters Patent, 1921. The Maltese Legislature thereby brought into existence consists of two Houses—the Senate and the Legislative Assembly. The Senate is a House of seventeen—seven general members and ten special members. Of these special members, two, nominated by the Archbishop of Malta, represent the clergy; two, the nobility; two, the graduates; two, the Chamber of Commerce, and two—and it is with these that this case is concerned—the Trade Union Council, a body so described in the Letters Patent. The method of electing the representatives of the nobility, the graduates, the Chamber of Commerce and the Trade Union Council, the registration of voters in and for any such classes and the conduct of such elections, are all matters under Art. 5 (3) of the Letters Patent, to be governed by such rules as may from time to time be determined by the nobility, the graduates, the Chamber of Commerce and the Trade Union Council respectively. It is apparently left to each of these orders to resolve how it shall be constituted for electoral purposes and particularly whether every member, say, of the Trade Union Council, must himself be a member of a constituent Trade Union. Art. 6 (1), however, in effect provides that no person may be elected as a special member of the Senate who is not himself qualified to vote at the election.

It was apparently assumed that at the date of the Letters Patent there was in Malta a Trade Union Council as definite in its constitution as the Chamber of Commerce. But in fact no such Council existed, and it became necessary in order to overcome the difficulty thus ensuing for the Governor to utilize the power conferred upon him by Art. 67 of the Letters Patent by which he is enabled to make to the Letters Patent within one year from their commencement, such additions as might be necessary in order to carry out their purposes.

Accordingly His Excellency with the previous consent of the Secretary of State by Proclamation, dated the 15th September, 1921, declared that the term "Trade Union Council" wherever used in Arts. 5-7 inclusive, of the Letters Patent, should mean a council or other body recognised by the Governor as representing the Trade Union Council of Malta for the purposes of the Letters Patent.

In pursuance of the powers so vested in him a Trade Union Council was recognised by the Governor on the 16th September, 1921, and that Council elected two representatives to the Senate. In 1924 these representatives resigned their seats, which, on September 30, 1926, were still vacant.

On that day a Government Notice was issued, No. 308 of 1926, making regulations for the purpose of constituting a Trade Union Council of Malta. These regulations provided for the appointment of a Registrar who was to compile a register of Trade Unions and each Trade Union so registered was to elect representatives to the Trade Union Council—one representative for every hundred of its members. The Governor was empowered to recognise the persons elected by the registered Trade Unions as the Malta Trade Union Council for the purposes of the Letters Patent and the persons thus recognised were to elect a president and a returning officer. By Article 14 it was provided that the Governor, on being apprised of the election of these officials, should immediately issue a writ to the Returning Officer commanding him to hold an election of two members to represent the Trade Union Council in the Senate. The Council recognised under these regulations was by Article 16 to remain in existence until the 31st December, 1928, and subsequent elections were to be held in the December of 1928, and of each subsequent year. The Government Notice of 16th September, 1921, was thereby cancelled.

These regulations were, it appears, impugned by the President, the Secretary and the Returning Officer of the Trade Union Council as recognised in 1921, and an action was instituted by them to obtain a declaration of their invalidity. But it was brought before any election had taken place under the regulations, and for that reason it was held to be premature and it failed.

No further obstacle being put in the way of the regulations they were acted upon, and by Government Notice No. 93 of the 11th March, 1927, which is the basis of the case laid before their Lordships by the respondents, and now by the appellants as well, the body of persons in the Schedule termed the "Trade Union Council," whose names are there set out were recognised by His Excellency the officer administering the Government as representing the Trade Unions of Malta for the purposes of the Letters Patent. The Trade Union Council so recognised consisted of 24 members representing eight Unions. Of them, nine members represented the Unione Cattolica San Giuseppe, the appellant, Mr. Mifsud, being one of these, and amongst the seven other Unions represented were the Imperial Government Workers' Benefit Society and the Societa dei Piloti.

Thereafter on the 11th May, 1927, rules made by the Council so recognised for conducting the election of its two special members for the Senate were published in the Government Gazette, an election was held, and by a Government Notice of the 17th June, 1927, Mr. Walter Agius and the appellant Mr. Michel Angelo Borg were declared to have been duly elected members of the Senate.

Three days later, however, on the 20th June, 1927, the Senate and Legislative Assembly were dissolved by Proclamation and between June 25 and August 2, writs to the electing bodies to the Senate other than the Trade Union Council were issued. In reference to this Council, all the representatives thereon of the Unione Cattolica San Giuseppe (which will now be referred to as the Unione), except the appellant, Mr. Mifsud, had on the 22nd May, 1927, resigned from the Council; a note to their resignations signed by Mr. Mifsud stating that as he conscientiously felt that his conduct in the Council was absolutely correct, he found it impossible to resign unless he was asked to do so by those who sent him as their delegate in a general meeting legally convened. At a general meeting held on the 27th June, 1927—but which Mr. Mifsud says was both irregularly convened and held—the members present by resolution purported to expel him from the Unione and struck his name off the Unione's representatives on the Council. On the 1st July, 1927, Mr. Mifsud wrote to the Governor setting forth his position in the matter and on the 8th July, 1927, he brought an action in the First Hall of the Civil Court against the President of the Unione impugning his expulsion. That action has never been brought to a hearing and is still pending.

Following upon the resolution of the 27th June, 1927, the Unione treated their entire representation on the Trade Union Council as vacant and on the 29th, 30th, and 31st July, 1927, they held a ballot for the election of their nine representatives. On the 1st August, 1927, the result of the ballot was intimated to the Minister of Justice, and by him as Head of the Ministry to the Governor: and by Government Notice No. 303 of 9th August, 1927, the nine persons so elected were recognised by His Excellency for the purposes of the Letters Patent, as the representatives on the Trade Union Council of the "Unione" in substitution for the delegates whose names had appeared in Government Notice No. 93 of the 11th March, 1927.

The appellant, Mr. Mifsud, was not one of those elected. He did not stand as a candidate—not perhaps unnaturally—although it would appear that under the regulations of September 30, 1926, his expulsion from the Unione, even if valid, would not technically have been a bar to his election. Their Lordships, however, have been more struck by another feature of this election. It is said that members of both political parties stood as candidates, and their Lordships have found nowhere in the voluminous record any suggestion that the election was, as an election, in any way irregular or that the gentlemen elected did not accurately and adequately reflect in their own opinions, the then views of the members of the Unione.

•On the same day, but, as the Court of Appeal must be taken to have found, after that recognition by the Governor of the new representatives of the Unione had been published, the writ for the election of its two special members in the new Senate was issued to the Returning Officer of the Trade Union Council. The date originally fixed for the election was the 16th August, 1927. At the request of the Council this date was subsequently extended to the 25th August, 1927. On the 14th August, 1927, however, as the results of the General Election proceeding in the other Constituencies were showing that in the new Legislative Assembly, the then Ministry would be in a minority, Sir Ugo Mifsud, its head, tendered his resignation to the Governor. This was accepted, and on the same day the appellant, Lord Strickland, was entrusted by the Governor with the duty of forming a new administration, a task which was completed on the 16th August, 1927.

Thereafter, on the same day, on the advice of his new Ministers, the Governor in Council, by Government Notice No. 323, revoked the regulations of September 30, 1926, and annulled all that had been done by virtue of the same. Four days later, by Government Notice No. 335, His Excellency recognised a new Trade Union Council, excluding therefrom representatives of the Unione, the Imperial Government Workers' Benefit Society and the Societa dei Piloti—and adding delegates of the National Farmers' Union, the National Union of Seamen and the Union of Dockyard Employees. The election writ of the 9th August, 1927, was withdrawn, and on September 2, 1927, a new writ was issued for the election by the Trades Union Council, as now recognised, of its two representatives on the Senate. In the result, by Notice No. 370 of the 19th September, 1927, it was announced that Colonel Savona and the appellant, Mr. Borg, had been returned without opposition as these representatives.

This election was at once impugned by the respondents other than Mr. Grima and in an action for the purpose was by judgment of the Court of Appeal, dated December 5, 1927, declared null and void. The Court of Appeal, in giving its reasons therefor, expressed the view that the issue of the writ by the Governor and the fixing of the dates for the different stages of the election procedure must be held to constitute the commencement of the election: that once a Trade Union Council had been recognised by the Governor for the purposes of a given election, he could not recognise another Council if that election had commenced but had not been concluded, and that the only body competent to elect its two representatives for the two seats rendered vacant by the dissolution of Parliament was the Trade Union Council recognised by the Governor under the Government Notices Nos. 93 and 303 of 1927.

Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council having been refused by the Court of Appeal, and on the 17th May, 1928, by His Majesty in Council, that judgment is now final and binding.

The appellant, Lord Strickland, as head of the Ministry, and his colleagues thereupon came to the conclusion, and, as they suggest, rightly, that their proper course, as that most in accordance with the principle in the Court of Appeal's judgment, was to cause the election of the two senators representing the Trade Union Council to be held by that Council as recognised at the time of the dissolution of Parliament on the 20th June, 1927, i.e., by the persons whose names were scheduled to Government Notice No. 93 of the 11th March, 1927, and by them only. Accordingly, Government Notices Nos. 163 and 168, of the 19th and 21st June, 1928, were issued to the delegates whose names were so scheduled, directing them to choose a Returning Officer to whom a fresh writ might be issued for the election of the representatives of the Trade Union Council in the Senate; and ultimately a writ for the election of these two representatives was, on the 25th June, 1928, issued to the Returning Officer who had been so chosen. The election took place, and resulted as published on the 6th July, 1928, in the appellants, Mr. Mifsud and Mr. Borg, being declared to have been returned uncontested. This is the election now impugned, and it is convenient to note before going further that at the first of the two elections advised by the new Government, both the appellant, Mr. Mifsud, as its representative, and the Unione were disfranchised altogether; while at the second Mr. Mifsud, although not amongst those chosen on the 9th August, 1927, was the sole effective representative of the Unione, the other eight representatives named in Notice No. 93 having disappeared, as above appears, by resignation.
